Vandalism Costly to Students

By JERRY ARTH
and CHARLES MOLINEAUX

From data gathered from Villanova's Maintenance Department and Office of Resident Living the Villanovan calculates that the University overcharged resident students for vandalism damage by at least $20,000 for the 1980-81 academic year.

According to records supplied to the Villanovan by Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, total vandalism for 1980-81 amounted to $116,910.45. This figure is supposed to include individual room damage, damage to "common areas" of dormitories, and "unrecoverable" damages to all other areas of the campus.

Trucks said that this unrecoverable damage amounted to "at least $35,000" of the total damage; yet, resident students were assessed over $102,000 in common area charges alone in bills sent out from Villanova over the summer.

Even though Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., dean of students, would not disclose the total figure for common area damages, the Villanovan calculated it by totaling the various common area charges for the different dormitories.

Martin, Director of Resident Living Christopher Janosik, the Maintenance Department, and the Business Office were each unable to supply an amount for individual room damage. But even without this, the $137,000 figure, based on adding the assessment for the common area damage and the figure for unrecoverable damages supplied by Trucks, exceeds the total cost of vandalism for last year.

Though Janosik said that he could not explain the apparent $20,000 discrepancy, he said, "I am confident that there has not been an over-billing" of Villanova resident students.

The bills, ranging from a low of $2.58 per student for Good Counsel residents to a high of $106.98 for each resident of the second floor, east wing of Sullivan Hall, were supposed to be levied in accordance with damages sustained by the common areas of the dormitories. Common areas include hallways, restrooms, lounges, and stairwells. To these bills were added any additional individual room damage charges determined by a tour of all rooms conducted jointly by the Maintenance Department and the Office of Resident Living at the end of the academic year.

The damages for which resident students were charged were caused by vandalism, not normal wear and tear, according to both Martin and Trucks.

Billing resident students for damage to common areas is not a new practice at Villanova. However, a recently adopted system of damage assessment has been instituted this past year which, according to Martin and Janosik, is intended to allow for a more precise inventory of damages due to vandalism.

Prior to last year, assessments were based upon rough estimates made by former Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin and former Dean of Women Rebecca Drury. Under the new system, evaluation of damages and costs is carried out in two phases.

In the first, the Maintenance Department prepares monthly reports of all repairs necessitated by vandalism. In the second phase, representatives of Maintenance and the Office of Resident Living conduct an investigation into dormitory damage at the end of the academic year, recording any damage not previously noted by Maintenance.

These two reports are then combined, and each resident is then charged for the damage done to his own room, and the cost of common area vandalism is divided equally among all resident students in a particular area, said Martin and Janosik.

In most cases, the "area" is defined as the entire dormitory. However, in the cases of Stanford and Sullivan Halls, where a major portion of the vandalism occurred last year, the area was broken down into the separate wings of the two dormitories.

Representative Common Area Charges (Per Person)
Sullivan Hall (2nd Floor East)	$106.91
Sullivan Hall (3rd Floor West)	100.56
Stanford Hall (4E Wing)	90.55
Stanford Hall (2D Wing)	85.94
St. Mary's Hall	39.12
Corr Hall	30.99
Austin Hall	10.01
Alumni Hall	6.51
Good Counsel Hall	2.58

Contract Lapse Prompts Suit

By SHARON WINTERS

Broadcast Music Incorporated (BMI), filed suit against Villanova University in U.S. District Court on August 13. BMI contends that the University used 29 songs without permission.

BMI is a nonprofit organization that collects and pays royalties, said Marv Berenson of BMI's legal department in New York. The writer of a song has certain rights protected by the copyright laws, and these rights translate into dollars, according to Berenson. "Everytime a song is performed, the performer must get permission from the owner," he explained.

Villanova has had contracts for years with music publishers, according to Raymond Cullen, attorney from Morgan, Lewis and Bockius, representing the University. Cullen explained that the agreements with the music companies changed and anti-trust suits were filed. Villanova, not a party in the suits, waited to see the results of these cases, he said. "Inadvertently, there was a lapse of a couple of months (between contracts) and they (BMI) filed a complaint," Cullen explained.

"This is not something where we write one letter and then sue," said Berenson. Villanova was contacted over a period of years by BMI, he added. "The University never had a contract to my knowledge," he said.

The copyright laws are simple and straighforward, according to Berenson. "I don't see what defense that the University has," Berenson said. "The University used the music and didn't get permission," he added.

The American Council on Education thought that nonprofit organizations might not have to pay for permission to use musical compositions under the copyright laws, recounted Eugene Ruane, director of public relations at Villanova. The Council did not rule on the matter so individual colleges were left to act on their own in this matter, he said.

For years the copyright laws specified that a performance had to be for profit, said Berenson. This exempted educational facilities and private clubs, he continued. "A writer was forced to make a donation of his work to a nonprofit organization," Berenson claimed.

The working in the copyright laws was changed. A new version of the law was passed and became effective on Jan. 1, 1978. According to the revised statute a musical performance would have to be "without any purpose of direct or indirect commercial advantage."

A university should pay for the things that it uses, according to Berenson. If a professor writes a book for his course, he is paid royalties, Berneson said. "He isn't forced to donate it," he continued. Berenson feels that a songwriter has the same right not to "donate" his work.

Berenson noted that copyright infringement carries substantial damages. The penalty is a minimum of $250 for each count plus attorney and legal fees, he said. The fine goes up to a maximum of $1,000 per infringement, he added.

The suit was filed August 13; the University has 20 days to respond, Ruane noted.

In 1979, BMI filed suit against Harvard University for copyright infringement. Harvard signed a four-year contract with the royalty firm.

Trustees Vote Reaffirms Cancellation Of Football

By BOB HERMAN

The Villanova University Board of Trustees in a specially called meeting on July 14 reaffirmed its earlier decision to discontinue the Villanova football program.

Announcing that the vote was 20-1, Father President John Driscoll read a statement saying "the Board of Trustees of Villanova University, with 21 members present, having carefully considered the response to the action of April 14, 1981, relative to the discontinuance of football, hereby reaffirms the action taken at that time."

In a statement issued on April 14, Driscoll stated that football was being dropped from the athletic program because Villanova was "intensifying its rededication to its academic mission."

Driscoll refused to comment on the amount of money lost by the football program, but a special committee of the Board of Trustees found that in 1972 the football program was losing approximately $300,000.

After the second vote, Driscoll felt that the Board's position was definite. "I do not see any possibility for a reversal of opinion — at least not in the foreseeable future. The action has been taken and the issue is closed," said Driscoll.

There are still many who insist that the issue is not closed. The Committee to Restore Division 1-A football to Villanova held a large fund raising meeting at the Covered Wagon Inn on May 7. The meeting reportedly raised over $140,000, and there were other pledges to keep the program running. There was also some speculation that comedian Bob Hope offered to give a fund raising performance on December 3 with the proceeds benefiting Villanova football.

Mike Donaher, a former assistant football coach at Villanova and a member of the Committee to Restore Football stated, "We've sent out 25,000 pieces of mail and we haven't attacked the general-giving fund yet, but we could. Father Driscoll might think that now that they have officially killed football, he'll get that $140,000. But everyone who has donated has been told that their money will be totally refunded if it isn't used for football."

In response to the action taken by the Board of Trustees, Doug Murray, president-elect of the alumni association said, "We're obviously disappointed with the Board of Trustees continuing to isolate themselves from the student body and the alumni of the university. We found it curious that the board felt the need to reaffirm its vote of April 14."

When Driscoll was asked about how he viewed the Committee to Restore Division I-A football he said, "We look upon the Committee to Restore football as containing some of our most devoted alumni. We feel their involvement in this committee is an expression of their love and devotion to Villanova and we anticipate that their loyalty will continue."

Commenting about the future of the Committee to Restore Division I-A football and the future of a new football program Murray said, "The trustees must understand that a university is not buildings, trees and cafeterias, but it is a state of mind and a feeling toward an ideal, so the continuing campaign to restore football at Villanova will go forward."

In a letter sent out by Murray in May, the Committee said "It is the opinion of many alumni and friends of Villanova that this is an ill-advised and intemperate decision . . . Perhaps rather than questioning the value of intercollegiate football we should question the ability and management skills that find it necessary to start dismembering our University."

Father President Driscoll announces the original decision to discontinue football, as Joseph Walters, vice-chairman of the Board, looks on.

Newspaper Again Defines Role

The Villanovan is the college newspaper of Villanova University. Quite often, our readers feel that as a college newspaper, the Villanovan owes its allegiance to Villanova. They feel that when doing a story, we should consider its effects on the University.

As student journalists, the Villanovan staff feels our primary concern is to uphold the standards of a quality newspaper. Our location is important, but our identity is paramount. The same principles which apply to major metropolitan newspapers with circulations in the millions also apply to the Villanovan with a circulation of 8,000.

One of the many tasks of a newspaper is to entertain its readers. We strive to accomplish this in many ways. Our "Who Knows, Who Cares" column pokes fun at many aspects of Villanova. In the "On Campus" section, readers can find out what their friends and classmates feel about many different issues, some very important, others rather insignificant. Our Features and Entertainment sections try to present the lighter side of Villanova, along with opportunities for students to explore the various social and cultural events on campus.

The task of entertaining the Villanovan reader is an enjoyable one. But sometimes, our staff becomes rather disheartened when readers merely open the paper to "Who Knows, Who Cares."

In a college environment, it is important that students, faculty and administrators be informed of the happenings at Villanova. All too often, simple news items are overlooked by many Villanova students. To really be a part of Villanova, one should know and understand the various event at Villanova throughout the year. We hope that our news stories will hel clarify and enlighten these events.

Equally important, though, is our belief that we can make Villanova better place. There are many positive aspects of Villanova, and we will d our best to report them. But, as journalists, we will never back away whe we are disturbed. If we succumbed to the pressure to remain silent, would be cheating Villanova students, but more important, we would cheating ourselves.

Finally, we feel we have one more vital task to perform. As newspaper, the Villanovan is obligated to air not only our views, but als the views of our readers. Freedom of expression for everyone at Villanov is a prerequisite for intelligent thought. To facilitate this, the Villanova accepts "Letters to the Editor" and prints as many as space will allow. fact, we did not turn away any letter last year, even though many of tho letters were critical of the Villanovan. In addition to our "Letters to t Editor," we are also accepting "Op-Eds" on issues of local or nation significance. We hope that students, faculty and administrators feel free contribute pieces to this new section.

Our guidelines for this year are set, but they are not new. In pe forming our jobs as journalists, we may offend people at times. The fac and opinions we print may not be widely accepted. But in our hearts, feel we are doing what is best not only for ourselves, but for Villanov

Undergraduate Enrollment Stable

By SARA KELLY

Undergraduate enrollment at Villanova has remained unanged despite a drop in the size the freshman class.

According to Rev. William Guire O.S.A., assistant to the ector of admissions, the num- of Freshman at Villanova was urposefully dropped." "We were pecting a total of 1643 new stu- nts, 1533 Freshman and 110 nsfer students, and we came y close to that," stated Guire. "As of September 2, re were 1518 Freshman and 137 nsfer students, a difference of y 13 students from our goal, so are right were we want to be," Guire continued.

The number of applications received increased by 12%.

The figures from Freshman applications indicate that 43% of the Freshman class are women, down from 45% last year, indicating a shift back to men.

Currently commuter students make up 29% of the enrollment, which is down from 31% last year, and the number of commuting Freshman has been cut in half from 258 last year to 125 this year.

"The calibre of the student who applies to Villanova is increasing. The average SAT scores of this years' Freshman, which are 507 verbal and 500 math, are 25 points higher than last years', 10 points higher on the verbal part and 15 points higher on the mathematical part. This is really a double increase because while the national average is decreasing, Villanovas' average is increasing," said McGuire.

"Two years ago 42% of the Freshman class were in the top 20% of their high school class, last year that number increased to 52% and this year it increased to 55%, which tells us that the better students are being attracted to Villanova," stated McGuire.

Meeting Announced

All right all you S.O.B.'s, here's your chance to really prove to all your friends that you really are an S.O.B. An S.O.B. is a Special Olympic Booster and about 300 special athletes from across Pennsylvania need you as well as a whole bunch of "Huggers," as part of this year's Special Olympics State Soccer and Frisbee Skills Tournament. Once again this year Villanova will host this wonderful event on the weekend of October 3 and 4, and it is our desire to make this a University-wide event by getting everyone involved. We need you as a "Hugger" or an "S.O.B." to truly make this event a success. A "Hugger" is the name that has been given to a person who volunteers to come to a Pa. Special Olympics event and spend some time helping a retarded individual. A "Hugger's" job includes making sure your athlete gets a "hug" regardless of whether he or she wins or loses the event, because in the end we all win.

S.O.B. and Hugger meetings will be held on Thursday, September 17, at 7:10 p.m. in the Villanova Center and on September 23 at 7:10 p.m. in the Villanova Center.

Special Olympics Booster buttons will be on sale from September 17-25. We will also hold a balloon sale on October 1 and a Fun Run on Saturday, October 3, from 10 a.m.-10:30 a.m. and also from 3 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. on the Jumbo Elliot Track.

So don't just sit there and be an S.O.B., get up and be an S.O.B. (Special Olympics Booster).

Orientation: Only The Beginning

By BOB COUREY

As September rolls around, some inevitable occurrences begin. The weather turns cooler, back-to-school sales are everywhere, and the Villanova New Student Orientation Program gets underway.

The present Orientation Program's beginning started about nine months ago with the selection of the Student Chairperson Matthew Mitchell. A process of selecting an Administrative Coordinator, Timothy Ermi, and 13 steering committee members was completed in January. These people became the base of what is the present Orientation Program. It was their duty to design and develop the substance of Orientation. For example, they organized the different workshops, entertainment, training for the student staff and so forth.

In April, the 76 orientation counselors and the 16 administrative assistants were selected. Their purpose was to implement the program set forth by the steering committee, administrative coordinator, and student chairperson.

The primary goal of the program is to facilitate a smooth transition for the new students to Villanova life and make it a meaningful experience. This is accomplished by community or group building and introducing them to student and academic life as well as to the University in general, said Mitchell.

"The beauty of the program is that it is student run under professional guidance. This allows the Orientation staff, as well as the new students, a great growing experience," commented Mitchell.

An integral part of the orientation program, and a new member of the Villanova staff, is Christine Lysionek. She came from LaSalle College after three years holding the position of assistant director of student life to Villanova to assume the position of assistant to the dean of students. Some of the programs for which Lysionek is responsible include Orientation, graduation and the alcohol education committee.

"One of our main objectives is to give the new students a balanced view of Villanova, not just present them with pure academic talk, for example," said Lysionek.

New to this year's Orientation Program is the addition of more commuter and off-campus resident workshops. The purpose of these workshops was to make the commuting and O.C.R. students feel more a part of the Villanova community.

Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., dean of students, mentioned that the Orientation program was progressing exceptionally well.

"Chris' good sense of organization has helped us to overcome many problems of the past," he continued.

Some of the new students in orientation group No. 14 had this to say about the program: "The program builds confidence. We realize that the stupid games we play really help us meet people. It makes us feel like new members of Villanova without feeling lost."

Timerman Tells Of Oppression

By BILL CLARK

Jacobo Timerman caused a major human rights controversy which lasted well over three years. He is given credit for the withdrawal of Ernest LeFebvre as President Reagan's nominee for the post of Human Rights Advisor. Timerman has now caused a major rift in the world's Jewish community.

Most of Timerman's fame is the result of his recent work, Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number, in which he describes the massive persecution of political prisoners in Argentina. It begins with Timerman's days as editor of La Opinion, a defiant Argentinian newspaper, and continues through his humiliating years in Argentinian jails.

Timerman's descriptions are vivid, but the timing of his book has given it added impact. Prisoner challenges America's new-found belief in supporting oppressive right-wing regimes merely because they oppose the Soviet Union. Timerman asks how the United States can sit back while thousands of political prisoners are either murdered or missing each year.

Timerman first gives the background necessary to understand his own political persecution. He explains that politics in Argentina is a struggle between the forces of the far right and the far left. Terrorism is effectively used by both sides Moderates possess little power.

For this reason, La Opinion was shut down and Jacobo Timerman was jailed. In trying to urge peace and moderation in Argentina, Timerman alienated the power structure of both factions: "(La Opinion) was an adversary of the military for being terrorist, an adversary of mass culture for publishing sophisticated writers, an adversary of the Left for publishing Soviet dissidents, and an adversary of the family for publishing in its science section an article on the sexual habits of young Americans," writes Timerman.

Timerman's paper continued to publish during the first year of the new military regime, but in 1977 he was captured by an extremist sector of the army. For three years, Timerman was dragged from place to place, and tortured at every opportunity.

He struggles to tell the reader about the pain he has endured. Eventually, he concludes it is impossible to transmit the pain that a tortured person undergoes. But he does tell what the Argentinian army did to him and to other political prisoners.

"A man is led to what may be a canvas bed, or a table, stripped, doused with water, tied to the ends of the bed or table, hands and legs outstretched. And the application of electricity begins. The amount of electricity transmitted by the electrodes — or whatever they're called, is regulated so that it merely hurts, or burns, or destroys," writes Timerman. After this there would be a brief pause, followed by questions; then insults, then more questions. And then, it begins all over again.

The guards were instructed not to kill Timerman. The government was trying to build a case against Timerman so they could justify his imprisonment to the world. But there was no case. He was tortured, questioned, and investigated for three long years. Yet, the army was unable to convict him of any crime.

While in prison, Timerman discovered something else about the leaders of Argentina's army; they were strongly anti-Semitic. Throughout his tenure in jail, he was constantly asked about his Zionist beliefs. He always suffered Jewish insults during the torture sessions. He claims that Jews are treated differently than other political prisoners.

He attributed this anti-Semitism to the army's belief that Jews are plotting to take over Argentina; to make it another Israel. He also claims that many of the guards are professed Nazis.

The thing which disturbs Timerman so much is the silence of Jewish leaders in Argentina. He states they are constantly ignoring violations of Jewish rights. Timerman abhors this silence; "What there was, from the start, was the great silence, which appears in every civilized country that passivly accepts the inevitability of violence, and then the fear that suddenly befalls it. That silence which can transform any nation into an accomplice.

"That silence existed in Germany, when even many well-intentioned individuals assumed that everything would return to normal once Hitler finished with the Communists and Jews," says Timerman.

Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number has become a controversial work in foreign policy circles. The validity of Timerman's suffering is doubted by no one. The judgments he makes from his experiences about the United States and the Jewish community are not as readily accepted. But, they are worth thinking about..

If you think "pads and rollers" are just a California craze, you're not ready for New Memorex.

Pads and rollers are key components of a cassette's tape transport system.

This system guides the tape past your deck's tape head. It must do so with unerring accuracy.

And no cassette does it more accurately than totally new Memorex.

The new Memorex tape transport system is precision engineered to exacting tolerances.

Flanged, seamless rollers guide the tape effortlessly and exactly. An oversize pad hugs the tape to the tape head with critical pressure: firm enough for precise alignment, gentle enough to dramatically reduce wear.

Our unique ultra-low-friction polyolefin wafers help precision-molded hubs dispense and gather tape silently and uniformly, play after play. Even after 1,000 plays.

In fact, our new Memorex cassette will always deliver true sound reproduction, or we'll replace it. Free.

Of course, reproduction that true and that enduring owes a lot to Permapass™, our extraordinary new binding process. It even owes a little to our unique new fumble-free storage album.

But when you record on new Memorex, whether it's HIGH BIAS II, normal bias MRX I or METAL IV, don't forget the importance of those pads and rollers. Enjoy the music as the tape glides unerringly across the head.

And remember: getting it there is half the fun.

Jenkins succeeds Elliott as track coach

Success is not a foreign word to Charles Jenkins. He was the first black scholarship track athlete at Villanova. He won two Olympic gold medals in the 1956 games at Melbourne. He earned his doctorate in education and held a post with the Department of Education in Washington for 12 years. Now he is back at Villanova to coach a team and a tradition which are a string of success stories.

Since graduating, Jenkins has stayed in contact with Villanova and the late Jumbo Elliott, recruiting over the past 20 years. Thus when the opportunity became his to coach the program, it was a simple decision. 'I am appreciative of what the school did for me," explains Jenkins. "It is incumbent upon an individual to repay that. All my life I have worked with athletes, much of that rationale comes from Jumbo — good people interested in me as a person helped along my way."

Jenkins makes it quite obvious that his goals are compatable with those Jumbo acheived during his 47 year tenure as track coach. "Excellence has not gone out of style," Jenkins says and adds, "I'm very much satisfied with most of the things Villanova typifies and I will recruit in that way."

"In addition to being a track coach I have a doctorate. Clearly, in my mind, the relation of education to the athletes is important, says Jenkins, proudly adding "all the track athletes are taking substantial majors."

In looking forward to his job, Jenkins says he will best like "the relationship with the athletes and the challenge of developing their potential." "I've met them all and feel priveleged, they are a fine group."

As if taking the place of the legendary Jumbo Elliott isn't enough, Jenkins has become head track coach of a restructured program which places the women's team under his jurisdiction as well.

"If I'm going to be head track coach it is incumbent for me to see that the women are afforded the opportunity to bring out the potential they have. I am personally concerned that they do the best they can to perform in a sports-manlike manner because whoever is representing Villanova is representing Villanova men or women," says Jenkins about this other aspect of his job.

Maree

Former Villanova track star Sydney Maree beat Steve Ovett in the mile, posting the world's fifth fastest time of 3:48.83. This victory last night at the track meet in Rieti, Italy, makes Maree the third fastest person ever to run the mile.

Bridge Repairs Delayed Again

By SARA KELLY and PETER KONDAS

The Villanovan has learned that any improvements to be made by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) to the bridge on Route 320 will not occurr for at least three years. In the meantime, the National Railroad Passenger Corp. (AMTRAK) has failed to comply with necessary improvements to the pedestrian tunnel at Villanova Station as ordered by the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission (PUC).

In 1980, Villanova University filed a complaint with the PUC against PennDOT, AMTRAK, Delaware County and Radnor Township arguing that safety problems existed on or near campus that were the responsibility of those named. A hearing followed to determine if there were safety problems, and, if so, who was responsible.

On June 26, 1981, PUC Judge Martin Fountain released his report which stated that the bridge on Route 320 was a safety hazard, as was the pedestrian tunnel at Villanova Station. The PUC determined that PennDOT was responsible for repairing the bridge, and the AMTRAK was responsible for repairing the pedestrian tunnel.

The PUC ordered PennDOT to conduct a six-month study and prepare a plan to either, (1) attach a pedestrian walkway to the existing bridge, (2) build a new bridge capable of handling use by cars and pedestrians, or (3) build a separate pedestrian walkway. PennDOT has petitioned the PUC to extend the deadline an additional six months. "Don't bet the ranch that PennDOT will build a pedestrian walkway," stated Fountain.

"I know what the decision will be," said Ron Flegel, district bridge engineer, and the man responsible for filing the report with the PUC. "I will recommend that the bridge be replaced. Adding a walkway won't help because it is already difficult for two cars to pass each other. Other bridges with the same design as the one on Spring Mill Rd. (Rt. 320) are suffering from structural damage so that one will too," continued Flegel.

Asked when construction could begin, Flegel stated, "at the very very least it couldn't begin for three years. Once you work here for a while, three years is nothing."

According to Flegel, any project that is approved for construction will not break ground for 18 months, and it will take at least 18 additional months for this project to "get through the courts" and be designed by the PennDOT architects.

"The National Railroad Passenger Corp. (AMTRAK) immediately, at its own initial cost and expense must furnish all materials and do all work necessary to (1) make temporary improvements and/or repairs so that the pedestrian underpass does not become flooded during periods of rain, and (2) make any other repairs or improvements to the underpass so that it is safe and passable at all times . . . (1) identify the problems associated with the inadequate draining and lighting facilities in the pedestrian underpass and, (2) make recommendations to permanently eliminate these problems and estimated cost of their improvement," stated the PUC decision. The recommendations must be submitted to the PUC by December 26, 1981, and the temporary improvements were to have been made immediately following the June decision.

When asked what temporary repairs had been made in compliance with the PUC determinations, the attorney representing AMTRAK, Scott Armentrout, said, "We're not doing anything because we don't consider the decision to be permanent. We are appealing the decision."

"We made temporary repairs prior to PUC's decision, so now there's nothing else we can do down there," stated Richard Cooper, structural engineer for AMTRAK. Asked how long before the decision these repairs were made, Cooper replied that it was soon after a Villanova student was killed by a train because she was crossing the tracks to avoid the flooded tunnel. The incident occurred 23 months ago.

James Patterson, the attorney representing Villanova University, was unaware that AMTRAK had not made the ordered temporary repairs. "I'll have to jump on that problem," stated Patterson.

Bob Hope Supports Football Comeback

By SHARON WINTERS

The Committee to RestoreFootball has signed Bob Hope to perform a benefit concert at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia on Dec. 1 at 8 p.m., according to Gerald A. Lee, engineering alumnus and Committee member.

"We called him (Hope) one afternoon and his agent said that he would call us in three hours. He called in two and said that he would be glad to do it," said Lee. Hope will bring a female vocalist and the Committee will provide a local 15-piece band to roundout the show, Lee continued.

"I was the one who conceived of the idea initially," said Lee. A friend supplied the contact for Lee to be able to call Hope. The Committee first obtained the contract for the benefit and returned it to Hope. "The client signs first, then the entertainer. That's the way these things are done," Lee commented.

There are close to 2500 supporters of Villanova football across the country, Lee said. These people were contacted as a result of the Committee's completion of mailing lists for various alumni groups. "We had lists as a result of affiliations with the Wildcat Club. I did not attempt to go through the Alumni Association. They didn't permit us to use their mailing lists after they dropped football, so we got our own without inside help," Lee explained.

The groups involved with the Committee's efforts include the Wildcat Club, exfootball players, season ticket holders for football, Varsity Club and Committee members, according to Lee. "I am not alone. A lot of people care," commented Lee.

The ticket prices for the benefit will be $50 and $100. The $100 ticket holders will be able to attend a cocktail party at the Bellevue Stratford prior to the show. Both the $100 and $50 tickets include a reception at the Bellevue after the performance.

The first fund raising event for establishment of football was held at the Covered Wagon, in Strafford, in May. Since that time, the Committee was formed and their Board of Directors has held 15 to 20 meetings, according to Doug Murray, engineering alumnus, president of the General Alumni Association and Committee members.

"What happened in April was a two-fold thing. The administration developed a decision to drop football. The other was that they severely damaged their credibility with the whole Villanova family. The way it was done was improper," Murray said.

"We think that there is a lack of communication between Villanova and the community," said Lee. Lee can not imagine the rationale for dropping the sport.

"We made the wrong decision at a time when the right one would propel the program to success," Lee viewed. The three major networks are interested in college football, he said. The College Football Association (CFA), includes 61 of the biggest schools in the country, Lee noted. They just signed a contract with NBC for 165 million dollars which starts in 1982, he explained.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) has its own pact with CBS and ABC, Lee continued. "Now all three networks are involved, enlarging the pool of dollars. What a time to drop football. I don't think that the future for Villanova football was ever brighter and here we are turning out the lights," he said.

Lee talked to Father McCarthy, chairman of Villanova's Board of Directors, the night before the last meeting. McCarthy said that Villanova will have football again, but

'My job is to coordinate the offices that report to me," said Neville. "One I would like to work on is upgrading facilities in the residence halls. We are behind in our maintenance. We need to spend some money to make residences more livable. We can't discuss bettering student life if living conditions aren't appropriate."

Neville noted that there is a need for new furniture in the dorms, and said that there was a major clean-up of Sullivan Hall over the summer.

Dean of Students, Fr. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A. also believes the new Student Life reorganization will assist in streamlining the reporting system to the President. "From an internal standpoint, since everyone now reports to the same person, it is more likely they will cooperate with each other," said Martin.

The offices of dean of men and dean of women have now been consolidated into one office headed by Martin. Martin is assisted by Christine Lysionek.

Martin believes that Lysionek will be an advocate for female students. "We did not want the women in the University to feel shortchanged," said Martin. Lysionek will be in charge of the Committee on Alcohol Education and will be involved with other educational programs at the University.

One project Martin has been involved with since taking over the Dean of Students office is the upgrading of the judicial program, in order to "protect the students and the institution." Martin explained, "Instead of a student having a hearing with the Dean of Men or Women, he will deal with the Judicial Officer, Dr. Joseph Burke. We have really looked at the judicial and appeal process."

Asked about the newly remodelled dean's office in Dougherty Hall, Martin explained, "It's important that Dr. Neville and I be in close proximity to each other."

Recently appointed Director of Student Activities Lucy Gorski served as the Program Director of the Union before assuming her new position.

Gorski feels most of the goals she set forth as Program Director were attained, saying, "The students began to get a much better understanding of what the programming was about and about the financial responsibilities within an organization." Gorski's goals as director of student activities include working with commuters, off campus residents, fraternities and sororities more, and becoming involved in all the organizations. Gorski feels she had an advantage in obtaining her position "because I have been around Villanova and it is much easier starting once you've been around here and have some background and know where to take some problems."

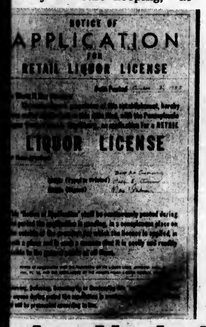
V.U.'s Liquor License Progress Delayed

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

The liquor license granted to Belle Air Coporation is rently in "safe keeping," according to Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center.



After receiving the license, the corporation was informed of concerns of Radnor Township. The township feels that the license may not be the right one for the university's Connelly Center. When applying for the license in November, 1980, The University, along with the township, understood certain rules. No one under the age of 21 could obtain liquor, the facility cannot be within 500 feet of a restrictive institution, such as the chapel, and a special permit must be obtained should the facility wish to serve liquor on Sundays or to provide entertainment. The restaurant must have a proper health permit and the facilities to seat and feed at least 30 people.

The Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB) has also indicated that the license may not be right, although nothing is in writing. The corporation, however, was under the assumption, when applying for the license, that they were applying for the correct one.

"It has been very frustrating. We are in 'no-man's' land right now. We are in possession of the license but do not want to use it," said Tuchman. Tuchman and Father President Driscoll met several times over the past summer with attorney, Ray Cullen. The LCB told them to keep the license until they can decide what to do with it. The license was renewed over the summer and is now in "safe keeping" with Cullen.

Tuchman feels there should be a provision by the LCB for special licenses just for universities. However, no such license is in existence at this time.

"A lot of time and energy were put into this with the intent of creating a nice atmosphere as well as making a profit," Tuchman explained.

The corporation applied for the license in November, 1980. A private university cannot buy a license, so the Belle Air Corporation was founded for this purpose. A downpayment was put on the license from a restaurant in Radnor, "Achilles Violas" which is no longer in business. The corporation then applied for the transferrence of the license from "Achilles Violas" to the Belle Air Corporation. A board in Harrisburg reviewed and approved the transference, thus issuing the license to the corporation.

Tuchman has no idea when the corporation will be able to use their license. "Only time will tell," he commented.

Judicial System Revised

y CHARLES MOLINEAUX

The Villanova University Code Student Conduct has been re-ed, and while the regulations essentially the same as in pre-us years, the judicial pro-ures involved in their enforce-nt have been completely rewrit-

According to the newly-appoint-Judicial Affairs Officer, Joseph rke, the new campus judicial tem was instituted to more ef-iently handle campus dis-linary cases.

t replaced a system which "was umbersome process that didn't very well," said Burke.

The old campus judicial or-nization consisted of three erate types of hearing boards; first of these was the Resident ll boards.

ach dormiritory had its own rd composed entirely of stu-nts wh.h would deal with in-ctions by residents of that dor-tory which occurred inside the mitory.

The second hearing board was All-Campus Judicial Board, h heard cases involving on-pus transgressions, outside of dormitories. This board was composed of students, faculty, and administrative representatives.

Any student who might be brought before either of these boards would have the option of doing so or of appearing before the Dean of Men (or Dean of Women) first.

The two hearing boards could only deal with infractions that would not involve the possibility of suspension or expulsion. These charges would be handled by the remaining board, the Disciplinary Review Board.

This board, composed of students, faculty, and administrative representatives, handled serious violations by both on and off-campus students.

"All of these review boards would merely function as fact-finding committees who would accept testimony and submit results and recommendations to the Dean of Men and the Dean of Women. The Dean could then accept or reject these recommendations," said Burke.

Under the new system, the cases taken by the first two hearing boards are dealt with by the administration. In dormitory matters, a student's guilt or innocence as well as any sanction, if necessary, will be decided by the representative area co-ordinators. On-campus questions are to be brought before Burke himself for evaluation.

The very serious cases will be handled by one University Judicial Board. This board is composed of three students, one faculty member, and one administration member with the Judicial Affairs Officer acting as a non-voting chairman.

This board will hear its cases and decide upon the guilt or innocence of the students involved. It was then decided, entirely on its own, what sanctions, if any, will be imposed.

The decisions of the Disciplinary Review Board are final. They cannot be overturned except by a formal appeal. A student or administrator may appeal, but only on three very specific grounds. These are: (1) If new evidence has arisen which might change the decision; (2) If there is alleged to be some procedural defect in the original hearing; (3) If the sanctions imposed on the students are alleged to be inappropriate.

Appeals are heard by an appeals board consisting of one student, one faculty member and one administrator.

Walkway Under Construction

By CAROL ALKONS

For the past two weeks, the Star Construction Company has been working on a concrete sidewalk and stairway from the north end of Kennedy Hall to the plaza behind the Connelly Center. The cost of the project is approximately $5000.

Last year, a path was worn through the grass between the two buildings, and especially in foul weather, the slick grass and mud made it dangerous for those who cut through.

Thomas N. Trucks, director of maintenance, said that no injuries or complaints prompted the building of the stairs, but that "we just did it because it's one of the two places where people wore a path. It's a natural route between Kennedy and the Connelly Center. This walkway will make it look better."

One person who is pleased that the construction work is being done is Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center: "One concern I've always had from an operational standpoint is that when it's wet, people track dirt into the building. The new stairs will help keep the lower level of the building clean."

The walkway is expected to be completed by next week.

Reorganization of C & F Library in Progress

By DOUGLASS EARL

The majority of lockers in Bartley Hall have been removed to create space for an anticipated faculty expansion, according to Alvin Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance (C&F).

The locker removal is part of the reorganization of C&F's Rea Memorial Library, computer terminals and faculty office space that is designed to meet Villanova's expanding educational programs, explained Clay.

Under the relocation program the library would occupy the spot where the removed lockers were and the computer terminals would occupy the adjoining end corridor that faces Lancaster Avenue. New lockers may be placed under the windows in the cafeteria.

Speaking of the changes Clay said the move was "needed because our faculty is increasing because our programs are growing.

"We found out that about only 28% of the lockers were used in the past years so we kept some lockers, smaller lockers, to go under the windows in the cafeteria but they aren't here yet. I hope they'll (students) be patient until we can make provisions for them."

Asked about the decline in locker usage by students, Clay said, "Years ago people used to take trolley trains now when they come in they use their cars and carry so many books for the day." Clay also cited vandalism of the lockers as a problem.

Dorothy Pearce, dean of the Rea Memorial Library, said moving the library would make the library bigger and improve its plant. She said the library's services would not be hampered and that students might like the library more because there will be more space and new carpeting.

Moving Bartley Hall's computer terminals would not involve a

Senate Meeting Scheduled

By BOB HERMAN

The Villanova University Senate will hold its first meeting of the 1981-82 school year this afternoon at 4:00 in the West Lounge.

Items on the agenda include a report from the Senate Budget Committee, a report from Father O'Malley about the target date for completion of committee work on the evaluation of the present course/teacher evaluation instruments and also a report of a July 8 letter from Father President Driscoll to the Senate.

Also, the new senators will be welcomed by the Chairman of the University Senate, Dr. Warren Richardson.

The new senators include Mr. John Blatt and Mr. Robert Blatt, whom are both alumni representatives; Mr. Gary B. Fenner, the vice-president for Financial Affairs; Father Lawrence Gallen, the acting vice-president for Academic Affairs and Dr. Justin Green, faculty assembly chairman from the political science department.

The new student senators include Paul Tufano and Victor Falvo from Commerce and Finance; Bill Monaco, Tee Hoyne and Terry Mogavero from Arts and Sciences; Diane Sansone from Engineering; Connie Comins from the College of Nursing and Kevin Gleason from the Law School. Jim Muller will replace Gerry Malanga as the science senator for at least the first semester because Malanga was injured over the summer in a diving accident.

The Student Body President Bob Rosengarth feels that the Senate's major goals with respect to the student body is to pass through the Student Bill of Rights which will give the students a list specifically outlining what the students will be allowed to do and this will also give the students "more freedom to make their own responsible choices." Rosengarth said that his major objective and goal for the senate is "to give some real power — which would mean lessening the virtual unilateral decision-making policies that the President and the Trustees presently abuse."

Anti-Nuclear Weapons Day Planned at V.U.

Villanova will be a major stop for the "Caravan for Survival" which will be journeying from Miami to the United Nations next month. The major purpose of the Caravan, which will reach the Villanova campus October 21, will be to encourage popular support for a worldwide freeze on the testing, development, production and deployment of nuclear weapons.

Villanova is only one of some 50 campuses at which the student caravan will stop. On each of them student leaders will organize a "Day of Concern" at which speakers will underline the threat from nuclear weapons and stress the importance of collaboration on positive action to better the human condition.

On each campus students will be soliciting signatures on petitions urging the nuclear freeze and endorsing the Human Manifesto, a statement about human interdependence which has been endorsed by distinguished persons from all over the world. On Saturday, October 24, some Villanovans will journey to the UN to attend a rally at Dag Hammarskjold Plaza near the United Nations at which the petitions will be presented to UN officials.

All Villanovans, student or faculty, who are interested in helping with the Caravan are urged to attend an organizational meeting to be held in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center at 7 p.m. on Wednesday (September 23). The meeting is being convened by two Villanova students, John Felice '84 and Tony Mirenda '84, both of whom played important roles in the Conference on "Youth and World Order" which was held in the Connelly Center last January. The Caravan idea was a major subject of discussion at that Conference. Last weekend Maryanne Moon '81 attended a Washington meeting of some 30 students from various campuses who are working on the caravan project.

Among the Villanova Caravan Committee's jobs is to recruit some runners who will run a "torch of friendship" from Villanova to the University of Pennsylvania, the next campus on the caravan's route. The Committee also want help with publicity, petition-carrying, hospitality and other important tasks. The Common Heritage Institute is serving as coordinating center for the Villanova Caravan Committee.

Dr. John Logue, political science department, is co-ordinator of the V.U. "Caravan for Survival."

The major purpose of the "Caravan for Survival" will be to encourage popular support for a world wide freeze on testing, development, production and deployment of nuclear weapons.

not this year, according to Lee. McCarthy also said that Villanova would not be 1-A, Lee noted.

The problems with football do not lie with nonsupport by students and alumni, Lee explained. There are not enough scholarships and not enough front office support, according to Lee.

"I talked to members of the administration. The repeated answer to the problem was finances," Murray recounted. "I was beginning to accept that when the idea of club football was dropped," he continued. Murray now feels that the cancellation of football was not purely a financial situation. "You're not even allowed to say "football" at Villanova. The word's taboo," he added.

None of the alumni were consulted about the end of the sport, Lee said. "There is an item called 'goodwill'. Unless they've decided to write us off, they better consider goodwill," he opined.

Lee has attended every Villanova home game and many away games for 28 consecutive years since his graduation. "I haven't broken ties with Villanova. Villanova has simply broken ties with me," he said.

A lot of people attended Homecoming, as well as away games, according to Murray. These people are the ones who have been active on behalf of the University, he noted. "Almost 500 people wrote to protest dropping football," he said. Half of these people were active contributors, according to Murray. Damage has been done to Villanova's reputation because of the manner in which football was handled, he believes.

Choosing Your Career?

...OR CONFUSED AND STUCK?

Next to selecting a mate, your career choice is the most important decision of your life. What you choose will be a reflection of what you are or what you can be. The only place to start is with self knowledge. That means knowing your intelligence, aptitudes, personality traits and interests BEFORE you commit yourself to something.

The GUIDANCENTER now offers intensive but quick, low-cost computer scored testing designed to give you the self knowledge you need.

The results of several hours of paper and pencil testing are computer scored and interpreted to you individually by our certified vocational counselor. The elaborate computer print outs are yours, as is the decision for your next step.

The GUIDANCENTER has psychologists available for career counseling or psychotherapy as desired.

No matter what your age or present situation, your future is too important to be left to chance.

Aid Cut Prompts Action

The American dream — a little hard work, and anyone can get ahead; that is, if your family has money, and you are able to obtain a quality education.

The main thrust behind the Reagan philosophy is to return to the ideals of hard work. He wishes to give Americans freedom from government restraints, and then, everyone can get a "piece of the pie."

There is one thing he forgot, though, and that is without an education, a person has little chance of rising above a lifetime of manual labor. Perhaps Americans have relied too greatly on education as a cure for its social ills, but without it, a person has little chance for success.

Yet, the Reagan administration persists in cutting aid to students. Reagan is looking to the near future, with the possibilities of huge budget deficits fueling inflation. It seems he has forgotten about the future; a future where human "capital" will be forced to solve ever-pressing problems.

Statistics show that over 70% of Villanova students receive some sort of financial aid. Even though the effects of President Reagan's budget cuts are still uncertain, how many of these students can depend on such aid next year? How many students are already being denied the aid which they deserve? And finally, how many students will never attend Villanova because they cannot finance the ever-rising costs of education?

The Villanovan has spoken out against this trend of cutting aid to students in the past. Even though it is important to express opinions, it seems that the present trend of cutting aid is gaining momentum. If people fail to realize the importance of education, our future may be in jeopardy.

In an attempt to reduce this unfair burden on many students, the Villanovan is initiating a "Villanovan Scholarship Fund." This fund, which will be designated for disadvantaged students with strong academic and extra-curricular records, will be open to anyone. We will impose no other qualifications. To do so would be hypocritical.

This scholarship fund will not be limited to incoming freshmen. Because many present Villanova students will be forced to finance their education on fewer federal dollars, it is important that upperclassmen also be eligible.

The final decision on who receives the scholarship monies will be made by Villanova's Financial Aid Office. The criteria for their selection will be announced in next week's Villanovan, along with instructions for application.

In the near future, the Villanovan will be publicizing its fundraising attempts. We hope that everyone shares our concern about education. This is not something we can combat alone.

Damage Charges Deserve Answer

Last week, the Villanovan published an article which alleged that Villanova University overcharged resident students for vandalism damage for the 1980-81 academic year by at least $20,000. So far, the administration has issued nothing which refutes this claim. In fact, the administration has not responded at all.

Yet, we believe that an explanation must be given to the students of Villanova, that it is their right to demand an accounting of the damage figures. Resident students pay over $7000 per year to attend Villanova, and deserve to be told the reasons why they apparently were overbilled.

But by not responding to the allegations published last week, perhaps it is the hope of Villanova's administrators that the issue will die quietly, that the students will pay their bills without protest, and that everything will be back to "normal."

Racism Provokes Anger

On Wednesday, September 9, at approximately 9 p.m., I was walking to my car via the walkway between Sullivan and Sheehan dormitories. In front of me was a black woman and a child of about nine or ten years of age. From a second floor dorm window in Sullivan came the shout, "Hey, brow sugar!" A few seconds later th same person yelled, "We g brown sugar here, yeah!"

My anger at that moment w indescribable. My immediate r sponse was to run into that dorm find that young man, and then . I just didn't know what I would d

Is this 1981? Haven't we com to the point where racial a ethnic slurs just don't have a place in our lives anymore? Is th not a Catholic university? Or am so out of the mainstream of even that I don't know that college st dents still harbor the bigotry the 1950s and 1960s?

It is possible that this was o isolated incident. But, even so, cannot accept that kind of b havior passively. Whoever th young man is who shouted lik that — I hope that he will recog nize that the time is long pa when that kind of behavior is a ceptable, whether on Villanova campus or anyplace else.

Damage Charges Questioned

Dear Editor,

Concerning your article "Vandalism Costly to Students," we are interested in knowing why there was no mention of the bills received by the residents of Sheehan Hall from the 1980-81 year. Each student was billed over $14.00 for damages. It seems apparent that this money was not used for the reasons for which the bills were issued. The lounge, which by the way is of size fit for a dorm with residents only numbering up to ten, still is a complete disgrace and worthy of the great sum of money "donated" by the girls. Being former residents of Sheehan, we are well aware of how funds have eluded this dorm.

In discussing this matter with countless others, we find this to be of great concern. It is believed by many that this money was used to help fix up Sullivan Hall — a male dorm on campus. If this is case, or for what ever reason t the money was not used for Sh han's purposes, we find it to grossly unfair.

Student Activism Encouraged

Well, here we are. Another year — another $8,000. Students get "written up" for walking through a dorm with a beer in their hand. Students are punished for studying if it is done in a dorm housing the opposite sex. Students who are lucky enough to get on campus (it used to be luck to live on campus) are being baffled by illogical and outrageous "room damage bills."

Parking sticker fees are up, and there have been no corresponding increases in the services provided or the space allocated. My sympathy is given to all the freshmen who visited "good old V.U." last fall amidst the sun and fun of those pre-football game tailgates. I could go on for pages, but I hope that by now you get the point — Villanova is becoming less and less fun at an increasing rate. We all sit by and watch the Trustees manipulate the Administration with non-feedback policies. What can students do to rectify the status quo?

How can they do anything when they are engulfed by an overbearing bureaucratic system? They can drop out — but most people don't take that route. It seems that most students just grit their teeth and brave the "Villanova storm." But there is a way which is relatively untested. That way is through Student Activism. And student activism is the fuel for Student Government. The Student Governments of the past have always tried to conquer the storm, but it has all been in vain. Without student support, the Student Government is just another plaything to amuse our "superiors." So do yourself a favor and get involved — because if you don't, you have no right to complain. And if you do, we can change Villanova so that we love it — just like in the good old days.

Freshman Orientation Criticized

As a preface I must state that this editorial is not a criticism of any individual or group, it is a criticism of an idea.

Is orientation, as we presently have it at Villanova, really necessary? Upon returning to V.U. this fall I was reminded of my terrible term with group 44, when I was forced to waddle around like a new born chick behind my brightly clad mother-hen counselor. We played idiotic games probably taken from a primary school teacher's recess planning booklet.

Who was responsible for the gross misconception that embarrassment is the best tonic for Freshman homesickness? Does anyone enjoy those games? I doubt it. Portions of orientation are vital. These include campus tours, study tips and intelligent preplanned activities. Certainly not included is what I must label as "forced fun." "Forced fun" includes such inane highlights as group poster contests, concerts featuring The Star Spangled Washboard Band and of course the games. Why can't this aspect of Freshman life be a little more dignified? Must young adults be treated as first graders all under the title of getting psyched? I think a reminder that these freshmen were only a few months before "king of the hill" seniors at their respective high schools is in order. They enter college suddenly at the bottom of the totem pole with fragile egos and a new found independence. Is there a need to further their uncomfortable humility by subjecting them to a re-entry of childhood? Instead they should be treated as independent adult college students with an emphasis on individuality. This one's for them.

Top Alumni Receive High Honors

By KATHI IANNACONE

The first and foremost thought in your mind as you struggle through those Bio and Philosophy classes may not be receiving an alumni award, but nevertheless, it may happen.

Back in 1943 when Michael J. Daly was attending Villanova as a pre-medical student he knew that "Villanova College was what motivated him to stay in academic medicine" although he never dreamed that by doing so he would some day win such a prestigious award.

Daly, as well as 4 other distinguished graduates, have been selected as the 1981 recipients of the Second Annual College of Arts and Science, Alumni Medallion Award. In addition, congratulations are in order for Major General George B. Crist, Mr. Robert E. Mulcahy III, Mr. Frank Thornton, and the Reverend Francis J. Cerullo, O.S.A.

Professor and Chairman of the department of O.B. at Temple University School of Medicine, Michael Daly, '43, is just one of five outstanding recipients of this years Medallion Award. It's an honor and privilege for Daly who has received so many awards in the past. Commented Daly, "Emotionally, it's the most exciting award I've ever received."

Daly felt that Villanova allowed him to grow as a person, as well as increase his perspective. "I've never felt more comfortable anywhere then when I was a student at Villanova and I still don't let a year go by when I don't visit the campus," added Daly.

Dr. Daly has many feathers in his cap in addition to the Medallion Award. Previously, he was chosen by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists to chair their first section on the committee for special interests in psychosomatic obstetrics and gynecology. Furthermore, Daly was one of the first to develop education in the area of human sexuality among medical schools throughout the United States.

A native New Yorker, Daly, is married with 3 children, two of which are Villanova graduates. Daly completed his education at Temple University and is now living in Villanova. He added "I'm proud to be so close to the University again."

Robert E. Mulcahy, of Mendham, N.J. is yet another guest to be honored at the black tie affair. Presently the Executive Director of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, Mulcahy holds pleasure and pride for Villanova. "I always hold a strong spot in my heart for Villanova and I always expect good things from it," he added "I try to attempt loyalty to it through close contact with the University."

As former Editor-in-Chief of the Villanovan, Mulcahy described his University as one of the most liberal of the time, "when other schools had to undergo drastic changes to arrive at where they are today Villanova didn't have to go far," he commented "It's only one of its many strengths."

Mulcahy assumed his current position at the Meadowlands sports complex after serving as chief of staff to Governor Brendan T. Byrne of New Jersey.

Major General George B. Crist of Falls Church, Va., is another recipient of this prominent award. Major General Crist is the deputy Chief of Staff for reserve affairs, headquarters, Marine Corps, Washington, D.C. Prior to his assignment, he was Deputy Director of Operations for United States European Command where he was actively engaged in a series of crises actions raging from Iran to Africa.

Son of a career Navy Officer, Crist graduated Cum Laude from Villanova with a B.A. in English. He then continued his education in Auburn with a Masters degree in Political Science.

Father Francis Ceruillo, a 1969 A&S graduate, has established a community center which opened in 1972 in Philadelphia with programs and services for Senior Citizens and youths of the area. St. Rita's Community Multi-Service Center today provides programs to over 1200 youth and elderly residents of South Philadelphia.

Today Ceruillo is the chairman for the Council For The Aging in Laurence, Mass. It is for these contributions that Ceruillo is being honored.

The fifth recipient is the director of the Theatre and Media department at Dusquene University in Pittsburgh, Francis J. Thornton, a 1962 graduate. Thornton's credits include being commentator on Channel 2 in Pittsburgh and author of "The Snake Harvest."

This Northeastern Pennsylvania Alumni Club President in an acceptance letter admitted, "I can't help wondering if I haven't been mistaken for someone else."

"I always hold a strong spot in my heart for Villanova and I always expect good things from it. I try to attempt loyalty to it through close contact with the University."

Patron Glorified

By SHARON WINTERS

An immobile, stone figure solemnly poses outside of the Villanova monastery, perhaps in silent pleasure viewing the hurried students running to class. The statue watches, as it has watched for years even though few on campus realize the import of this timeless sentry.

St. Thomas of Villanova was the man that the carved stone represents. In his life he also watched over his charges. "He was extremely influential as an educator and as a bishop who lived in a rich diocese," said Father Shawn T. Tracy O.S.A., of the campus ministry. "But, he was also one who served the poor," Tracy continued. St. Thomas used the riches of the wealthy for the poor, just as Villanova, in his spirit, works in the areas of peace, justice and volunteer endeavors today, Tracy noted.

This legendary, saintly man was a Spanish Augustinian who lived in the 16th century, Tracy observed. St. Thomas derived his surname from his hometown, Villanueva de los Infantes. Among his acts as a provincial in Spain, he sent Augustinians to Mexico. They were the first friars to come to the New World.

"The Father of the Poor," as St. Thomas was called, aided the peoples that he served through teaching them as well as caring to their earthly needs. In this spirit, Irish Augustinians established Villanova in Pennsylvania.

St. Thomas has been celebrated throughout the world for many years. The main chapel on campus also honors his memory in this manner; a mass will commemorate him on Sept. 22 at 5 p.m.

However, this year's feast of St. Thomas will be special. "For the first time, we have decided to highlight his position in history," said Tracy. A festival of song will accompany the religious ceremony.

From 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. musicians will perform in front of Dougherty Hall on Sept. 22, calling attention to the Saint's day. Some of the groups playing music for the event will be comprised of students. "It will be a nice day with people sharing their gifts and talents," Tracy explained. Music of all types will be presented; the festival will not be limited to religious songs, according to Tracy.

Father Tracy is enthusiastic about the music festival. "So many students come here and never know anything of the people whose names are institutions. St. Thomas says a lot to contemporary society." Leaflets will be circulated about St. Thomas during the festival, according to Tracy. "He is a significant saint to reflect on," opined Tracy. This event will draw attention to this person who is important in Villanova's heritage, he concluded.

The campus ministry advises interested students to contact them in order to reserve a place on the schedule for the musical event.

'Therapy Without Resistance'

By SHARON MILLS

Dr. Miriam Polster, a world renowned Gestalt therapist, will be the feature presenter at an upcoming workshop on Gestalt therapy. Planned for Thursday, September 24, 1981, from 9:30 to 4:30 in the Connelly Center, the session will explore this derivative of Gestalt psychology, which is based upon the belief that healthy personalities exist as a result of clear relationship "between those experiences that are immediately in the focus of awareness ('figure') and those that are in the background ('ground')." This powerful form of psychotherapy helps disturbed individuals get more in touch with themselves, and overcome their psychological problems.

Sponsored by the Villanova University Education Department, the workshop will consist of a series of lectures and demonstrations by Dr. Polster, followed by question and answer periods. The topic will include dreams, awareness, contact, polarities, and "the impasse." Described by some of her colleagues as a magician, Polster uses a charming and pleasant personality combined with her scientific knowledge to reach both her patients and those attending her workshops. For this reason alone, this event should be informative.

Dr. Polster has an extensive background in psychology. Her experience is put to use at the Gestalt Training Center in San Diego, which she directs with her husband, also a trained psychotherapist. In addition to this, Polster is a professor of Clinical Psychiatry at the University of California at San Diego. Also to her credits, are several publications, including "Gestalt Therapy Integrated," which she wrote with her husband, and the articles "Women in Therapy — A Gestalt Approach," and "Therapy Without Resistance," all of which appear in highly rated books on psychology.

The workshop, limited to 200 participants due to its intensity, will be attended by counselors, professors, and a wide variety of professionals in fields related to psychotherapy. Much of what is to be presented will be information easily applicable to the everday problems which counselors and psychologists face.

LINES, LINES, LINES As classes got underway this past week, Villanova students once more waited on a variety of lines ranging from the bookstore to drop and add. One can almost hear this cashier saying, ". . . and fifty cents makes two hundred dollars."

Freshman Endures First Phase

By JANE ASHTON

I am a freshman, that quivering, shivering mound of human flesh which has been cruelly abandoned by its parents on the doorsteps of higher education. In the eyes of those wiser than I, I am marginally capable of breathing, and a charter member of the Larry Bird Hall of Fame for Functional Illiterates. I am the Class of '85.

I arrived last Sunday, armed with 10 economy size tubes of Crest, a new dictionary and thesaurus, and 12 changes of underwear ("one for each month" remarked my immature and unfeeling little brother). I have spent the entire summer anxiously awaiting all those little letters addressed to '50185 BIO FR RES'. I ordered my Freshman Register, my Class of '85 T-shirt, my 1982 yearbook, and I signed up to build my muscles two times a week just like all those exclusive people at ATRA of New Jersey do. I also got a letter from my Orientation Counselor, who told me to, among things, get psyched, wear shorts (so everyone could see our legs), and to arrive with a good tan. He's a senior accounting major who has really been a lot of fun; however, in my wildest nightmares, he and all the other O.C.'s are mental outpatients doing occupational therapy.

Preparing for this all summer, from the moment I confidently fell off my high heels whilst receiving my high school diploma to the hours spent sewing name tags onto every article of clothing I own, I knew I was college bound. I have seven posters, 16 sweaters, one clock-radio, 13 blouses, three different types of shampoo, 19 addresses to which I must send my new address, one lightweight iron, one desk lamp, six pajamas, my senior yearbook, one electric blender, three suitcases with cracked handles, five filled boxes, eight pairs of shoes, one Preppy Handbook, five skirts, two blazers, two laundry bags, 21 pairs of socks, four pillows, and one spider plant which is well on its way to that great hot house in the firmament (that's a real college word I found in Roget's).

As far as Orientation has gone, I have already kissed and slapped strange boys, attended countless seminars, eaten these really gross things called 'hoagies', skittered all over campus in order to keep up with my O.C., and have collapsed every night onto my little bed only to prove six or seven hours later that Jesus wasn't the only one to rise from the dead. One would think from the size of the lines around here that I was going to UCLA or, at the very least, a sardine factory. And I am having an awful time remembering everyone's name, what their major is, and whether they live in 'party-hearty hall" or the 'Moriarty mansion'. It poured all afternoon yesterday, and wouldn't you know — right after sprinting at least half a mile in that glop, I had to get my ID picture taken! And this morning when it was already 45 degrees outside, the dorm's air conditioning was on, roaring full-force in the corridors.

There's no one to pick up after me, I'm about to destroy my entire wardrobe with my first attempt at clothes washing (klothz wosh-ing), I don't remember where I unpacked anything, and I have seen about as many slide shows as any person can humanly endure. But last night when I called home, my mom asked if I was having any problems. And you know what I said? "Of course not, Mom! I'm having a great time and I just love it here!" So what if I am terminally exhausted and have a botched-up schedule? I don't think I would want to be any place else!

Bustin' Out With Super Freaks

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Although acts as diverse as heavy-metal Van Halen and jazz guitarist Pat Metheney played in the Philadelphia area, the musical main event of this past summer was Rick James' fiery Spectrum show. Fresh from breaking Presley's attendance records in Elvis' hometown of Memphis, and riding the success of Give It To Me Baby, the single from Street Songs that simultaneously topped the nation's soul and pop charts, James put on a performance that was red-hot, more than a little obscene, and dangerously, outrageously funky.

'Fresh from breaking Presley's attendance records... James put on a performance that was red-hot, more than a little obscene . . .'

Amid a shower of gold sparklers and flashing firepots, the 11-piece Stone City Band/Punk-funk Horns kicked into Ghetto Life as soon as James vaulted onto the stage. He swaggered through the show with the assurance and bravado of a far more experienced entertainer, a kind of hybrid of Roger Daltrey's intensity, Tom Jones' sensuality and Sly Stones' psychedelic frenzy. His band stayed high with him for about two hours, laying down some of the best bottom-heavy boogyin' to soak this reviewer's body in perspiration for quite some time: Big, loud slabs of bass guitar highlighted by lead-footed, exploding drums and sweetened with a dash (Give It To Me Baby is an exquisite example of James' ability to arrange brass) of the P-funkers.

He also demonstrated his arranging talents when Teena Marie, James' girlfriend whose album he wrote and produced, was introduced during their duet, Fire and Desire. James relaxed the framework of this number to heighten the tension in it before her dramatic vocal entry, and their extended theatrics made the live song seem more powerful than the studio version. Lady T then performed an half-hour, captivating set, highlighted by Square Biz and her exhortations towards the audience to, "Talk to me baby!"

But this Friday night belonged to Rick James, and as it turned out, Saturday night did too. When the Friday night show sold out so quickly, a second one was added, and before the Labor Day weekend was over, he set a new Philadelphia record box office gross for a single black artist.

Sure, you can point to Rick James and say that he advocates nothing but sex and drugs: his stage show includes two 20-foot joints that appear during Mary Jane, and dressing his backup singers, the Mary Janes, as hookers who ceremoniously clob-

Vasey Announces Season's Lineup

Villanova Theatre has announced a line-up of award-winning contemporary classics for its 1981-82 season. This year Villanova Theatre will be presenting five plays on the mainstage at Vasey Theatre, and a series of workshop productions at the Rosemont Studio Theatre.

The season opener on the mainstage will be A Taste Of Honey, the vital, funny comedy-drama by Shelagh Delaney. Actor and director Brian Morgan will direct this production, which will run October 14-17 and 21-24.

Blood Wedding, by the brilliant Spanish playwright Garcia Lorca, will be the next production. An epic drama of passion and revenge, the play will run November 11-14 and 18-21. Noted director and acting teacher Irene Baird will direct.

The season will continue in February with a production of Arthur Miller's Pulitzer Prize-winning Death Of A Salesman. Lon Winston, assistant professor of theatre at Villanova, will direct this powerful American classic. Salesman will run February 10-13 and 17-20.

How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying, one of the few musical comedies ever to win the Pulitzer Prize, will be the fourth show of the season. A hilarious satire of corporate life by Frank Loesser and Abe Burrows, Hot To Succeed will run March 10-13, 17-20, and 24-27. Terry Fimiano, acclaimed for her productions of Cole and Guys and Dolls, will direct.

The final production of the season will be the world premiere of Chameleons, a play by Villanova Professor Patrick Nolan, author of the Emmy Award-winning television drama, The Jericho Mile. An explosive script about marital strife on a Caribbean island, Chameleons will run April 14-17 and 21-24. Director for this exciting premiere will be James J. Christy, artistic director of Villanova Theatre.

AT THE MOVIES:

A Glance At Summer Films

By AMY MacLACHLAN and CHRIS SLAWECKI

Summer is the best season for movies. At one time or another we all have sought the comfort of an air-conditioned theater on a hot, muggy summer night. Sometimes we are rewarded by an entertaining, well put together film that distracts us and allows us to lapse into the delightful world of the silver screen. Other times we are disappointed and even bored by a slipshod collection of seemingly thrown together series of scenes and we exit the theater welcoming the heat or the evening which is at least stimulating. To follow is a collection of short reviews of selected summer attractions.

Under the Rainbow

Under the Rainbow, a movie dealing with munchkins and men, should have met its demise on the cutting room floor. Although the possibility existed for this movie to have been well done, any chance of interest was lost on the almost freak show type of attraction for which it was planned. The humor is totally slapstick, bordering on tedium. When leafing through the listings while planning a night's entertainment, don't bother with Under the Rainbow.

Superman II

Superman II holds its place in the ranks of the summer successes. This film has all-family appeal but is more of a delight to the young than the old. Strictly on an entertainment level, high action and dramatic background music run throughout, but a deep plot or any major statement should not be expected. Christopher Reeves and Margot Kidder are the perfect hero and heroine, casting is another strong point. On a scale of one to ten, this film would rate an eight, penalized for almost sophomoric overdramatization.

Clash of the Titans

Clash of the Titans should be avoided at all costs. The special effects are laughable, the plot borrowed and the cast virtually unknown. Boredom rules throughout and the experience of being conned is the only noteworthy reaction felt.

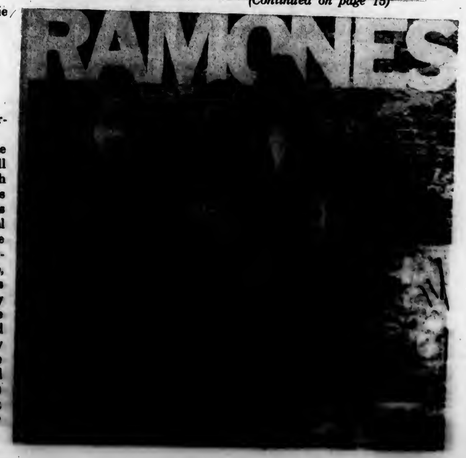
Ramones Rush Airwaves

By PAUL DURAND

The Ramones are an American institution, heralding from New York hey seem to find their way down to the Philadelphia area about every four or five months (they're practically always on tour). However, this past Saturday they played a typical all-out-rocker of a show at Emerald City (Cherry Hill, N.J.) after having been away for over seven months. The crowd was more than ready for another shot of energy from the Ramones.

The four boys are out this time working hard to promote their new album, Pleasant Dreams. Besides touring, they recently appeared live on national television and performed Airwaves, the most popular track from Pleasant Dreams so far. They were also very entertaining subjects of an interview with a less than knowledgable hostess. As a point of interest, when asked, "How did you get the name 'The Ramones'?", Joey offered, "We met in an elevator, and we all happened to have the same last name!" (The studio audience laughed right through the interviewer's questions however they did point out that they still play the same hard-driving brand of rock n' roll as on their first album. This is most easily evidenced in their live performances. They have not given in to the pressures of commercialism like a lot of former rock n' roll bands who have chosen to play softer to become successful. The Ramones have reached the level they're at with very little commercial radio airplay (we want the Airwaves).

At Emerald City, they had the crowd jumping early and all through the show which culminated with such killers as Pinhead and the classic Sheena is a Punk Rocker. All the usual elements of a Ramones show were present: a lot of heavy crowd participation, as in Blitzkreig Bop, the chanting under command as their famous Gabba Gabba Hey sign was displayed, and the screaming teenage girls who would do anything for a thread of Joey Ramone's (slightly) long hair. The show was a knockout! They saved She's a Sensation and Airwaves for encores and ended the night with a second encore set of four songs.



Flowers Won't Grow in the Dark

By PAUL BERN

Darkness and despair is the main theme of the new Public Image Ltd. album, The Flowers of Romance. The music, as well as the lyrics go beyond manic depression to border on suicide. Johnny (Lydon) Rotten of the Sex Pistols is responsible for most of the madness present on the album — he has not changed his style of "singing" since the Sex Pistol days.

All of the songs are characterized by loud percussion, vocals so terrible that they're almost good and somewhat "Middle Eastern sound." The Public Image takes punk one step further and leads one into the darkest depths of one's self, which in their view is not very nice.

Four Enclosed Walls, the first song, begins with Johnny Lydon chanting "Allah". The first real words can serve as a focal point for the album: "Doom sits in gloom in his room." Truthfully, this album is mostly noise but it somehow makes its point.

The P.I.L. takes one further down with Track 8, which brings out all the bad points of a relationship between two people. The song contends that there are aspects of a relationship that we do not like, yet, still "come and play total commitment." The bass guitar is decidedly warped to a point of harmoney with this dismal view.

Flowers of Romance continue the dark relationship theme with more noise. It is next to impossible to determine which instrument is which. It does make some sense when it points out that we can't always "depend on these so-called friends." There is a hint of compassion when Johnny sings "it's a pity you need to defend," but it is no more than a hint.

Under the House can only be described as psychotic. It is a mixture of drums, weird noises, and lyrics that make no sense at all. The preoccupation that this song has with the "single cadaver" that "came out of the wall" and "went under the house" clarifies this album's intention to be music to disembowel by.

Banging the Door is probably the best song on the album. It makes the most sense, the percussion is not overpowering, and the music is fitting, not just noise. Banging the Door deals not with relationships but with one's self. "Go away, it's not my fault you're lonely. Just look around I think you'll find that everyone has the same problem" has an amount of truth to it.

Go Back has the only guitar solo on the album. The solo is something on the order of Robert Fripp, but is seriously damaged when heard with the other instruments. Another good point about this song is that it provides the light at the end of the tunnel and consoles us by telling us "Don't look back good days ahead. Improvements on the domestic front."

The last song, Francis Massacre is not much more than noise. Two other songs, Phenagen and Hymie's Him, the instrumental track, also do not merit any discussion.

The entire album is desolate of anything but depression: it is hell music for anyone who might like to visit (or remain) there. Judged against other punk rock, it is very good because it is not meant to be nice to dance to. The Public Image Ltd. fufill their purpose in demonstrating how dark the dark side of life can be.

Young John Lydon proudly bares his scars.

Go-Go's Got a 'Beautiful Beat'

By STEVE HELMETAG

Although several attempts have been made to establish a reputable female rock band, few critics (yet alone your average music lovers) have been satisfied with the output, at least up until now.

Los Angeles based band the Go-Go's could possibly be the all-girl group people have been waiting for. Originally mistakenly classified as 'punk,' the Go-Go's are essentially a good rock and roll dance band.

After gaining attention last year with We Got The Beat, a dance club hit, the band is back stronger than ever with its debut album, The Beauty and The Beat.

Our Lips Are Sealed, the single from the disc, starts off the record speaking of lies and deceitfulness and how the band has learned to deal with it. Accented by the constant beat provided by drummer Gina Schock, this song offers a nice blend of guitars, keyboards, bass and drums along with a catchy chorus: the basic ingredients (and more) for a dance favorite, which this is likely to become.

One thing that puts this band ahead of other female-dominated acts is the band's writing abilities. Knowing their limited capabilities as musicians, the band chooses to emphasize rhythm rather than complex quitar lines and agonizing endless solos. Led by guitarists Charlotte Caffey and Jane Wiedlin, the lyrics as well as the music, somewhat surprisingly, come off quite well.

In Skidmarks On My Heart the band talks of jealousy, nothing out of the ordinary in itself. However, when the other woman is a Pontiac and your supposed boyfriend would rather "caress and fondle her steering wheel" the song becomes almost too cute, yet somehow still appealing.

Automatic, the only tune penned solely by Wiedlin, is on the same high quality level as the other eleven cuts; yet has its own distinctive flavor. Here, lyrics are minimized, not to lessen their importance but to make them even more meaningful. Unfortunately, this reviewer does not have the space or the freedom (this being a family newspaper) to describe this song in great detail. However, let it be said the song is quite clever.

Being original and also not deviating too far from the norm is what many groups, at least the ones who desire some sort of financial success, strive for. This is what The Beauty and The Beat is all about. Sure, there are the usual songs of jealousy and love gone bad, but on the whole the Go-Go's come across as witty and fun.

As long as the creativity and commercialism is kept at the level it is on this record, the Go-Go's have power to go far.

'Knowing their limited capabilities as musicians, the band chooses to emphasize rhythm rather than complex guitar lines and agonizing endless solos.'

Raiders of the Lost Ark

Raiders of the Lost Ark can be awarded the first place ribbon in the ratings race thus far this year. Although critics are not always right in their sometimes too hasty comments, they were right on the money this time. High action, adventure and a brillant cast line up, combine to make a completely captivating motion picture. Harrison Ford carries his cooly macho image, first created in Star Wars, into (Raiders) with a broadening effect. Director George Lucas has again reminded his public of his genius and has all but guaranteed his place in the movie makers hall of fame.

Tarzan, the Ape Man

Although Tarzan, The Ape Man was panned just about everywhere it played, at least it was a visually exciting and entertaining film. The lush jungle greenery was overwhelmingly breathtaking, the monkeys were cute and playful (especially around Jane), Richard Harris was superbly cast as Jane's egotistical, half-crazy father, and Miles O'Keefe and Bo Derek have enough moves between them to put an NFL backfield to shame. Not much meaning here, though. It's kind of like looking through picture postcards for two hours and wondering what it's actually like to be there.

The quickest way to get emergency money.

These days a trip to the college bookstore can reduce your available funds to some small change. Luckily, that's about all you need to make the one phone call that can replenish your depleted funds in a couple of hours. Here's what to do:

1. Call home. Report the situation, and tell the folks they can get emergency cash to you fast by phone.

2. Ask them to call Western Union's toll-free number, 800-325-6000 (in Missouri, 800-342-6700), anytime, day or night. They charge the money and service fee to their MasterCard* or VISA†

3. Pick up your money—usually within two hours—at the local Western Union office or agent. There are 8,500 nationally, except in Alaska. Conveniently, about 900 locations are open 24 hours. It's that easy.

Be sure to remind your parents about our toll-free number. It's all they need to back you up at the bookstore.

Wallaces' Leftovers are Well-done

By SHARON WINTERS

After two almanacs and two books of lists, one would presume that the Wallaces covered all the swatches of trivia available to modern man; however, this is not so. The People's Almanac No. 3, authored by David Wallechinsky and Irving Wallace, adds a new volume of data to the series replete with new information.

The new almanac analyzes presidents; summarizes self-help books; chronicles the lives of millionaires; explores television and even includes a chapter titled, "Making Lists" — perhaps a short Book of Lists No. 3 or a preview to whet the appetite of the devout.

Basically, one could summarize many interesting passages in the Were Greeted by Bad Reviews" or book; "Great Works of Art Which "Real-Life Robinson Crusoes" etc. The titles prompt interest from anyone who has any curiousity at all.

Quite appealing in this new book, as in the old ones, are the accounts of famous detectives and famous criminals. The events are written as mini-mysteries, gradually unfolding. Heinous, baffling crimes are headlined as "Ellis Parker and the Pickled Corpse Case," sounding almost like a popular murder-mystery novel title. In fact, these stories read like a shortened docu-drama of that genre: "Only one man could provide an alibi for the time the crime was committed. It was illogical for someone to remember what he was doing three months earlier." The detective proceeds to find the evidence against his prime suspect in Sherlock Holmes fashion.

As detectives are made to look like classic story-book characters, famous gangsters are systematically deflated. "Machine Gun" Kelly really was not such a terrible man, nor was he really a folk-hero. He was, in fact, a victim of his wife's publicity gimmicks, according to the Wallaces. Mrs. Kelly "passed out cartridge cases in underworld dives, saying, "Have a souvenir of my husband, Machine Gun Kelly," as part of her campaign to reap riches and glory.

The Wallaces have succeeded in a "pop-art" form that provides very easy reading for the general public. They accomplish their goal of recounting bits of information in easy to digest pieces.

The only problem with such works, that tend to find new information about old mysteries, is that one wonders about the subjectivity of the data. The stories are often written as that: stories. The book, although prompting the reader to think and change an opinion of a historical figure, also guides the reader towards a new feeling about that individual. However, this situation permeates some chapters more than others.

The short-story format, rather than the list-format, tends to be the most subjective simply by the style; it requires embellishment to seem complete. Lists, by their nature, can be sparse and yet satisfying to the reader.

Despite any qualms one may have about the book, it is a welcome edition to the recent tradition of Wallace efforts in this vein. It is a great book to browse through and fascinating reading.

ber a policeman. But, believe it or not, people do like to relax and have sex, at least every once in a while. James does advocate their use as a means of communicating with his audience, and as a means of liberating that audience from what he calls "police over-reaching" and "police brutality." To the uninitiated, Street Songs may seem like just an orgy, but if you look at it from where it was written, which may not be too easy at VU, you'll be Bustin Out (With Some Serious Funk).

Intramural Program Looks Towards Expansion

By BOB CONWAY

"The Intramural Department is more willing than ever to meet the needs of the students," said Intramural Director Ed Geisz. The Intramural Department has the largest student involvement among the campus organizations, however; wishes to improve successful existing programs, and add new events to increase student participation.

Flag football for both men and women will once again head 22 scheduled events the Intramural Department is sponsoring this year. Craig Hudson, who replaced Dino Valente as President of Intramurals, envisions a big improvement in flag football. "We will be very strict on roster changes. Any player who is on more than one roster as of the last of this month will be suspended and games will be forfeited," said Hudson.

Playing conditions will also be improved. Besides Mendel and Austin fields the Intramural Department has gained two new fields. The two new fields are the practice field at the Field House, and the football stadium. Hudson said, "Games will be played under the lights at the stadium twice a week." Both men and women will have the opportunity to play at the stadium.

Stricter enforcement of roster changes and playing conditions will not be the only improvements [illegible] football. "Officiating, which sometimes last year was weak, will be better this year," Hudson remarked. "This year we are going to do our best to get four officials working each game. Last year, too many games were officiated by one or two guys." Not only will Hudson try to improve the quantity of officials, he is also taking measures to improve the quality of officiating as well.

Hudson is taking a step in the right direction in improving referee's skills by using the insights of new co-director Lou Ferry. Ferry, an assistant football coach at Villanova for 22 years, is holding a workshop for all interested officials Monday at 6 p.m. Ferry said, "I will also be around to the games to offer pointers to officials."

Flag football will more than likely be played better than in the past. With the decision to drop varsity football at Villanova many former gridders will be taking a shot at flag football. Hudson warns that there will not be two or three teams fielding all varsity football members. "The rule that states there can be no more than two varsity athletes on the same squad is still in effect," said Hudson.

The improvements do not end with men's flag football. The women's intramural program will also be improved from last year's successful inaugural season. Under the direction of Pam Zurkowski the format will change from touch to flag football. The women, who last year played on Sunday afternoons at the football stadium, will again play on the turf.

The Intramural Department will also sponsor a golf tournament, a fall one-pitch softball tournament and a cross country meet at the Jumbo Elliot Track.

These three events are by no means all the events for this fall. Geisz quickly pointed out, "Each year we ask for new ideas. It is the student's program, and we try to cater to their needs." Ferry is considering a field goal contest some Sunday. Geisz mentioned the possibility of a floor hockey league.

"The point is," said Hudson, "Ed (Geisz) and Lou (Ferry) are willing to listen to the students. They are open to any and all suggestions on how we can benefit more students."

Big East Threatened

By KERRY LYNCH

In the two years of its existence, the Big East has built itself into a dominant power structure in eastern basketball. It has raked in a gold mine in television revenue, while cornering the market in northeast recruiting and making bigger names for almost all eight teams in the league.

Commentary

But the foundation is crumbling. A structure more powerful than the Big East — a force with more money available — is threatening its life. The force is football, the structure an all-sports league dominated by Pitt and Penn State.

The controversy and concern lies in the possible defection of Boston College and Syracuse from the Big East in order to involve their football teams with those of Pitt and Penn State. The issue is merely a balance of power concerning — what else? Finances.

Pitt and Penn State are the major forces in northeast football with their nearly annual ranking among the top twenty teams. Other eastern schools do not enjoy such a reputation. However, Pitt and Penn State are willing to help them out by offering to form a league and with it a television package that means revenue.

But in return they need support for the weaker side of their structure, basketball.

Pitt and Penn State are offering needed television revenue to schools with expensive football programs to uphold. They want to up-grade their basketball programs and as state universities it will be a fairly easy task — especially if B.C. and Syracuse are lending reputation and glory.

The Big East is looking at a trouble spot. It simply can't add football to its participatory sports in order to gain revenue through television time because it has no real football powerhouse to use as a drawing card.

Without a football team, Villanova has no bargaining power with which to make a move if the power of the Big East is threatened. Perhaps even with football Villanova would not have been asked to join but it appears likely they would have ranked along with Rutgers or Temple who recieved invitations. The added revenue through television time and a league seems to be what the Board of Trustee's wanted for Villanova football when they dropped it last spring for financial reasons.

So now they sit at the bargaining table. Each side has what the other wants, neither seems ready to capitulate.

One thing is for sure: Villanova basketball needs the Big East but the Big East needs Boston College and Syracuse.

A Report on Missing Athletes

By BOB CONWAY

It has been five months since Father President Driscoll, speaking for the Board of Trustees, ended football which had been a Villanova tradition for 87 years. This decision prompted the exodus of 54 scholarship athletes. Twenty-four scholarship athletes decided to remain at Villanova foregoing another year of intercollegiate competition.

Many of Villanova's former grid stars are doing quite well at major universities around the country. Lou Ferry, currently co-director of intramurals, was an assistant football coach for 22 seasons at Villanova said, "We (the coaching staff) were really optimistic about the upcoming season, and as you check around, you will see we had good reason for our optimism."

Some of the players who are presently excelling are Joe Borajkiewicz, Chuck Bushbeck, Anthony Griggs, Mark Krevis, Willie Sydnor and Kevin Ingram.

Borajkiewicz and Bushbeck made up a strong punting and kicking tandem for the Wildcats last season. Both have not lost the technique they displayed at Villanova despite having to play their senior year in a new environment.

Borajkiewicz, who last year punted 59 times for a 39.0 yard average, is doing even better for highly rated Florida this season. In Florida's opening game victory, Borajkiewicz punted seven times for a 43.3 yard average. His longest punt went 63 yards.

Bushbeck, had more to worry about than place kicking for his new school, East Carolina. Doctors discovered Bushbeck has Hodgkin's Disease, but Bushbeck has fought it and is again kicking with exceptional accuracy. In East Carolina's first victory Bushbeck kicked six extra points in six tries. Bushbeck did not attempt a field goal. Such accuracy is par for the course for Bushbeck, who last year missed only one extra point in 22 attemptes. Bushbeck also added nine field goals to lead Villanova in scoring last year.

The kickers are not the only athletes who are helping teams around the country. Anthony Griggs is now hitting opposing ball carriers for the Ohio State Buckeyes. Griggs, who led the Cats in total tackle last year was in on six tacles for Ohio State in its opening 34-13 victory over Duke. Griggs, however, is not the only former Nova griddier that has relocated at Ohio State. Craig Dunn, a 6-3, 240 pound bruiser is currently running second-team at full-back, and Tom Anthony, a defensive and a trip to the Rose Bowl.

Mark Krevis, a 6-2, 240 pounder is starting at offensive guard at Boston College.

Willie Sydnor relocated at Syracuse. Last year Sydnor led Nova with 19 receptions for an average of 17.9 yards per catch. At Syracuse, Sydnor, has caught five passes for a total of 60 yards. Sydnor doubles as a kick return specialist. Indeed, one of Villanova's highlights last year had to be Sydnor's electrifying 101-yard kick-off return for a Villanova score against U-Mass. This year at Syracuse Sydnor has returned three kicks for a total of 46 yards.

Sydnor, unlike some seniors, will not return to Villanova in January. Sydnor wished to play football at Syracuse and then return to Villanova to compete for the Cats in track. The NCAA disallowed his wish. However, the NCAA has granted approval to all Villanova players the opportunity to graduate from Villanova providing they do not participate in intercolligiate athletics for the Cats. At this time it is not known who will return to Villanova in January. Fr. Driscoll will continue to honor all scholarships.

Kevin Ingram, who is presently a sophomore at East Carolina, does not have to be burdened with the trouble of transferring back to Villanova. Ingram was one of the Cats' flashiest players last season. Sharing time with senior quarterback Pat O'Brien, Ingram completed 15 of 31 passes for a 48.4%. At East Carolina Ingram is the back-up quarterback. Ingram's lone pass for his new team was a 36-yard strike that went to the four yard line.

The eight players already mentioned are by no means the only athletes who are making the grade at other universities. Beginning with the seniors is a list of the rest of the players and where they transferred.

Amos Coleman did not play in Georgia Tech's upset victory over Alabama. Randy Crofton and the Dalatri brothers are playing at Louisiana Tech. Dave Femovich and John Liszka are playing at Utah. Tulane is Jim Still's new school. Shawn Passman went to Drake. Tom Fitzpatrick and Mike Fallon went to Boston College and U-Penn, respectively.

Some of the juniors who are drawing attention due to their fine play are Al Harris and Tim Robinson, presently at Penn State. Harris played two quarters for the Nittany Lions, while Robinson caught one pass good for 34 yards in the Penn State's win last Saturday. Joe Lucas is getting a lot of playing time at William and Mary. Lucas is a middle guard. Milton Corsey, Ken DeFeo, Deron Miller and Dan Greene went to East Carolina, Memphis State, Rice and Georgia respectively. Steve Tagye and Tom Leonard are teammates at Lafayette.

It is obvious many of Villnova's disillusioned athletes, who just five months ago did not know which way to turn, have landed on their feet. Seeing how the former Villanova stars are playing and who they are playing for it is easy to agree with Coach Ferry that the 1981 Wildcat football team, had the potential to be one of the tops in years.

HOME COURSE: Belmont Plateau

The men's and women's cross country team will have a new look in 1981 with the addition of two new coaches. Dr. Charles Jenkins, a former world class runner at Villanova, will be the head coach, while Robert Shoudt, a longtime cross country coach at high school and college levels, will be assistant, but specifically in charge of the women's program.

After coaching at arch rival West Chester State, coach Shoudt will look towards senior Sue Shea, who finished twelfth in the nationals last year, to head this year's squad. Other top returnees are seniors Amelia Cain and Carol Gilsinger.

Shoudt will have a chance to beat his ex-school tomorrow when the Cats will square off against West Chester State. The West Chester meet is always an intense rivalry but this year's should prove to be much more.

The men's cross country team, minus Sydney Maree and Amos Korir, will open up their 1981 season on Oct. 3 in an intense quadrangular meet against Georgetown, Navy and Syracuse.

The Cats have some top returnees including John Hunter, Marcus O'Sullivan, Brian O'Keefe, Kevin Dillon and St. John's transfer Ross Donaghue.

Villanova once again will prove to be strong but with the loss of two top runners, 1981 will take on a different form.

Although losing three important players, the Cats are deep with five other returning letter-winners.

The doubles teams will require some shuffling due to graduation but veteran doubles players Bonnie Stokes, Jeanne Regnante and Monica Schultz will provide a solid foundation for coach Langran.

An extensive 24-game schedule over 44 days has the Cats visiting Fordham and Seton Hall this weekend.

The Cats will once again look towards seniors Sarah Holyoke, last year's nominee for the Wheelan and Wheelan award, which is given annually to the top volleyball player in the Philadelphia area, and Lisa Ortlip, a top setter and standout basketball player for Villanova.

As the roster has improved over the 1980 season, so has the schedule. The Wildcats will take on some of the East's top teams next weekend in the Temple Tournament.

The Villanova Rugby Club opens up their season tomorrow against the University of Maryland, with three matches highlighting the afternoon which begins at 1:00.

This year's Ruggers look to improve their 1980 record spearheaded by a hardened bunch of veterans and an impressive group of rookies. Co-captains Paul Hartwyk and Dave Lavery will be looking towards fellow seniors Al Coreless, Chuck Kohler and Pat Gallagher in the scrum while juniors Mike Terlizi and Frank Sergiovani will run with the ball, in the "A" game.

The "B" and "C" games will feature many experienced players from last year along with this year's bumper crop of freshmen.

The Ruggers will also compete in a two day tournament at Lehigh during the fall before resting for the winter, and then returning to action in the spring.

The 1981 field hockey season opens on a tough note this weekend as the Cats and La Salle take turns at trying to upset midwest division I powers Michigan and Michigan State.

The Cats open on Saturday at noon against Michigan State and face the University of Michigan on Sunday at 2 p.m.

This year's squad is inexperienced with only five returning letter-winners but a great recruiting year and a fine performance at the Pocono Tournament last weekend has coach Julie Keaveney very optomistic about the upcoming year.

At the Pocono Tournament, freshmen Danine DeBernardi and Robin Garegnaki each scored twice while freshmen Renate Bell, Sue Lore and tri-captain Suzanne Cenly each had single tallies.

Trustees Most Powerful

Who Runs Villanova?

Editor's Note: This is the first of a four-part series entitled "Who Runs Villanova." The purpose of this series is to shed light on how Villanova is governed. This series will be written objectively. Any conclusions can be drawn by the reader. In later weeks, the Villanovan will analyze academics at Villanova, the financial picture of the University, and student life.

BILL CLARK

Despite advances in the past five years by the University Senate involving University governance, the president and Board of Trustees reign as the recognized decision-making power at Villanova.

Decisions concerning rank and tenure, priorities, selection of deans and budget analysis have been initiated by the Senate and its various subcommittees; however, Father President John Driscoll, O.S.A. and the 22-member Board of Trustees hold the final veto power concerning Villanova operations.

"I believe the Senate can and does play an important role in the governance of Villanova," Driscoll stated. "We have adopted a participatory form of governance. The Senate serves as an excellent forum for the exchange of information."

Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A.

Approved in 1970 as a "University legislative body for the University as a whole," the Senate, according to Chairman Warren O. Richardson, "concerns itself with the issues that have University-wide impact concerning student and faculty welfare." Richardson, who assumed the chairmanship in January 1981, considers the Senate "unique." "We are one of the few universities that have a senate that is tri-partite in nature."

Asked if he believed that the President and Board of Trustees consider the Senate as a serious legislative body, Richardson replied, "Yes. Both students and faculty get frustrated by decisions kept 'in-limbo' by the President. The Senate is indeed very valuable in needed areas." A committee is in the process of evaluating the Senate.

"I feel that the Senate isn't fulfilling its purpose. The purpose is to formulate policies and submit them to the Board," according to Student Body President Bob Rosengarth. "It does that, but it really is a useless mechanism because the majority of the motions seem to be pushed in a corner by the trustees, in hope that the Senate will forget.

"With respect to student input on Senate committees, the committees serve no purpose since the students are rarely notified of such meetings."

Former Senate Chairman Dr. Angelo Armenti agreed that frustration is a prevalent feeling. "Whenever 38 individuals all want one goal — they rarely agree. Democracy is difficult. While I was chairman, it was largely successful. It's a slow process, but it does eventually move. There is no illusion, though. The power belongs to the administration."

Article II, Section 1 of the University Charter, under "Delegation of Authority" reads: "In delegating these powers (to the Senate) the Board of Trustees retains unimpaired its independent power to legislate when and as it deems advisable."

Father Driscoll sees Villanova's mission as "two-fold. First, Villanova serves its students by striving for academic excellence, and it also serves its students by enabling them to see their lives in light of God's revealed word — which says that mankind has a destiny which he will achieve if he uses his or her talents. That is what makes a difference between Villanova and other universities. Presumably, students know that before they come here and they come here because they want that."

Board of Trustees member and former Villanova President Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A. stresses that "The Board by its very nature is aloof, because of what it is dealing with. I do think that communication between the Board and students could be better. It has been sporadic rather than planned. The Board feels it should not take the initiative, because it looks like we want to dominate."

"The Senate's function is not administrative but legislative," continued McCarthy. "They legislate in interschool matters, as they may recommend to either the administration or the Board."

While representatives from both the Senate and the Board claim that the working relationship between the two structure is a cooperative and communicative one, several incidents have provoked opposite opinion.

In March, 1978, following established protocol for the selection of deans, the University Senate, acting to "consult and advise the President," recommended two highly-qualified candidates for the Deanship. Rev. John P.

Building of Dorm Possible

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Construction of a new dormitory, east of Stanford and Good Counsel Halls, could be completed by September 1983 if a $3.5 million loan is granted to the University by the Department of Education.

The money the University is applying for constitutes more than half of the $6.7 million allocated to the state by the federal government. The loan would be paid back at a 3 percent interest rate.

Discussing the likelihood of the University's receiving the loan, Rev. George Reilly O.S.A., vice president of university relations, commented, "It's a long shot, but we still feel we have a chance."

Assistant Vice President for University Relations Edward A. Meresky explained further, "We are applying for the maximum you can apply for. Our chances are tough, but we still have a chance. In 1968, we got a 3 percent, 40 year-loan for $2 million dollars to build Stanford Hall and that was one of only two loans given that year in the regional district consisting of four states. It shows it can be done."

If the loan is granted to Villanova University, plans to build the dormitory could be made immediately, according to Meresky. "We had a tentative schedule made up," he explained. "We'd be

AMTRAK Begins Tunnel Repairs

By SARA KELLY

AMTRAK, in compliance with an order by the Public Utilities Commission (PUC), has begun making temporary repairs around the pedestrian tunnel at Villanova Station so that the tunnel will not flood again until permanent repairs can be made.

"We constructed a new retaining wall between the station and the parking lot on the Villanova side of the station. This is because most of the water that runs into the tunnel comes from that parking lot. Our crews are also cleaning out the gutters surrounding the station, because they get clogged up with debris," stated Richard Cooper, structural engineer for AMTRAK.

According to Cooper, several years ago, Villanova University promised to install a grate in the parking lot at Mendel Hall, because a lot of the water that fills the tunnel comes from there. This apparently, has not been done. If Villanova won't install the grate, AMTRAK will pay for the grate and install it if Villanova will let us on their property."

Student Financial Aid Cut

By CAROL ALKONS

A college education has become harder to afford this year due to the rising cost of tuition and the increasing difficulty in obtaining financial aid.

Last July Congress proposed the implementation of a formula, developed in part by the College Scholarship Service of the College Board, which determines a student's eligibility for a federally guaranteed student loan based on college costs, family income and assets. Most of the students who will be disqualified from the loan program under the system are in the $30,000 to $45,000 income program under the system will be those who attend a lower-cost college and whose families are in the $30,000 to $45,000 income range. This program goes into effect October 1.

W. Arthur Switzer, assistant director of financial aid at Villanova, stated that "the redistribution of federal funds is not totally at fault." He explained that this year the amount of financial aid available "failed to grow with the increasing needs of students. Next year will be similar, or maybe even worse."

Approximately 67 percent of Villanova students depend on some form of financial aid, which is "standard for this type of institution," according to Switzer.

One of the programs on which Villanovans rely for aid is the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG) or PELGrant. Most students apply for this in a state-designed financial aid form. Pennsylvanians apply by completing a Penn Grant form.

W. Arthur Switzer, assistant director of financial aid.

"The federal government's computer system determines each student's eligibility index, which we relate to a chart. The government then sends us money commensurate with those reports," Switzer said.

This year President Reagan asked Congress for $600 million — a cut from the billion dollar figure required to meet students' needs — but only $300 million was appropriated. "This left the program almost $700 million short," Switzer stated. As a result, the Maximum Basic Grant has been reduced from $1750 last year to $1670 this year per student. In total, this represents between a $300,000 to $350,000 revenue loss for Villanova students.

> "We suggest that each student take out the maximum student loan."
> W. Arthur Switzer

"This kicked out many middle income families. A great many of our students who relied on this last year can't now," Switzer said.

Other programs whose funding has been affected are the Campus Based Programs, which include the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL), College Work Study, (CWS), and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG) programs. To obtain funds from these programs, the financial aid office applies directly to the government.

"This year we're looking at a $600,000 reduction from last year for these three programs," continued Switzer.

According to an official from the Federal Department of Education, "the NDSL program has been cut by $100 million nationally, but the funds in the SEOG program are the same this year as for the '80-'81 academic year." No figures on the CWS program were cited.

Some Villanova students have received aid through the Nursing Grant and Loan program, but, as Switzer pointed out, "There is no new Nursing Grant money. There was a little left over from last year that we were allowed to use this year, and we did — for our neediest students," This program, he said, is gradually being phased out.

State grant programs are also being cut back. This year Pennsylvania contributed approximately $250,000 less than last year to students at Villanova, and New Jersey state funds dropped from between $60,000 and $90,000 last year to about $40,000 this year.

"We try to distribute the dollars as evenly possible as we can. We suggest that each student take out the maximum student loan. There are students with a need of $2,900 to $3,000 (before a loan) that we just can't help," Switzer explained. "We were very much concerned about taking care of our neediest students. This year 20 percent of Villanova University Grant dollars went to Freshmen. The other 80 percent and all of our federal dollars were reserved for Upperclassmen. Upperclassmen get first priority."

Switzer figures that the direct loss of aid revenue for Villanova students is approximately $1.25 million. "We'll know better by the end of the year. But take direct loss of dollars and add the increase of students' needs and there results a total shortfall of $9.25 million."

Commenting that the amount of aid available is "grossly inadequate to students' needs," Switzer added that "It remains to be seen" if many students will be forced to drop out next year, but that he is "more concerned with what may happen next semester."

Frats to see Changes

By LISA M. FEDERICO

The Interfraternity Council, led by President John Jackson, will initiate an effort to make positive changes in several aspects of Villanova's Greek life. This year the I.F.C. will be aided by Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities and Sue Tronoicne, coordinator for west campus residence life and assistant for Greek life to Bonas.

Villanova has had Greek societies for several years but this is the first year that a staff member has been assigned to work with the I.F.C., along with other student organizations. Both Bonas and Jackson feel this arrangement will be beneficial to all of the societies, and will yield positive results.

Jackson anticipates a noticeable difference in the organization of the I.F.C. In previous meetings minutes were not taken and records of various activiteis were not kept regularly. This year plans include the taking of minutes and the recording of proposals and ideas for future reference.

Among the changes foreseen are revisions in the present I.F.C. constitution. Included in the revisions will be a change in the present judiciary system of the societies. In particular, the change iwll involve the committee that rules on infractions and hazing violations.

As in the past there will be three members representing the I.F.C. on the committee, three members from the university administration and the director of the committee. In past years any decision ruled by the committee could be changed by the vice president of student life; however, under the new proposal the final decision would be made by the committee and the chairman, Bonas. Thus the students will have equal representation in decisions made.

This year both Jackson and Bonas look forward to increasing the amount of activities in which the societies participate, and making them beneficial to the community by way of service projects.

Loans Decrease

By KATHY SCANLON

Educational funds are undergoing substantial cutbacks under the Reagan Administration.

Last year, from June 1980 to May 1981, Villanova received $890,666 from ten various government programs and grants. Of these, the IAG (Institutional Assistance Grants) involves the largest amount of money. Last year the sum totaled $450,400. This money is unrestricted; the University is free to use it for equipment and other such general areas. It does not have to be designated to a specific educational program. The amount granted to the University is based on the number of attending students receiving financial aid. Due to the recent cutbacks, fewer students are receiving financial aid. therefore the IAG will decrease as well.

According to Edward Morosky, assistant vice-president for development, it is too soon to pinpoint what programs at Villanova will have to be cut. "The federal fiscal year does not begin until October 1, and as of yet, appropriations have not been passed. Therefore, specifically how these cuts will effect Villanova is impossible to see at this point."

"Student loans are definitely more difficult to receive. In the past, any student could be guaranteed a loan towards his education, regardless of how high his family income. This is no longer the case."

The general situation is expected to get progressively worse over the next two to three years of Reagan's administration.

Trustees, not Senate, Hold Power

O'Malley, O.S.A., was named by Father Driscoll over those chosen by the committee. This raised questions concerning the committee's value in the dean search procedure.

At the time, Father Driscoll commended the Senate committee for their "basic work of screening candidates." He alluded to "other factors" that the committee supposedly did not consider. Most committee members believed one of those factors to be the need for an Augustinian to administer the last non-secular academic dean position.

Senate member Dr. Bernard Reilly then asserted that it was a "mistake." Perhaps someday we will operate here as in an ideal world — decisions will be collar-blind." (the Villanovan, Jan. 26, 1979.)

"It was a very touchy situation," admits Armenti, who was chairman at the time. "The Senate had followed established protocol and was disheartened to see its recommendation turned down. The President is responsible and was not bound by the Senate's candidates."

Commenting on when the Board would reject a Senate motion, McCarthy said, "We always listen, except where it affects the two missions of the university, that is, when it is financially irresponsible or it destroys the values and traditions of the university."

Twice annually, the executive committee of the Board meets with the Senate executive committee "to air out some very serious questions and priorities." "There is communication between the Board and the Senate," emphasized Richardson.

> "We have adopted a participation form of governance. The Senate serves as an excellent forum for the exchange of information." Fr. John Driscoll, O.S.A., Villanova University president

"Those early executive meetings were tense," related Armenti. "They were almost confrontational in nature. The students were accusing the Board and a feeling of distrust was prevalent. Some of the 'explicit' questions led to a tense atmosphere."

In February 1981, the Board of Trustees gave its approval to an increase in tuition for 1981-82 ranging from 13 to 16 percent and an 11 percent average boost in faculty and staff salaries. The Senate had not yet reviewed the proposed increases because of budget deadlines that had not been met. According to Richardson, "There is a time element problem; the process should be speeded up to allow all the committees to analyze the proposals. It's a problem we're working on."

> " I do think that communication between the Board and students could be better." Fr. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., former Villanova University president, chairman, Board of Trustees

Consequently, the Senate approved the budget by a narrow 13-11-5 vote. Richardson admitted that the vote was "anti-climactic." "It wouldn't have mattered if the Senate hadn't passed it. The budget would have remained the same." The reaction to this again aroused serious questions as to the power of the Senate at Villanova.

Driscoll, however, differs with Richardson. "The Senate does have a chance to have input on the budget, as was the case last spring."

Article VIII, Section 8 of the Senate constitution entitled "Committees" reads: "The Budget Committee shall monitor the development of the University budget." . . . to make certain that the "major interests of the University are in accord with University policies, priorities and resources."

"The Board will listen only when there is a unanimous vote, either one way or the other," stated Armenti when recently told of the disagreement within the Senate concerning the budget vote. "They conclude the Senate can't make up its mind when it has a close vote, so it gets passed."

Another example of a lack of communication between the legislative bodies would be the decision of the Board of Trustees to drop football as a sport last spring. Included in the realm of the Senate is the Athletic Advisory Committee. The committee has the jurisdiction to recommend policy changes to the Senate in the area of athletics. The constitution states that the scope of the committee "shall include intercollegiate athletics on varsity or club basis . . . ." Changes advised by the Senate are given priorities and, if acted upon, are submitted to the President for consideration.

When asked if the Senate had been notified of the decision to cancel football, Richardson said it was not. "No, the Senate was not aware of the decision until everyone else was. We knew Father Driscoll had a special committee analyzing the football situation."

Private Funds Still Available

By DOUGLAS EARL

Financial aid analysts foresee no significant change in the amount of funds allocated or procedures used by the private (non-governmental) sector to aid students. They stress that private awards, such as merit scholarships and foundation grants, will probably continue to make up a very small proportion of the financial aid that is offered.

Sheryl Belli, associate director of public relations for the College Boards said, "Clearly I think that one of the things that's going to happen is that families are going to have to pick up more of the load (of reduced government aid)."

Echoing Belli's pessimistic outlook was Marilyn Ballas, senior editor of media relations for the College Scholarship Service (C.S.S.), who said, "We suspect that in 1982 the guidelines (for financial aid) will be even more severe. Everything will be more severely affected in terms of income guidelines."

"Kids, if they haven't done so, should run and get their loan applications processed by October 1 (before new governmental guidelines limit many families whose income is above $30,000 from obtaining a student loan)."

C.S.S. helps prepare guidelines for private and governmental aid to use in determining a student's needs.

Ballas said that it is important to realize that the government is still the major source of aid to students, and students should explore governmental aid possibilities.

When seeking private aid Ballas said that students should check their respective department's scholarship programs.

With the appearance of no substantial increase in private aid to students and the large decrease in governmental funding for financial aid, Arthur Switzer, associate director of financial aid for Villanova, was asked about the alternatives available to parents and students to counteract the government's reduction in aid. Switzer said, "We're encouraging students and parents to let Congress know their feelings because there will be further cuts in 1982 and 1983. I don't want to be pessimistic, it's awfully hard to know. This year students and parents are willing to make exceptional sacrifices to attend Villanova. The question is where is the limit?"

AUGUSTINIANS

"HOW CAN I MAKE MY LIFE WORTHWHILE?"

One way may be to live within the Augustinian Fraternity. When you come to live with us, you observe and participate in our community life for several years before making a final commitment. You observe that we are a religious community following the charism of St. Augustine and "that together and with one heart in brotherhood and spiritual friendship, we seek and worship God and we labor in the service of the people of God." We serve in colleges, high schools, parishes, foreign missions, campus ministries, retreats, hospitals and military chaplaincies.

looking for September 1983 to have it done."

Designs for the new facility have already been drawn up by the architectural firm of Ewing Cole Cherry Parsky of Philadelphia. "The dormitory would look like townhouses from the outside," said Morosky. "They would look more appealing to Radnor Township."

According to a member of community development in Radnor Township, who wished to remain anonymous, Villanova University has not submitted a proposal for the dormitory. "They would have to submit something first before any decision could be made," she said. However, she noted that the land is zoned for institutions.

A great need exists for a new dormitory on campus, according to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life. "There is much more demand for resident space than we can accomodate, and a new dormitory would take some of the strain off the halls that are overly tight," said Neville.

"In many ways, the campus is a residential campus and the more residents you have, the stronger that comes through. Also, there is a whole population out there — law students and graduate students — that we never thought of.

Neville noted that with a decrease in undergraduate enrollment possible in years to come, the new facility could be used to accommodate graduate and law students. "From all we can see," said Neville, "the demand is there now and will continue to be there. It makes alot of sense to build a new dormitory." Neville expressed doubts, however, about whether the $3.5 million loan would cover all expenses involved, such as furniture.

The University will learn whether it is to receive the loan by October 1. Asked what alternative measures will be taken if the loan is not granted, Neville replied, "We would reconsider our priorities. Whether we would try to raise the money ourselves is a question."

Morosky said the application for the loan will be considered according to five basic criterion, including: Whether the applicant was residential prior to 1976; Use of existing dormitories, Current housing deficiency; and Impact of proposed project.

"Villanovan" to Offer Scholarship

The Villanovan has announced the formation of the "Villanovan Scholarship Fund" to help offset cuts in federal student aid programs.

The scholarship fund will be open to all students from economically disadvantaged backgrounds who show academic promise. Students from any major or class may apply for the scholarship.

Decisions on scholarship recipients will be made by Villanova's Financial Aid Office. Applications will be made available in January, 1982. Decisions about recipients will be announced by March 31, 1982.

Monies for the "Villanovan Scholarship Fund" will be procured from many sources. In addition to fund-raising activities by the Villanovan, contributions to the fund are encouraged. All checks should be payable to the "Villanovan Scholarship Fund."

Senate Holds First Meeting

By BOB HERMAN

The Villanova University Senate held its first meeting of the 1981-82 school year last Friday, Sept. 18.

Senate Chairman Dr. Warren Richardson opened the meeting by reviewing the minutes from the Senate's last meeting during the spring semester and then welcomed the new senators to the meeting.

Richardson then reported on correspondences from Father President Driscoll. In his correspondences Driscoll announced that he had approved three recommendations proposed by the Senate last year.

Driscoll has appointed Daniel T. Regan, a teacher in the philosophy department to be the athletic advisor for student scholarship athletes. Regan will monitor the athlete's normal progress towards degeee and encourage the student-athlete to achieve his/her maximum academic potential.

Driscoll also approved the parking policy recommendation proposed by the Senate last year. This recommendation dealt with the priorities of on-campus parking.

The final recommendation approved by Driscoll will allow classes the Wednesday before Thanksgiving vacation to be cancelled. This policy will be implemented in 1982.

It Comes as No Surprise

On Feb. 10, the Board of Trustees voted to increase tuition by 12% to 16%, completely ignoring Senate input on the budget. Some people were surprised. On April 15, Father President Driscoll announced that the Board of Trustees had decided to discontinue football. Many people were surprised.

To those who have an understanding of Villanova's Board of Trustees, these actions come as no surprise.

Villanova's charter has established the Board of Trustees as the all-powerful group at Villanova. Even though the University Senate was formed in the early 1970s to give students and faculty some voice, it poses no threat to the Board.

No, the Villanovan staff was not surprised either. Students are not permitted to see minutes of Board of Trustees meetings. We are merely given brief written summaries of their meetings, and we usually wait for months to even receive them. We are still waiting for the summary of April's Board meeting.

The Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board, is quoted as saying that communication between the Board and students is sporadic. We feel that is an understatement.

The prospects of changing the present situation are not good. Such a change would require much more than token gestures, such as allowing the Student Body President to speak before the Board at one meeting. It would require a complete re-structuring of the University.

In the meantime, things will continue as always, and Villanova's decisions will be made by 22 men and women, who remain virtually anonymous to us.

Student Safety Has Enemy

The situation involving student safety from the main campus to the west campus will remain the same for at least three years. The bridge will not be fixed; the tunnel will remain a hazard, also.

Since college is supposed to be a learning experience in and beyond the classroom, what are we to learn from this inaction? Perhaps we should try to understand the bureaucracy. Forms and reams of paperwork are the means by which our sluggish society moves. This has been the only effective manner of improvement for conditions in this modern age.

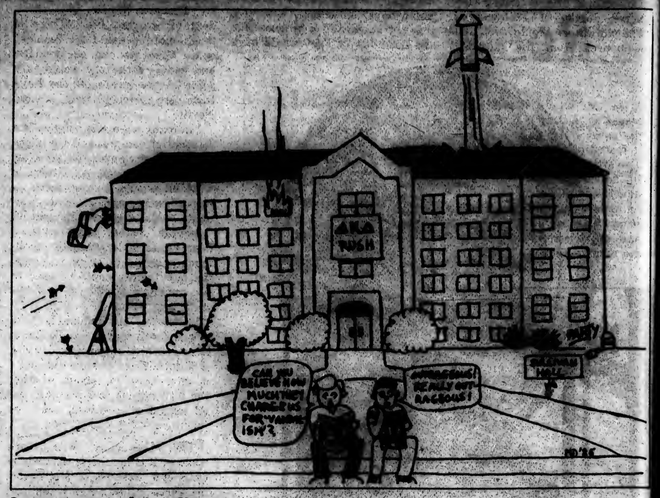
Bureaucracy must be understood because it is the method for progress. Besides, to cite a maxim, an adversary must be known before it can be defeated. The Gordian knot of "red tape" can only be severed by one who has the courage to substitute a new order, a more modern system.

Let us learn from the inaction of others to perform with responsible action. The courage and the ability to cut the mass of "red tape" may take years; but, with deliberate, consistent effort we might learn so that all the "bridges" in our lives do not remain on paper forever.

Goodbye, and Good Luck

At the end of this month, Mrs. Agnes Jones, secretary for the vice-president for student life, will retire after many years of service to Villanova.

The Villanovan wishes Mrs. Jones the best of luck in her future endeavors. She has always been friendly, and was a pleasant addition to the second floor of Dougherty Hall. She will be missed greatly.



Letters to the Editor

Thank You Extended to All

Students attending this University often hear reference made to the "Villanova Community." What exactly is this much talked about "community?" After my recent involvement in the New Student Orientation Program, I feel fortunate enough to have witnessed, what I consider to be, an example of the real Villanova community in action.

On September 9, approximately 110 Villanova students, along with the administration and several faculty members, welcomed the Class of 1985. Their's was not a token welcome, but a carefully conceived program that culminated nine months of preparation and hard work.

It is this type of dedication that exemplifies what real community is all about. Students, administrators and faculty, who care about one another and who are willing to give, of their time and energies, to make life here as meaningful and as enjoyable as possible.

It is with these thoughts that I commend all of those who made the design, development and implementation of Orientation 1981 possible. Most of all, I thank the Class of 1985, for providing us with the chance to show that Villanova can really be for them.

Sincerely,
Matthew D. Mitchell

Friendship Requested

I am writing you in the hope that you will print this letter. In doing so, you may be able to help me turn back the tide of loneliness that threatens to engulf me.

I am a 31-year-old convict, Catholic and college educated. Although I have a wide variety of interests including art, literature, creative writing, chess, philosophy, and sports, I fear that without significant ties to the realities of the outside world, I may become as alienated and insensitive as the men I see about me each day.

In short, I am hoping that some of your readers may care to extend their friendship to me through the mail. I can assure you that such efforts will be met with my heartfelt gratitude. Thank you.

Reagan's Policies May Work in Time

In March of 1965 Time magazine featured economics as the cover story; more specifically it featured Keynesian economics. The article was very optimistic in its belief that the United States now had the tools to control national economic problems. The story juxapositioned economists and physicists, removing us from the unpleasant association with other social scientists. The cure to the historical cancer of recessions and inflation was found in a drug called Keynesian demand management, a mathematically precise tool that could fine tune a national economy. The economic profession gained in stature in the 1960s, but the 1970s proved to be a decade of embarrassment.

The decade of the 1970s began with a war that drained resources; it included a ten fold increase in the price of crude oil; and ended with a period of progressively higher inflation, interest rates, and unemployment coupled with declining productivity, and real income. The dialectic process intensified in the late 1970s and new ideas have evolved, evidenced ironically by the newest issue of Time magazine which features Reagan economics or more formally neoclassical theories.

It is this observer's opinion that the neoclassical theories will dominate the 1980s, and they probably will be viewed as successful. That success will come from the new approaches themselves and also because of gratuitous factors, such as a declining rate of growth in the labor force and stabilization in energy prices. The theories associated with Reagan economics encompass many technical considerations, but the essence of this new approach is relatively simple to grasp. To begin with, the underlying principle guiding almost all new policy is the reliance on the free market. Neoclassical economics obviously has its roots in the classical tradition of the nineteenth century and therefore one should expect a strong leaning toward laissez-faire. Laissez-faire, or the minimization of government intervention in the economy, faced its ultimate demise in the 1930s. The British economist, Keynes, provided governments with the rationale and the methodology to reject laissez-faire, and Keynes' theories provided for almost five decades of progressively more government intervention in national economics. The shift to more reliance on the free market and laissez-faire at the macro level will not occur over night, but the seeds will be planted, and, in fact, have been planted in Reagan's first six months.

Reagan economics are associated with two terms that have become familiar to most Americans. The first is what is called supply side economics, and the other is a theory called monetarism. Supply side economics is a theory that has its roots in classical economics. Keynes rejected the classical supply emphasis and replaced it with an emphasis on production, and Keynes believed that to emphasize production would not provide for production and employment at socially desireable levels. Therefore, Keynes proposed to define production at a socially desireable full employment level and support that level of production with sufficient purchasing power or demand, even if government had to become the customer of last resort. The supply side critics argue that in the last two decades under Keynes' theories, the government has become more than just the customer of last resort; in fact, given the tremendous growth of the government sector, the government is becoming an equal partner. The supply siders reject the Keynesian approach of demand management, arguing that it has been ineffectual, and has strongly biased the economy to inflation, and has resulted in the increase in the power of government.

Supply side economics as manifested in Reagan policy decisions should result in the encouragement of production. The neoclassical (supply side) view is that production and the resulting employment can best be encouraged by increasing business profits. Therefore policy should emphasize tax cuts, the elimination of regulation, and other factors conducive to business expansion.

The other term that is in circulation is monetarism. Monetarism has its roots in classical economic thought, but its present formulation is associated with the Nobel Prize economist from the University of Chicago, Milton Friedman. Monetarists believe that the money supply is the key variable in an economy. Also, the contend that inflation is a monetary phenomena. That is, inflation is caused by a nation's inability to control its money supply.

The Reagan policy team is composed of both supply siders, and monetarists. Most of the supply siders have monetarist leanings and vice versa. Given this makeup the average citizen can expect and has already gotten the following. First, the elimination of government regulation, the elimination of price supports, and other impediments to the rule by the free market. Secondly, the nation can expect a movement to balanced budgets because government deficits are viewed as the reason for money supply growth and its resultant inflation. The balancing of the budget will primarily come about from spending cuts as opposed to tax increases. Because supply siders view increasing taxes as one of the basic causes of the decline in the incentive to produce. Also, most Reagan people are philosophically committed to reversing the trend in the growth of the government.

Will it work? There is little disagreement from economists and financial professionals as to the need for change. The budget deficits of the last twenty years border on irresponsibility. Most participants in the markets would agree that the government has encroached too far, and has sapped the strength of business and household incentive. Therefore, given time, things should improve. But whether American can regain its world leadership in economic growth and living standards depends on factors beyond economic theory. John Stuart Mill and other classical economists viewed national economics as political economy and there lies the key. Economists are not physists, especially in a democratic society. The Reagan administrations ability to have long run beneficial effects on the American economy will depend on their ability to work their neoclassical ideas into the democratic process.

Dr. Clarke is an Associate Professor of Economics at Villanova University. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Notre Dame.

British Violence Solves No Problems

Young people sometimes find themselves in situations over which they have no control. While one voice tells them to have faith in justice and truth, another tells them to do anything in order to win; while one voice tells them about the pleasures of the nude human form, another tells them to save it until after marriage; while one voice demands they get a job, another explains that to get a job, you need experience, which you can get only by having a job. Sometimes, young people get very angry.

This summer, such anger carved a bloody, vicious chapter in the history of what has been called the most civilized nation in the world, as thousands of British youths spent their summer vacations burning down entire city blocks and warring with the police. And, from across the Atlantic that graciously granted us distance, inside air-conditioned living rooms, the children of America watched.

It is almost needless to say we disapprove of violence and destruction and murder; the questions of by whom and for what are necessary. Violence is always best unapproved by mere violence, unless necessary, and whether or not the violence solved anything is another question.

But, while we disagree with the blind form their rage took, we applaud the spirit of that rage. To quote from a rather political song, written by a black man and entitled Johannesburg, "I'm sad to see the blood start flowing, but I'm glad to see resistance growing." There is much to be concerned about, in England, South Africa and America, and youth is the time for wonder and contemplation and, above all, concern.

Concern is best demonstrated neither by blowing up what you are supposed to be concerned about, or by casting a vote and then sitting back to drink a six-pack as you watch the election returns on the television. Concern is a highly personal thing. It requires time and emotion and patience and thought. It is kind of like helping a blind dog over a fence, regardless of who owns the dog or the fence or what made the dog blind. We're all in this together, remember, and mindlessness, whether manifest in destroying or maintaining the status quo, isn't part of the solution, but part of the problem.

A metaphor for life...

Baseball Players Strike Too

It is possible to divide the world into two kinds of people: those who see life as tragic or ironic and those who see things in absolutes, as black or white. Norman Rockwell spent a lifetime sketching an Americana that was as wholesome as it was fictitious. He saw what he wanted to see and created a picture for all those who would believe.

Spring training takes place in March and Ty Cobb played every game to win. But in 1981 there were exhibition games on August 8 and in 1927 Ty Cobb and Tris Speaker were suspended from baseball because of allegations they had conspired to fix the last games of the 1926 season. If only everything were what they told us it was.

What do the postal workers, air controllers, Philadelphia school teachers and baseball players have in common? The same thing that pro football players will have on their minds next summer. The world of sports is not immune to events in the "real" world. It never was and never will be. "Say it ain't so, Joe," but nevertheless it is true. The uniform or mask you are wearing does not obliterate the society within which you live. That is a hard lesson to learn when you grow up on Walt Disney and apple pie, but if you read Roger Kahn's Boys of Summer carefully, then you were ready for the Summer of '81.

Sports is a metaphor for life. It always has been and it always will be. It is ironic and tragic, as is life, and it brings with it celebrations and funerals. Last year in these pages I wrote of the spiritual redemption experienced by loyal Phillies fans which came from the events of the 1980 World Series. Last Saturday my alma mater was crushed by Michigan 26-7 on national TV for everybody to see. But the living live on and on Sunday I saw my son score two goals in his first soccer game. If you wait long enough life will deliver all that is meant to be.

So from this vantage point it is hard for this observer of Sports-world to linger over the lost summer of '81 that never was. Sure, I missed going to the Vet. Sure, I would love to see Steve Carlton win twenty games again. Sure, I would rather see Bob Boone in uniform and not a three-piece business suit. But then again, back in March I picked the Astros and the Royals to repeat in their divisions, and if it weren't for the split season, I wouldn't have had a chance at being a successful prophet. Like the man said, you win some and you lose some. And in the end the only thing that matters is whether you took your swings.

The rest is in the hands of the gods.

Reaction to Op-Ed

The Villanova University Orientation Program hasn't been around for a very long time, but in its short time in existance, it's been through many changes. These changes are only due to the drive, determination, dedication, and yes, even love, that each and every staff member has for the program, its goals, and each other.

Apparently, Amy MacLachlan didn't take the time, or the interest to look at the Orientation program of TODAY! Her comments were about a program of yesterday; one that doesn't exist!!

Those "stupid" games all have a purpose behind them. It is apparent that the goal was met because you are still talking about those games — probably to the people you played them with. Do you really think you would have gotten to know any of those 21 people in your group without the assistance of Orientation? I doubt it. I am certainly glad I met those 21 special people. They have become some of my best friends through my life at Villanova.

Finally, a note about the counselors . . .

I can confidently say that each and every one of them are an example of unselfish caring, understanding and the Villanova spirit. Each of those "brightly clad mother-hen counselors" should be commended instead of put down!! They have given up the end of their summer, they AREN'T paid.

I am very happy and proud to have been a part of Orientation '81.

Sincerely,
Beppy Wallace
Steering Committee
Orientation '81

Dear Miss MacLachlan:

I feel very sorry that you don't understand the reasons behind this sort of a program at Villanova and other major institutions around the nation. It's a shame that your orientation wasn't the way you had imagined. However, for most, the first few days at college is both an enriching and memorable experience. Being an Orientation Counselor for the freshman class, I can honestly state that the program was sound, and the people who organized the activities performed their tasks quite professionally.

The purpose of Orientation is to help make that transition from high school to college as smooth as possible for the freshmen. By the end of orientation, these students are confident and ready to enter the Villanova Community. They are not entering college as you suggest on the "bottom of the totem pole with fragile egos." If I sound a bit upset — I am, because I can't believe that you are criticizing the concept behind orientation.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Father Martin, Matt Mitchell, and the rest of the staff for a job well done! Most people don't realize how much time and effort they put forth into the Orientation program. I would also like to extend my sincere appreciation to all of my fellow O.C.'s and A.A.'s for giving me the greatest two weeks that I've ever had!! I hope that the Class of '85 shares my enthusiasm.

Sincerely,
David Glickman,
Class of '82
O.C. Group No. 61

To the Editor:

Picture yourself as a 1982 incoming freshman. You are assigned to group 44, and Amy MacLachlan is your orientation counselor.

Day 1. Your O.C. greets you. She's clad in a Cinderella-type ball gown. Her letter to you in August clearly stated that you had to wear a Pierre Cardin outfit. That's what you're in. Remember, this is college.

Within 3 hours, you are in agony. The clothes are too warm. Your new $54 shoes are worn out from the campus tour. You've been given so many study tips that you can't remember how to study. There has been such a plethora of intelligent pre-planned activities that you can't think anymore. The group plays scrabble. Amy wins.

Day 2. Still, no one has cracked a smile. C'mon, this is college. Stoicism is in.

Lunchtime. Your O.C. makes you tuck in your napkin. You're not allowed to slurp the soup.

10 p.m. The Group sticks their noses in the air. The O.C.'s is the highest.

Day 3. The group plays chess. Amy wins.

Day 4. Whatever happened to those good 'ole Icebreakers? You know, the ones that, through their utter simplicity, made you feel comfortable with yourself and others?

6 p.m. Orientation is over. You can't stand your fellow group members.

Day 5. Classes begin. You are very uncomfortable with college life. But your O.C. loves it !?!

Joe Marusak
Freshman, A&S

This is in response to last week's article, "Freshman Orientation Criticized" (9/18/81). As a preface we would like to state that this letter is not a criticism of the Villanovan staff, but rather a reaction to the obvious misinformation and lack of research Miss MacLachlan displayed.

We are sorry that Mis MacLachlan did not enjoy her Orientation of September, 1978, but to criticize the New Student Orientation of 1981 is a gross injustice to the program as well as the staff that worked so hard to implement it.

The success of the New Student Orientation Program can be best verified by the overwhelming and enthusiastic response from new students, parents and administrators. In addition, this response has only increased during the past years..

The goal of Orientation is to make the New Students feel at home as an integral part of the Villanova Community. To establish this, each new student must feel that they share a common ground. This ground is achieved through workshops and expert sessions, including icebreakers. Icebreakers are all researched, discussed, and taken from the works of Pfeiffer and Jones, both of whom hold Ph.D.'s in their respected fields. They are not taken from a grade school teacher's recess planning booklet, as the purpose is neither to embarrass, nor to poke fun, but to build group unity and interaction among peers. No one is forced to participate. As important as Academic Workshops are to the program they can not be successfully implemented without a relaxed, friendly atmosphere. Further, the O.C. is neither a "mother hen" nor a Joe-college type, but a mature, responsible, well trained and concerned leader who was selected after a two level interview process and goes on through a valuable, intense week of training. He or she has volunteered precious time for purely altruistic purposes in order to insure the success of the program.

Perhaps Miss MacLachlan's editorial should have been better titled, "MY Freshman Orientation 1978, Criticized," rather than Orientation Criticized. We feel the Program was a success and have had no doubts of its success since our diligent work began last November. Long live the New Student Orientation Program, a true show of a dying art . . . school spirit. Class of 1985, This One Was For You.

Dear Editor:

Concerning the opinion expressed by Amy LacLachlan in the Villanovan last week regarding New Student Orientation, we would like to present another view of the program.

Orientation is a well planned, carefully structured program which entails more than the four days that the freshman, ". . . waddle around like a new born chick behind . . . brightly clad mother hen counselor . . ." and playing ". . . idiotic games probably taken from a primary school teacher's recess planning booklet." Each Orientation Counselor was trained for seven days after going through a very competitive selection process. The steering committee and student chairperson (Matt Mitchell) put much time, effort and energy in before the OC's were even selected

Those so-called "idiotic games," known to OC's as "ice-breakers," had a specific purpose: relieve tension, and help everyone get to know each other in a relaxed atmosphere. As to the "inane highlights" mentioned in the article, (group poster contests and concerts featuring the Star Spangled Washboard Band), none of this happened during Orientation 1981.

Everyone we know who participated in Orientation 1981 found it an excellent experience. This one was not for "them," as Amy MacLachlan states, but for us — the Villanova community. Orientation 1981 ran smoothly and achieved its goal of helping the new students become familiar with the University and fit in with less difficulty. We worked hard to do our job and know we did it well!

Rather Visits Channel 10

(Reporter Enters Dreamworld)

By KATHI IANNACONE

"It's not as glamorous as I thought," remarked the slender young student perched in the chair aside me in the studio. To him it may not be glamorous, but to me the studio reflected every dream and aspiration that had ever entered my mind.

Up at 6:30 a.m. to make it to Channel 10 by 8:30 a.m., I eagerly jumped out of bed ready to trek through the rain to see Jane Whitney interview one of the most prestigious reporters ever. Dan Rather was the distinguished guest.

While entering the studio, expecting to see many technicians, chairs, and much studio equipment, I turned the corner only to see an intimate room decorated with earth-toned wallpaper and an abundance of greenery encompassing the stage. Hundreds of bright studio lights were set in places to avoid shadows. The heat was already penetrating.

Anxiously awaiting the start of the show, I gazed around the room with my heart in my mouth, wishing and dying to someday be involved.

Dressed in a red and black renaissance print dress, the nervous, yet somehow obviously confident Miss Whitney entered the room. Coffee in hand and checking the available monitors every second, she seemed to have put tension in the air, and now all of the curiosity about the show was soon to be solved.

People began to converge upon her, immediately testing every light and camera angle. She seemed almost indifferent to the situation that surrounded her as she scanned the audience only to spot a varied group.

Older ladies chatted idly about the style of her dress and hair. A multitude of journalism students thrived on the thought of getting out of their classes to witness such a show. Scattered throughout there were the average businessmen and their wives who were obviously looking for something different to do.

Suddenly the lights rose brighter and a burning sensation flushed our heads as the cameras turned toward the audience for focus. The cameras were huge and monstrous in size.

As the seemingly important producer instructed the crowd how not to look silly or how not to peek at themselves, a tall, distinguished man of medium build and height subtly entered the studio.

It must be Rather, I sighed as my heart sank five hundred feet and as my eyes stared at the graying man without a blink or reflex. All I could hear were the comments being uttered around me; "He looks so much older in person", "Why am I nervous, I'm just watching." I didn't care how he looked; I was in awe. He just had confidence radiating from him.

"Two minutes" the cameraman yelled, and everyone immediately scattered to their places.

The show opened with the tape of Walter Cronkite's closing comments on his last CBS T.V. news broadcast. Cronkite announced that Dan Rather was to take over the nightly news. Whitney broke in and began the interview.

Rather appeared to be a humble man and he discussed the fact that what made him so successful was that "he wanted it." He noted that happiness is wanting something and getting there. Rather remarked that every day, he continues to learn. He always strives to reach the next plateau through hard, dedicated work — needing just an element of luck.

Everyone is so business like. There is no emotion; all are just doing a job. Rather explained that he can't help but let emotion sometimes enter into his stories, but it's determination that gets the job done. "You have to want it," those words ring through my head again. "I want it!" It "all seems so hard but somehow all worth it.

My journalism teacher sighs a pang of relief as Rather stresses that the basic fundamentals must always be present. No matter what the story is, it needs a person who knows how to handle it effectively.

As the show winds to a close, Rather got his last comment in, "It's fun if you like it. It's not all glamour, but you don't do it for glamour; you do it because you want it." (Oh, those words again).

Lights down, clear the studio. Crowds tried to surround Rather as he was pulled out with ease. Trying to get in closer to attempt to ask one last question, I pushed my way into the crowd, notebook in hand and those immortal words "I want it" silently emitting from my lips. I got closer and closer. Unfortunately, his smile met me and "hello" was all I got out of my mouth as he was escorted away. It wasn't the story that I "wanted" but somehow at that point, it was enough . . .

Senior Seminar Program

By PRICILLA BODNER

Career Development is once again conducting the Senior Orientation Seminar Program. The program includes a step by step process which guides the student through On Campus Recruitment and specific Career Planning Programs.

On Campus Recruitment Programs provide the Villanova seniors with an opportunity to be interviewed by several companies. While they are served in a convenient setting, they are also acquiring interviewing techniques and experience as well as the possibility for the promise of employment.

In addition to the On Campus Recruitment Program, the Career Planning Program offers a variety of assistance workshops in resume writing, effective job searching techniques, interviewing skills and the possibility of graduate studies.

Paul Kenney, acting coordinator for the Career Development Program, along with Mary Lou Cabbage and Rita Wittner, serve as staff and recruitment officers for the center.

Located in the lower level of Corr Hall, the Career Development Center is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Staff members are on hand to aid seniors in any or all of their future plans and concerns.

Children's Hobby Brings Adults Bucks

By ROBERT CONWAY

Back in the days when your blue jeans were always dirty, and a baseball cap always on your head, chances are good that you spent most of your allowance on baseball cards. The cards were a part of your life. Those cards magically transformed a local sports hero to your own personal hero. From then on, the Red Sox were no longer just a team, they became "my" team.

There was always some boy on the block who turned into a champion "flipper". Even girls, if they were cool, had baseball cards clothespinned to the wheel of their bike. What a sound that made!

As the boy grew into the man baseball cards became less and less important. Eventually, mom threw away all of those treasured cards. Treasured cards? If you are one of those individuals who had shoe boxes filled with baseball cards which mother has since disposed of, read on.

The collecting of baseball cards and memorabilia is among the fastest growing hobbies in the United States, with more than 300,000 active participants. Many baseball cards, which may be collecting dust in your attic, could be worth a tidy sum of money. All of the cards are worth more than you paid.

An example of a baseball card that is worth much more than you paid is the Topps Rod Carew 1972 card. This card, assuming it is in mint condition, is sold for $28 according to the best selling book, The Sport Americana Baseball Card Price Guide, by Dr. James Beckett and Dennis Eckes.

The Topps 1972 Carew card is by no means the highest priced card. That honor belongs to a Honus Wagnor card. The most recent sale of that card (four are believed to be in existance) netted the owner over $13,000.

In the Topps baseball card sets, which has been putting out baseball cards since 1952, is the brand most of us are familiar with. Since 1955 Topps has had a monopoly on producing major league baseball sets until this year. Fleers and Donruss joined Topps in the market in 1981.

In case you were wondering, the 1952 Topps set sells for $9,000. The most expensive Topps card is the 1952 Mickey Mantle which sells for $1,500.

Tomorrow, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and again on Sunday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the George Washington Motor Lodge, the 11th Philadelphia Baseball Card and Sports Memorabilia Show will be held. You can once again see your heroes in those poses which were once ingrained into your head.

This 1964 Topps Baseball card of Pete Rose is worth about $12.

Dick Sisler, son of hall of famer George Sisler, and Gene Benson will be in attendance to sign autographs. There will also be a special guest appearance by the Phillie Phanatic. The main attraction of this convention, however, will be the 7 million baseball cards on display.

The price of cards is only one aspect of the hobby. Many collectors purchase cards for sheer enjoyment. Opposite the picture of all baseball cards are the player's statistics and/or interesting anecdotes.

The reverse of the 1964 Pete Rose Topps card reads: "Pete was voted the 1963 National League Rookie of the Year. The switch-hitter was second on the Cincinnati Reds in hits and batting last season. A real speed-demon, the youngster led the Florida State League and Sally League in triples."

Like all of us, even Pete has grown old. Some, however, just stay youthful longer.

STATION MAINTENANCE — Amtrak workers cleaned out drains and raised the retaining wall behind the train station this past Monday, as part of the repairs to try to stop the tunnel from flooding. They are also installing a new drainage system in the Amtrak parking lot between Mendel Hall and the train station. For more on this, see story on page 3.

My, my ... VSAC is quite surprised this week at the volume of mail received about Amy MacLachlan's Orientation Opus ... one of the letters was signed by 64, count 'em, 64-Orientation peoples ... now at least we have a complete list of Blue Key and DKN members ... But hey guys, this one's for YOU! ... nah ... nah ... V ... for Villanova ... Did you hear that Villanova's planning on building a new dorm? ... with bars on the windows ... fire-retardant furniture ... and R.A.'s from Graterford State prison ... just like Good Counsel ... will Tessy and Becky be brought back as wardens? ... will hall fronts cover? ... Where will the money come from to build this dorm? ... We hope that Villanova's not counting on using the money from the damage fees ... We know that no one's paid yet ... and after next week ... no one may have to ... Stay tuned for details ... Next semester, one of the Villanovan's own photographers will be teaching a class called Catholic Statuary 1001 ... but then again, we can't really blame him for taking the wrong picture last week ... covered with bird droppings, all saints do look alike ... and speaking of droppings ... we'll refrain from saying anything about the Union's recruitment meeting last week ... or about the fights during the leadership weekend ... we wish we had that kind of money to waste ... by the way ... Irene, do you really snore that loud? ... This week's Villanovan ad poses some provocative questions ... Tell us, Jane, do you really get it once a week? ... What is it that you get? ... How much of it do you get? ... and from whom do you get it? ... Who knows, and we certainly don't care...

U.S. Bonds Upped In Value

By KATHI IANNACONE

"With a Top 15 single called This Little Girl and an ebullient comeback LP called Dedication, Gary U.S. Bonds proclaims, 'I'm back into rock'n'roll — where I belong'," as quoted in a recent article from People magazine.

Bonds was first viewed by the "U.S." 21 years ago when he entered into the business as the deep-voiced youth, Gary Anderson. At that time he immediately hit the charts and rocked the nation with a Top 10 single New Orleans.

Bonds is a Florida-born only child of a science-math professor and his piano-teacher wife. At the age of three he moved to Norfolk, Va. where he began his career singing on local street corners.

After dropping out of high school in his senior year, Bonds sang informally with a group called the Turks. Later, he went to college for two years and then at age 19 he cut his first record.

Bonds was influenced by the Rhythm and Blues pioneers Sam Cooke, Clyde McPhatter and Bo Diddly. In his first three-million-selling records New Orleans, Quarter to Three and School is Out, Bonds mimicked their style.

Clubs and oldies shows became Bonds' source of livelihood as the Beatles slowly bumped him off the charts. Rock changed but Bonds still believed that there was a place for him in the music world.

Recently, Bonds was spotted sitting at one of his hometown night clubs by a man who went on to give him a boost back into the music world. This man, Bruce Springsteen soon became a great supporter of Bonds. Springsteen gave him two songs which were intended to be for his own album, The River. Also, Springsteen financed all of Bonds' recording time, went on to produce part of his album and sang backup vocals for these donated tunes. It was in deep gratitude to Springsteen that Bonds deemed his latest LP Dedication.

As quoted in People magazine, Bonds commented, "There are people who let you know they believe in you and you try not to let them down."

Tonight Bonds value will be upped in a dedication to rock'n'roll. The performance will occur in the Field House at 8 p.m.

Art Department Supplies Gallery Works

By NICK CORRADO

[The] art and art history depart[ment] offers a bachelor of fine arts [degree] which 35 four-year majors may [choose]. The courses range from [the] art history to modern art, [to] include studio and liturgical [art]. Many of these courses are [offered] at Rosemont College and are open to art majors only.

But academics is only a part of what stems from this office. "There is rarely a day when there isn't an interesting, culturally fulfilling exhibit in the art gallery in the Connelly Center," Cheri Leibold commented. Bro. Richard Cannuli, O.S.A., director of the art gallery and professor of studio art, is directly responsible for these displays.

Beginning on Sept. 30, there will be an exhibition on Main Line impressions. This is a collection of works of art which were created by people in this area. This production is sponsored by the Sun Company and the Main Line Chamber of Commerce.

Stretching from Oct. 8 through to Oct. 30 will be the biggest exhibition of the fall semester. "Faith and Vision," a display of contemporary liturgical art, will unveil many detailed exhibits. The most anticipated of these arts will be the mass book used by Pope John Paul II in his visit to Philadelphia. This mass book was hand lettered by an artist especially for the Holy Father's visit.

Starting on the first of November will be an elaborate display of children's art hung on clothes lines. These are special projects of students in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

Raising the curtain on Nov. 5, Lynn Nercessian, a second semester senior art major will display her personal oil and water color paintings, sculptures, and pottery. All graduating art majors are given a week during their final semester to display the finished products of their year's work.

The nationally known Fourth World Exhibit holds a two week show beginning Nov. 11. This production, which was at the United Nations last year, is a collection of photographs taken over a period of 30 years. The theme of the program is danger, overcrowding and noise.

Finally, December 4, will begin a three-week exhibit in which students will be able to see staff and faculty members show their artistic talents.

Growing Band Wins Area Contest

Local Schoolboys Pass the Test

a , sponsored by MR-FM, in which over 300 were subjected to a panel posed of WMMR's John dwell and Joe Bonadonna, the Inquirer's Chuck row, and Ripley's Music Hall r Stephen Starr, eight bands selected to perform at Rip- in August and September. Af- these performances the win- were named: The Schoolboys, Wayne, Pa. They won a MR live broadcast from Rip- on September 22nd, a "first " contract with EMI ords, and eight hours use of n Village Recording Studios. he Schoolboys are a five-man d. Danny Hall, 21, sings and rhythm guitar; Brian Brick- 21, plays lead guitar; Scott klin, 19, plays drums and harmonies; Scott Adams, 23, keyboards; and Jimmy ts, 21, plays bass. All their songs are written by Brian and Scott Bricklin. They are managed by Larry Goldfarb; their producer is Joe McEnerny, who produced the Reds new album. The Schoolboys have performed at Stars, the Penalty Box, the Main Point, Emerald City, the Norris Theater, and Trax in New York.

In 1970 Brian and Scott Bricklin formed a band known as Open Road, which evolved into the present Schoolboys, with them as the nucleus. Their lineup has been the same since 1978, when Danny Hall joined, and they get along well: "We're best of friends." The Bricklins have written over a hundred songs for the band, fifty of which they still perform. Of their earlier career, Scott says, "We played the high school route, and a couple of Main Point shows where we did very well, mostly using the name Open Road, which had a very big following." In 1978 they took a major step forward when they got their managers, Goldfarb and Delfinger, although Delfiner has left. "Larry Goldfarb knows the business, and he's educated us."

At the time they were making demo tapes at Veritable Recording in Ardmore with the goal of a record contract.

All the members of the band are excited about the contract with EMI and the radio broadcast. "This looks like it could be the one thing that might do it for us," Brian says. "The record contract — that would be great. If they like us, we're set." About their slow rise, Jimmy Goetz says, "People go to college to get a degree and they might not find a job. I've gone to my own music college here, and we might not go anywhere. But we might go everywhere." The band members have generally been supported by their families. What about people who tell them they can never make it? "Then you say to them, 'Are you happy with what you're doing?' Then ask somebody that writes songs or who performs in front of people when their happiest moments are and what they'd rather be doing."

"I always knew that I could never be in the mode areas of humanity," Danny Hall says. "I could never sit at a desk. If you stay in one thing all your life, you're missing out on so many things, it's ridiculous. I want to experience a lot of things before I'm six feet under."

"The reason that kids go to see a rock-and-roll show is to get excited," Goetz continues. "And when you perform, you get excited, too."

The band members agree that their most thrilling show for them was on August 25th at Ripley's Music Hall for the WMMR contest. After they had finished their first encore and were in the dressing room relaxing "a guy came up the stairs and says, 'You gotta go back on right now.'" He came back two minutes later, insisting, and the band complied. Downstairs the audience was chanting for another encore, about to destroy the club. "I said to myself then, 'This is great. We're on our way.'"

They have just had a slow climb, and they have a long way to go. "Now we're just playing it by ear," Jimmy says, "and playing, giving our hundred percent, practicing every night and hoping."

"It might sound headstrong," Danny says, "or even a little ridiculous, but I would like to be as huge as the Stones or the Beatles."

Not Yet 'Solid Gold'

By GREG ANTON

Music is an art with two traditional purposes. First and foremost, it is to entertain; secondly, music is to be a medium of communication, a podium for social commentary. When an artist ascribes to either of those two genres in their purest forms, he clearly establishes his purpose and intent. However, to successfully combine these two requires a skilled technician, one who is willing to pursue a more difficult and powerful art.

Yet, today there is a tendency to fall short of this third realm. Musical entertainment and social commentary are combined, but both are sacrificed as a result. This is the inherent problem of the post-punk movement today. It fails to clearly define its purpose and creates an incoherent and directionless music. The Gang of Four is one group that falls into this category. Having good, raw music talent and a keen, perceptive writing ability, the Gang of Four have the potential to utilize the often elusive "third realm of music." The lack of focus and true initiative, however, makes the Gang of Four simply just another post-punk group.

In their second album, Solid Gold, the Gang of Four speaks of a decaying society, one which has chosen to ignore, alienate and suppress its youth. An objective evaluation of the current situation in England reveals this as being a somewhat realistic and sobering account. Rebellion, anarchy, and the possibility of a new society was once the source of hope and salvation passionately professed by earlier groups, especially the Sex Pistols. This hope is not found in the Gang of Four's music. It is despondent and melancholic. It is

Hespe's: No Haven

By JERRY ARTH

Most people are under the impression that those who do restaurant reviews are refined gourmets, connoisseurs of fine food who read books by James Beard and actually know how correctly to use the adjective "elegant." But while I may be unconscionably deadened out of the Craig Claiborne Fan Club for saying so, I am one food critic who will admit that he has absolutely no idea of the difference between a Bearnaise and a Bordelaise or a soupe and a croissant. And quite frankly, I couldn't care less. I know what tastes good, and feel that a restaurant should be judged on that criterion alone. And that's why I wouldn't recommend Hespe's in Wayne to my worst enemy. Because although the food is good and virtuous critics would say) is pleasant even though marred by the presence of half the Main Line's petit bourgeoisie; and the menu looks attractive. However, it does not live up to the "Continental" delights it promises.

To start, the appetizers which my companion and I sampled were not only overly-expensive, but did not taste at all pleasant. There were only six Little Neck clams ($3.20) in an order, and they were unforgivably sandy. The baked mushrooms stuffed with crab meat ($3.20) might have been good had not the mushrooms been stuffed with a loaf of Wonder Bread and little else, let alone anything that tasted like crab. The obligatory salads were meager, covered with an ample portion of the blandest ever Italian dressing in recorded history.

In all fairness, the entrees were not terrible. The filet of beef alla Diane ($16.95), a quite generous name for steak with a Burgundy-based sauce, was quite tender if not very flavorful. And the Scallops Sauteed Almondine ($10.25) contained scallops that were not rubbery, though their distinct lack of flavor also was not endearing.

But where Hespe's truly failed was with its desserts — in particular, with the chocolate mousse ($3.75). Even an admitted gourmand such as myself knows that mousse is supposed to be wonderfully light and airy. Hespe's version was thick like a cheesecake, and had that delightful taste that only something left uncovered in the rear of a refrigerator for three weeks can acquire.

So should you go to Hespe's? Haven't you read the previous paragraphs? Don't go. Save your money. Go to the Denny's across the street from Hespe's: the food is probably just as bad, but at least it's cheaper.

There are Games and Games

By SHARON WINTERS

Playing at its least is mere entertainment, simple amusement to pass the time and relax. Pastimes like crossword puzzles, scrabble, wordplays and logic puzzles have been around for years.

At its upper level, play can be an all-encompassing, enveloping enterprise that ends all too soon. In other words, there are games and there is Games.

Imagine puzzles within puzzles. Consider a word find/connect-the-dots. First circle all the words according to the clues, then connect all the first letters to form an image. Or, try to solve a crossword with two sets of clues. Analyze a picture and attempt to figure out which figures are real and which are mirror reflections. Then find a path out of the mirror maze.

If these double puzzles create interest; try Games. Games is the most enjoyable magazine ever published. It is also the most annoying for two reasons: the puzzles are hard to put down and the magazine only comes out once every two months.

The magazine is virtually singular in purpose. The graphics and photographs, although nice to view, involve a puzzle of some sort. The short stories are about games. Most of the advertisements are geared to puzzle lovers. The magazine even includes a fake advertisement in each issue as sort of a puzzle.

Games begins the fun, in each issue, immediately. The cover of the magazine either contains the clues for a game that is buried somewhere inside the issue or serves as a gameboard on its own. The September/October issue has a colorful mosaic on the cover. The object of this picture is to identify the particulars at the stand, although in most cases all that can be seen is the first letter of the logo.

For the veteran game player, Games includes a hidden puzzle in every issue. Any would-be sleuth must search through all the other brain teasers to find the secret game; that task accomplished the puzzle must be solved. The "Letters" segment of the magazine shows that some hapless souls discover a game that never existed, at least not in the eyes of the editors. Others, luckier and more skillful, manage to find the buried entertainment.

The "Letters" section holds more than results of difficult mind-benders. It also gives [illegible] to propose his own game and to accepted as an equal.

Games, oddly enough, has contests involving puzzles. Unusual is the key word to these tests. A past issue had a word game that involved playing odds. The idea was simply to pick out a word from the [illegible] placed [illegible] rest of the games in the issue giving the magazine a "community" feel. Each reader can [illegible] on [illegible] It had as its first of all the tries in alphabetical order.

The magazine has a puzzle every taste, every frustra level. The only problem, which been previously mentioned, is once the reader has finished the issue, either in victory defeat, he must wait two very months for the next set challenges to arrive.

bitter and full of despair.

The Gang of Four emphatically presents its viewpoints in its songs. These viewpoints are also re-emphasized in another medium, the artwork on the album's jacket. Solid Gold is a portrait of a decaying and declining social order. It is being witnessed and carried on by all. Yet, the majority of the blame falls upon the predominant, capitalistic middle class. They have been too worried about "keeping down the price of gas" to realize they have created a disillusioned youth. The petty, capitalistic bourgeois have been isolated too long from the essence of life and are too intertwined in their own private hell to recognize their failures.

Lyrically, the album is superb. It is an educated and intellectual articulation of the English youth's woes. Musically, the album is only average. The group does have a vivacious and distinct sound, however, most songs are too overpowering, unpolished and harsh. Why Theory, with its droning vocals, In the Ditch and If I Could Keep It For Myself are the worst numbers on the album. The best numbers combine the fine musical abilities of the group with urgent lyrics. A big problem, though, is that often the lyrics are incomprehensible.

What We All Want is a realization of the current grim situation. Jon King, lead vocalist, dejectedly admits, "This wheel spins, let me off. It's not the best of times, can't put my finger on it." The song progresses with a driving bass and strong percussions, leading up to the forceful and abrupt ending. King asks, "Could I be happy with something

Starship Singer Fails to Fly

DEAN BALSAMINI

Alone by Mickey Thomas the newest release from K- records — although it very could be. In case you are of it, Thomas used to be d singer for the Elvin Band (Fooled Around and Love) and since 1979 has been the lead singer for the Jefferson Starship.

The problem with Alive Alone, Thomas' first solo venture, is that there is simply no musical direction and the lyrics lack any true substance. The album contains ten tracks that are either poorly reworked cover versions or weak songs contributed by other writers. The result is an album that is quite jumbled and rather pretentious.

The talents of such people as Don Felder (of Eagles fame) and George Perry (who has worked with Joe Walsh) have truly been wasted here because of thin material and misdirection.

Side one contains typical "Rock n Roll" music that has been done hundreds of times. She's Got You Running, and the sappy title track Alive Alone are examples of this. Maybe Tomorrow is an unconvincing love song highlighted only by Don Felder's strong backing vocals. On the track Following every finger, Mickey Thomas makes a feeble attempt at reggae, which probably has Bob Marley turning over in his grave.

You're Good With Your Love, written by Eddie Schwartz (who also wrote Hit Me With Your Best Shot for Pat Benatar) is a catchy tune but contains the mundane lyrics, 'Rumor has it you do handsome work/you just got in from Paris/or was it Newark?'

On Survivor, the Cindy Bullens hit of a couple of years back, Thomas fails to project the raw sound of Miss Bullens and the guitars bark but don't bite! On Badge, originally performed by Cream, Mickey Thomas' whining does not do justice to the haunting vocals of Eric Clapton.

The one likable track on this album is I Don't Wanna Talk About It, a song written by Brett Bloomfield, a 22-year-old musician from San Francisco. The song, although simple lyrically, is quite fresh in it youthful enthusiasm. An unknown band called The Kids helps this song hit the mark with their infectious backup vocals.

Produced by Bill Szymczyk (the Who, Eagles, Joe Walsh) Alive Alone is an album that tries to please everyone and winds up pleasing no one. Mickey Thomas has said that the success of this solo will determine whether or not he will return to the Jefferson Starship. But after hearing this album, will the Starship take him back?

else? I need something to fill my time." He knows all too well the answer: "What we want's not what we get."

Outside the Trains don't Run on Time presents a typically ludricrous view of the middle class. What they see as a cause, the Gang of Four sees as an effect. The song declares, "Discipline is his passion, now he says there's none. Order's his obsession, order's his obsession, now he says there's none. Outside the trains don't run on time. He believes it's no coincidence, he thinks some punk will drag him down." This is a case of the innate failure of the white-collar worker to realize that the "Punk" is a product of the years of unemployment, unequal opportunities and disillusionment.

A Hole in the Wallet is the most challenging song on the album. With its snazzy, funky beat, it is the most musically polished and professional song on the record. However, the message takes on no focus or direction and the lyrics come off as scrambled, incoherent, a chaotic collection of words. It seems to be satirizing traditional corporate attitudes when it states, "Why work for love if it shows no profits, you'll only earn emotional losses."

The album is filled out with Paralyzed, Cheeseburger The Republic and He'd Send in the Army. They deal with such varied subjects as war, corporate power, blind faith and servitude. Solid Gold needs a more committed Gang of Four. Their direction is lost. Its intense lyrics are too often shouted and distorted. Its music is not that entertaining. At best, one can only hope the Gang of Four will mature and develop its art on its next project. Such potential is rare these days; one hopes it is soon realized.

Football Flashback

By LARRY GOANOS

As we all know, the Villanova University Board of Trustees has recently reaffirmed its decision to drop football from the athletic program. It seems as if the board's overriding concern was the team's financial deficit; all sight was lost of the many positive factors which football contributed to Villanova. The whole situation cannot, contrary to what the Board of Trustees may believe, be measured in dollars and cents.

Editorial

Being a sophomore, I have experienced only the last of Villanova's 87 football seasons, yet that was enough to give me an understanding of what the game brought to this insitution.

The first game which I saw was especially memorable because it was also my first assignment for the Villanovan. After wading through an incalculable mass of alumni and students who were intermingling at the numerous tailgates, I arrived at the near-full stadium. The Villanova fans, almost totally clad in blue and white, had turned out in a resounding force on that sunny afternoon to watch what was expected to be a Wildcat victory over the University of Richmond. Unfortunately, the Cats committed eight turnovers and subsequently lost the game, 21-7.

As I quietly filed into the Villanova locker room along with the other writers after the game, I remember being amazed by the heavy emotional atmosphere which engulfed the room. The frustration and anger of a bitter defeat loomed densely in the air. Yet, I was even more surprised at the players behavior. No lockers were kicked or beaten. No profane words were screamed. This team was well-disciplined and sportsmanlike, qualities such as these are becoming exceedingly rare in today's athletics. Coach Bedesem impressed me with the courteous and honest answers which he supplied for my questions. His patience was further tried by the insignificance of some of the questions which I asked him as a new and inexperienced reporter. He could have justifiably ignored them, yet he answered each with the same amount of respect which he accorded to the writers from the major Philadelphia papers.

The only other game, which I covered, was against the Delaware Blue Hens. Although the Cats played well, they came up on the short end of a 17-7 score. This loss dropped the Villanova season record to a disappointing 3-5. I [illegible] vividly recall standing outside the Delaware locker room listening intently as the Blue Hen's coach, Tubby Raymond, spoke. A good friend of Bear Bryant's, Raymond is one of the winningest and most respected coaches in the nation. His first words were, "I respect some of their kids. O'Brien and Long came over to congratulate me. They've got some really great kids on that team." I remember at that moment that I thought to myself that Raymond's remark was a very odd one for an opposing coach to make about a team. Then I think that I realized that this team was unique, it had a certain character which brought a reflection of honor upon Villanova University. Yet, I felt certain that it was only typical of the 86 squads which had preceeded it.

In summing up his remarks on that chilly autumn afternoon, Coach Raymond said, "It's a great rivalry, that's what college football is all about." Obviously not everybody agrees with Tubby Raymond; to some, college football is merely a matter of dollars and cents. Fortunately, the Villanova University Board of Trustees cannot drop the community spirit, pride, and honor which make this University what it is. But undoubtedly they have eliminated a big part of it.

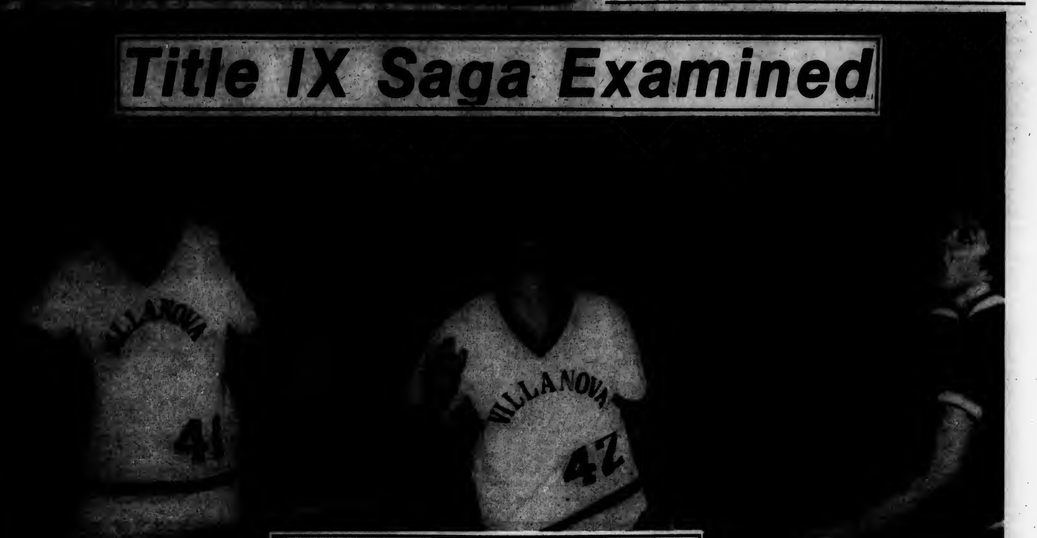
Title IX Saga Examined



"No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational activity receiving Federal financial assistance." — Title IX of the Federal Education Amendments of 1972.

By MICHAEL HEALEY

Title IX is a vastly misunderstood and hotly debated legislation which roughly translates to men having the same opportunities as men at all educational levels. It pertains not exclusively to athletics alone, but all aspects of educational life: school courses, services, extracurricular activities, etc.

The real furor over Title IX was in the area of collegiate athletics and was raised by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA). The NCAA felt that the implications for complying to the law were far too severe and the implications too broad. The NCAA filed against Title IX from the start and eventually succeeded in changing the dates for compliance extended.

Many colleges associated with "big-time athletics" (i.e. Oklahoma, Pittsburgh, U.C.L.A., Texas, etc.) had great difficulty in complying with the law because of the cost in upgrading women's programs. Dean Billick, assistant athletic director at the University of Pittsburgh, put it this way: "Of course, complying to Title IX took a bit out of our pocketbooks. We increased our funds to women's programs by a vast amount. But we were committed to better our women's sports."

The most visible changes in college due to Title IX came in the areas of women's scholarships and growth of women's competition. According to the September 27, 1977 edition of The New York Times, "In 1970-71, only 60 colleges offered women's athletic scholarships. This year, 460 schools do."

Among those 460 schools is Villanova. Mary Anne Steenrod, Villanova director of women's athletics believes that, "Title IX affected Villanova a great deal. It added a substantial amount of scholarship money and overall, a substantial increase in the women's athletic budget which provided better uniforms, more travel expenses, etc." One sport which certainly profited by the increases in scholarships, for example, is the women's basketball team, which in the last three years, has earned the reputation of an Eastern basketball power.

Villanova's athletic department also complied with Title IX by providing equal facilities for women. One example is the locker-shower room addition built a few years ago at Saint Mary's Hall. Another is the extensive renovations in facilities at the Fieldhouse. Dr. Ted Aceto, Villanova athletic director, states, "Girls here at Villanova have equal locker rooms, facilities, and the same access as the men to physical therapy, swimming pools, and the gymnasiums." Figures regarding the costs of improvements and the men-women scholarship ratio were unavailable.

Although Title IX prodded Villanova into improvements of the phsyical plant and increases in women's scholarships, Aceto feels that, "We were steadily improving the women's programs so that even if Title IX hadn't been implemented, we would have had a program started anyway."

The current status of Title IX has changed from its original form. Last March, U.S. District Court Judge Charles W. Joiner stated that, "Schools do not have to provide equal athletic opportunities — which is to say equal money — for men's and women's programs unless the sports in question receive federal funds." This decision, of course, raised more than just eyebrows from the proponents of Title IX.

A classic misconception of the American public is that Title IX merely meant equal funds for women's athletics. The aim of the law is not duplicate programs but equal opportunities.

But there is a new twist in the Title IX saga. President Reagan is, in part, opposed to Title IX. That is to say, if a football power like Alabama or Michigan earn $5 million a year from football revenues, then that school should have the right to do whatever it desires with the greenback, or so believes Reagan. In essence, the school has no obligation to pour funds into the women's program.

iladelphia Textile flexed its nally ranked muscles as it ded a rusty Villanova soccer with an 8-0 shut-out last rday. The Wildcats' defensive were pushed to the limit in first half continually fighting hreats to their territory but, with the occasionally great nsive play of fullback Joe tica, couldn't hold out through second half.

ter taking a 3-0 lead Textile inated play, virtually making event for Villanova to be on offensive attack. "We were ed up at midfield, and we had real passing game," said ck Dan Regan.

integration in the latter part e game was explained by Lynch. "We need to pace lves better. We don't have it now because it's early in the n. Facing games as you play ." With necessary integration the Cats are all with a minimum of experience. "We're a young team," said forward David Houghton, "And we have a long way to go."

WOMEN'S TENNIS

The women's tennis team opened up their season on a negative note, losing their opening two matches to Temple and Fordham last weekend.

The Cats were shut-out in both matches, losing to Temple, 8-0, and then dropping the Fordham match, 5-0.

The Wildcats will continue their pressure-packed schedule today when they travel to Widener for a 4 p.m. match. The women then travel to St. John's Saturday, before returning home to host Mt. St. Mary's on Sunday at 1 p.m.

WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY

The Villanova women's cross country team finished third in a tri-meet last Saturday against local rivals West Chester State and Pennsylvania. Despite the loss, a fine performance was turned in by freshman phenom Mary Ellen McGowan. The first Villanova finisher, she took seventh place covering the course in 19:53. Eva Mari Berardi and last year's All-American Susanne Shea finished ninth and eleventh overall.

According to rookie Coach Bob Shoudt, "The tri and dual meets are actually used as warm-ups to the second season" and the two most important meets of the year, the eastern champs and the AIAW National Cross Country Championships." Shoudt further noted that, "All of the hard work, from running very rigorous practices of at least six miles a day, and the experience gained from up-coming meets will pay off if we reach our ultimate goal of qualifying a team for the nationals.

The tournament will be held today (Friday) at the prestigious Merion Golf Club West Course. Golf teams from LaSalle, Pennsylvania, Temple, Villanova and St. Joseph's will vie for the team title which was won by Temple last year. Coaches, athletic directors/sports information directors and members of the media will also play in the tournament.

Cats Split Weekend Series Against Michigan Powers

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The Villanova field hockey team defeated Division I power Michigan 2-1 on Sunday after suffering an opening day loss to Michigan State.

Villanova and LaSalle hosted the two Michigan schools in a pair of doubleheaders last weekend. Saturday's opening game did not turn out as well as hoped as the Cats lost to the Michigan State Spartans, 4-2. Bright spots for the Wildcats were goals by junior Regina Graham and freshman Danine DiBernardi. Senior tri-captain Sue Comly assisted on both.

Villanova was matched up against the Wolverines of Michigan in their second game. Neither team dominated the first half, but at halftime the visitors held a slim 1-0 lead. With 15 minutes gone in the second half, DiBernardi took a pass from Comly and put it past the Wolverines' goalie. The winning goal was scored on a breakaway by freshman Robin Garczinski with the assist by Graham. The Villanova defense allowed only one goal and were led by freshman goalie Lisa Buschmann and sophomore sweeper Karen Wallin, both of whom made some excellent saves for the Cats.

When asked what the key to winning this second game was, coach Julie Keaveney replied, "We overcame the 'stage fright' from the first game. We did not hold back but played our own game and took over in the second half."

Assistant coach Debbie Havrilla commented, "We outplayed our opponents in both games, but we beat Michigan because we supported and backed each other up with our passes."

The victory should prove to be very beneficial to the team. Junior Kathy Brynes stated, "It's great to beat a Division I team in the beginning of the year. It will help us emotionally because we will be playing a lot of tough teams."

Even though the team is very young and building, Coach Keaveney has an optimistic outlook for the rest of the season. "We have the talent and potential to do surprising things if everybody works hard and puts out."

The Wildcats' schedule this year includes such rivals as LaSalle, Lafayette, Widener, and West Chester. Games next week include Kutztown at home and LaSalle at home on Thursday.

The Cats lost their opening day game to Michigan State last Saturday but rebounded against Michigan on Sunday for a 2-1 victory.

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

The women's volleyball team picked up where they left off after their record-setting 1980 season with a three games to none victory over Wilmington College last Friday. The Cats whitewashed Wilmington, 15-3, 15-7 and 15-8.

Starting today at 5 p.m., Villanova will compete in a 16 team tournament, at Temple University (Lady Owl Classic). Villanova's opening day opponent will be Hofstra University in their first match, and Fairleigh Dickinson at 7:40 p.m. in their second match.

The Wildcats then return to Temple Saturday morning at 9 a.m. to take on the University of Connecticut. Eliminations then begin at noon with the championship match scheduled to start at 4:30.

Who Runs Villanova?

V.U. Academic Control Limited

Editor's Note: This is the second of a four-part series entitled "Who Runs Villanova." The purpose of this series is to shed light on how Villanova is governed. This series will be written objectively. Any conclusions can be drawn by the reader. In later weeks, the Villanovan will analyze the financial structure of the University and student life.

By LEONARD J. La BARTH
JAMES H. De LORENZO

The course selection provided Villanova students by the University is determined by various accrediting agencies and individual curriculum committees.

With the exception of the College of Arts and Sciences, the colleges must adhere to strict guidelines set forth by the accrediting agencies. In addition, the deans are responsible to the vice-president of academic affairs in matters of revisions, additions and cancellations of courses, and faculty appointments.

Answering to the different authorities and meeting each specified requirement is difficult. "It's tough, really tough," explained Dean of Commerce and Finance Alvin Clay. "We are accredited members of the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business. C and F must maintain a strict compliance. The guidelines set leave no question about the quality of the programs."

There are approximately twelve-hundred business schools an another one-thousand business programs in the country. "Only 206 are accredited," Clay said. "Nine of those accredited are in Pennsylvania. It's brutal."

"Students come here and pay hard-earned collars ... there must be an obligation of the University to spend the funds wisely. When students ask me, I can't tell them where it goes. It's not wise."
Robert Lynch, dean of engineering

"The basic philosophies and university traditions are also stressed in the curriculum. It is a matter of department philosophy. The departments initiate a great deal."
Alvin Clay, dean of C&F

According to Clay, the "basic philosophies and university traditions are also stressed in the curriculum. It is a matter of department philosophy. The departments initiate a great deal."

The College of Engineering also outlines course selection — the Accrediting Board of Engineering and Technology (ABET). "The agency sets all criteria that outlines each division within engineering," said Dean Robert Lynch. "Every six years, the agency visits Villanova and passes an evaluation. A report submitted before the visit to the agency gives the group a basis upon which to judge the program's compliance."

The curriculum committee of engineering meets regularly. "At the beginning of each year we sit down and discuss what we're trying to achieve," explained Lynch. "Faculty members from each department comprise the committee. In the past, students selected on the basis of grades and interest in the curriculum setup have been on the committee. A lot of the time, the professors, myself included, believe that the course they teach is the only important one. Students on committees can adheres to a strict agency which give us first-hand experiences. We don't have the same sense to see the whole and sometimes fail to realize the workload like a student does."

In the College of Arts and Science, which has many different goals, the course selection is decided upon by the department faculty, with the suggestions of a student Council of Arts and Sciences, and faces the approval of the department heads the chairman, and the Dean, Father John O'Malley. The college must meet the standards set by the Middle States Association Evaluation group. "The faculty makes my job easy," said O'Malley. "I've never seen a more dedicated group of people."

All of those interviewed professed the belief that their colleges' requirements were "well-rounded."

"We are fully aware of social responsibilities," Lynch said. "In Engineering, a link needs to be made between engineering and the humanities. We want the engineer to see the total context — the ethics of an issue that confronts them."

"We encourage the nursing students to take a smattering of courses," said Rose O'Driscoll, Assistant to the Dean of Nursing. "We want the students to take psychology, philosophy, etc. The students should be able to see the 'whole of man'."

For the Colleges of Engineering, and Commerce and Finance to change, drop or add a course at the recommendation of the faculty, the deans must first see if the changes follow the agency guidelines. If the recommendation meets all the rules, the deans, upon reviewing it, submit the proposal to the vice-president for academic affairs.

"Each college acts autonomously concerning itself," Lynch emphasized. "I'm responsible to the agency. The administration expects me to follow the guidelines. I send changes to the Vice President for academic affairs when necessary. I don't know where it goes next. There is usually no problem and it doesn't have to go any higher."

Once a month, the vice president of academic affairs, Fr. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., meets with a council of deans to review the academia.

While each dean assumes responsibility for following course selection guidelines and is in part responsible to some degree concerning faculty appointments, they do not contribute input or recommendations concerning tuition increases for the colleges.

"I have never been asked to review the tuition adjustments," admitted Lynch. "The issue needs to be aired better; I don't know who decides. Students come here and pay hard-earned dollars. They want a good education. There is a cost for the product to be delivered. However, there must be an obligation of the University to spend the funds wisely. When students ask me, I can't tell them where it goes. It's not wise.

Police Arrest Student

By SHARON WINTERS

Stewart Granger, Villanova basketball player, was arrested by Radnor police on charges of receiving stolen goods on Monday, Sept. 28. The arrest came after a search of Granger's room where police found a lounge table alleged to have been taken in a robbery at Eastern College in St. David's on Sept. 27, according to Chief of Police Maurice L. Hennessy.

A car, "in Granger's possession," was towed to the Radnor Police Station, according to Hennessy. The car fit the description of the vehicle seen at Eastern College, he said.

"He's (Granger) an innocent victim and we feel he will be exonerated. The matter is in his lawyer's hands and while the investigation is pending we don't think the matter should be discussed," said Marty Marbach, assistant basketball coach.

Radnor police received a report around 11 p.m. from a student about a robbery at Eastern, according to the police chief. Two girls were in the health center at the time, he continued. One of the girls was assaulted during the burglary attempt, Hennessy added. According to the police report, two black males were involved in the robbery.

A description of the car at the scene was reported to police, said Hennessy. The registration of the vehicle, a Pontiac, was also reported, he noted.

On Sept. 28, the police located the vehicle fitting the description of the car involved at Eastern in front of St. Mary's Hall. According to Hennessy, the car was in Granger's possession, although not registered to him.

Detectives of Radnor executed a consent search of Granger's room in St. Mary's, Hennessy said. Stewart Granger consented to the police search by signing a waiver, explained Chief Hennessy.

Granger was arrested by police at 4 p.m. on Monday, said Hennessy. Granger was arraigned, and a hearing date has been set for Oct. 8, he added. Bail was set at $1000; Granger was released on his own recognizance, according to police.

Editor's Note: The following are excerpts from a letter sent out by Father President Driscoll this week to "alumni, parents, and friends of the University."

For some time now, I have felt the need of informing you in a more direct, personal way ov events taking place at Villanova and advising you of some of the plans we have for the future. With so much happening in recent months, now seems like an excellent time to begin. I hope these periodic updates will improve communications between us and help create a greater feeling of closeness in the Villanova family of which you are a very important member.

In a university, the annual miracle of renewed life, of excited anticipation, comes not in the spring of the year, but the fall. Each year at freshman orientation time it's the same "new" thing: "Can you tell me where to find the Dean's office?" Or, "Which one is Mendel Hall?" . . .

The challenges, of course, run the gamut of the University enterprise. Over the summer, we were especially busy seeing to it that the sunshine of our weekend programs would not be dimmed by the absence of football. Actually, the weekends will be filled with a greater variety of activity. Athletic, cultural, social and even academic events will be presented in a way that will make for broader participation in the host of student activities that heretofore have had a very low profile. For the Parents and Homecoming stadium displayed at its multi-faceted best. A pleasant surprise is in store for those who have not yet had the opportunity to witness a number of our varsity teams in action.

Weekends, the Field House and each of our three playing fields will be the scene of intercollegiate competition on the part of our varsity teams of men and women, with our renovated

In this connection, the decision on April 14, 1981 by the Board of Trustees to discontinue football as a varsity sport does indeed warrant comment here. This is particularly true in the light of the misinformation and misunderstanding that has been associated with it. The decision was not, as has been suggested, capricious, ill-considered, or ill-timed. The action was based on ten years of thoroughgoing financial analyses and discussion of values related to athletics in general and football in particular, involving annual review, periodic reports and, in 1974, widespread discussion of the matter. I am sure you will agree that as long as the program was in place, there could be no public discussion of its viability that would not seriously damage morale. It was painful enough to all of us that the decision be made thus incisively, but public announcement a year in advance of the playing season would have been the ultimate cruelty. The board reexamined its position during a July meeting and voted overwhelmingly to sustain its original decision.

I am sure you know that the basic reason was financial. No other single m in the University has been subsidized so heavily over so long a period of time than has football. The full impact of the program on the operating budget is seen not by considering the program cost as a percentage of the total budget, but rather by considering it as a percentageof the University's disposable income, that is, those funds available for use after fixed costs. Had the program been continued into 1981, the net cost to the University over the three-year period from 1979 would have been almost two million dollars, representing a very substantial portion of our disposable funds. So you see that in the face of limited financial resources, threatened fiscal stability and unprecedented inflation, the Board's honesty and integrity demanded a hard decision in fulfillment of its trust . . .

The strong reaction on the part of some members of the Alumni Association and the student body is to be understood and respected. Football, somewhat like the chapel spires, has been part of Villanova University for eighty-seven years and its departure from the scene, not necessarily forever, ma temporarily sadden, but will ultimately strengthen us . . .

To those of you who have not been able to accept that decision readily, I ask you to try to understand that football, even with its long and noble tradition at Villanova, had to be seen in the harsh light of reality. Major private institutions have made the decision before we did; others inevitably will follow suit. You will come to see, I feel sure, that we had no reasonable or viable choice . . .

The striving leads us all to renewal and innovation; new academic programs sensitive to students needs; improved computer capability in teaching, research and management information; updated laboratory equipment; improvements in the quality of student life; dormitory renovation and construction; improved working conditions for faculty and staff and effective concern for their quality of life; increased efforts in obtaining external funding; attraction and retention of qualified personnel in every area; the need to develop leaders sensitive to world, national and local problems of peace and justice; the rightful place of minorities — the person and the group; and the love of neighbor that transcends differences of whatever kind . . .

To all of you, I extend this most cordial invitation to return to Villanova this fall and participate in what I promise you will be a memorable and eventful time. Parents' Weekend is October 9-11 and Homecoming Weekend is October 23-25. I look forward to seeing you then as well as meeting and speaking with as many of you as possible throughout the coming year.

God's blessing on you and yours, and warmest personal regards.

Yours sincerely,
Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.
President

If you think "pads and rollers" are just a California craze, you're not ready for New Memorex.

Pads and rollers are key components of a cassette's tape transport system.

This system guides the tape past your deck's tape head. It must do so with unerring accuracy.

And no cassette does it more accurately than totally new Memorex.

The new Memorex tape transport system is precision engineered to exacting tolerances.

Flanged, seamless rollers guide the tape effortlessly and exactly. An oversize pad hugs the tape to the tape head with critical pressure. Even enough for precise alignment, gentle enough to dramatically reduce wear.

Our unique ultra-low-friction polyolefin wafers help precision-molded hubs dispense and gather tape silently and uniformly, play after play. Even after 1,000 plays.

In fact, our new Memorex cassette will always deliver true sound reproduction, or we'll replace it. Free.

Of course, reproduction that true and that enduring owes a lot to Permapass™, our extraordinary new binding process. It even owes a little to our unique new fumble-free storage album.

And remember: getting it there is half the fun.

Parents Weekend Planned

By ANNE MARIE URBINATO

Student Activities and the Blue Key Society have scheduled other sports for Parents Weekend, October 10, to compensate for the loss of tailgates and the football game.

To overcome this obstacle, a soccer game has been scheduled against Rutgers at 1 p.m. in the Stadium and a baseball game at 12 p.m. behind the Field House.

In response, Reverend John Martin, O.S.A. stated, "the residence halls are planning activities for parents and family. These will include receptions and socials, as well as masses, in some cases. In addition, student organizations such as the Association of Commuter Students (ACS), are encouraged to plan programs for parents, including socials."

"Overall, I think the success of Parents Weekend is dependent on what the students make of it rather than whether or not there's a football game," claimed Maria Velleca, Blue Key member and chairman of this years events.

Besides sporting events, the Villanova Union will be sponsoring a student talent show in the Connelly Center at 2:30 p.m. This "Student Showcase" is open to all students and is run in cooperation with the music departments.

The other events will be the same as in previous years. These include the cocktail party at the Covered Wagon on Friday night and the addresses of the deans at the president's reception on Saturday morning. The Union will sponsor the Swing Band Dance for parents and students on Saturday night.

Chugging Contest Prohibited

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Fraternity chugging contests at Villanova have been prohibited by the University administration because the activity does not coincide with the alcohol policy in effect on campus.

The last fraternity chugging contest was held last year, at which time the Inter Fraternity Council (I F C) was advised that such contests would not be permitted again.

John Jackson, president of the IFC, believes this decision will prove more detrimental than beneficial to the University and this year took the matter to Vice President for Student Life Dr. Richard Neville. Jackson explained, "Last year Fr. Martin approved of chugging for the last time. He had several valid reasons for not having it, including that it was illegal, immoral (to him) and personally repulsive. This year I spoke to Gary Bonas, assistant dean of student activities, who reaffirmed the decision. I appealed to Dr. Neville."

Jackson presented Neville with five specific reasons to reinstate chugging contests by fraternities, including: Chugging is a tradition at Villanova; the contests were always very popular with students; they offer opportunities for publicity mechanisms; they are a good source for raising money for charities; and provide great cooperation between fraternities. Jackson also noted that alternative drinks can be offered.

"The amount of beer concerned isn't that great," added Jackson, explaining that two beers were generally the maximum consumed by the contest participants.

According to Jackson, Neville "listened to everything I had to say and said he would discuss the matter with other administrators." Jackson received written correspondence from Neville that the chugging prohibition would continue, listing four major reasons. "He said chugging does not fit in with our drinking program, there is a concern that rapid consumption of alcohol may have damaging physical effects, it would mean more people drinking public, and that the University would be liable for supporting act in the event something co happen," explained Jackson.

"My concerns are that tradition was dropped, tho there are valid reasons to opp it. I can see their reasons, bu disagree. We have to respect th decision."

Jackson says he does not any hope that the decision will appealed.

Radnor Police Receive Jaywalking Complaints

By RICHARD DI STEFANO

Students who cross Lancaster and Ithan avenues outside the marked crosswalk areas might receive warnings from the Radnor Police Department against such actions.

Radnor Police Chief Maurice L. Hennessy said he had recently "received complaints about University students jaywalking" in those streets.

The Pennsylvania Vehicle Code, Section 3543, Part (c) provides that, "between adjacent intersections in urban districts at which traffic signals are in operation pedestrians shall not cross at any place except in marked crosswalk."

Chief Hennessy assured this newspaper that the police department would post printed notices in the affected areas before any warnings are actually issued. Although the above law has been on the books for some time, it is generally not enforced unless specific complaints are made.

Recently there has been an increase in the reporting of such violations. Chief Hennessy noted that, "commuters are upset, and one of them feels strongly about it." Apparently many violations occur between the time drivers are going to work and students are going to their first class b crossing from the parking lot or from the walk that lead to Good Counsel and Stanford halls, he said.

Students should cross only when they have the green light, and only within the designated crosswalks, according to police.

AUGUSTINIANS

"HOW CAN I MAKE MY LIFE WORTHWHILE?"

One way may be to live within the Augustinian Fraternity. When you come to live with us, you observe and participate in our community life for several years before making a final commitment. You observe that we are a religious community following the charism of St. Augustine and "that together and with one heart in brotherhood and spiritual friendship, we seek and worship God and we labor in the service of the people of God." We serve in colleges, high schools, parishes, foreign missions, campus ministries, retreats, hospitals and military chaplaincies.

Grad School Forum Viewed

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

The 1981 Graduate and Professional School Admissions Forum held to inform students about available postgraduate opportunities, will ke place Thursday, October 6 in the Villanova Center from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Approximately 65 schools will send representatives to the forum to answer questions concerning graduate studies in arts and sciences, public and international affairs, business administration and other special graduate programs. Law school personnel will also be on hand.

Each institution will have its own table containing information about admissions, courses of study and application forms. The schools' delegates will participate in general information discussions including with open discussions of the schools of business, public affairs, or law.

Paul Kenney, acting coordinator of Villanova's Career Development Center, believes that this is an "effective and efficient way for students and faculty to get information about each other." He notes that in the program the schools are given the chance to meet students, who have the opportunity to learn about the schools. So everyone benefits.

This program is sponsored jointly by Villanova University and Bryn Mawr, Haverford and Rosemont Colleges. After Thursday's assembly here, Bryn Mawr College will conduct a similar forum Friday, October 9.

Kenney observed that there is a significant increase this year in the number of participating institutions, over previous years. Also, there is evidence that the schools are even more seriously committed to reaching students than before; Harvard Law School, for instance, is sending its admissions director this year, contrasting with last year when it sent a third-year law student to the forum.

Kenney declared that "faculty can update its information about graduate schools, and pass it on to students."

Gun Control Debated

By DIANA M. MURRAY

Villanova's Political Union sponsored its first debate of the school year Monday night in the Connelly Center. The resolution: "This house opposes the registration of handguns."

The guest speaker Richard Gardiner of the National Rifle Association spoke for a half hour of the uselessness of gun control. Gardiner is also a specialist in constitutional and communal law.

Gardiner stated that 60 million handguns are owned throughout the United States and this number increases 2.5 million annually. However only one-half percent of all handguns were used in crime last year.

In 1975, Massachusetts enacted the Bartley-Fox law stating; anyone found possessing a handgun without a license could serve a jail sentence of one year. Before that time, Boston was considered the fifth most violent city; today, it surpasses all others, according to Gardiner.

After comments by the chairmen of the Conservative, the Moderate, and the Liberal Parties; the floor was opened for statements by audience members.

The resolution, when voted upon did not pass. The votes rendered 12 to nine with three abstentions.

Some cities which have gun control laws rate high on the list of most violent cities, Gardiner stated. Washington, D.C., for example, passed a law in 1976 prohibiting ownership of handguns except for people who already owned them, Gardiner explained. Since that time, Washington has become the fourth most violent city in the United States.

New York City, which has a similar law is today rated the second most violent city, he added.

Colleges Limited in Academics

"What President Driscoll does in regard to the college concerns the mission and the budget," O'Malley said. "Anything the college does is channeled through the vice president — he is the intermediary to the President."

"All education, all new programs, courses — anything concerning education comes to me," said Gallen. "There are evaluations, faculty developments, etc. It all comes to the vice president. Anything dealing with a lot of money goes to the president."

The vice-president also controls the academic budget. "The operating budget this year is $50 million," continued Gallen. "Almost all is directly related to education. Faculty salaries are $13 million. Of course, the budget is approved by the president and the full Board of Trustees.

Former Vice-President for Academic Affairs Dr. James Cleary saw his relationship with the various deans as a "satisfactory relationship on both sides. They are a very knowledgeable and well-qualified group."

"In actual practice, I made decisions in the president's name," said Cleary. "If there was any question on an issue, the president's decision carried the day. He did not rubber stamp everything I suggested."

"Any significant decision goes to Fr. President Driscoll, said Gallen. "There is no fine dividing line. He is kept aware."

A Different Time, A Different Student

Approximately 10 years have passed since student protests were commonplace. The issues students reacted against ranged from the Vietnam War and racism on the national level, to food conditions and visitation rights on the local, college level.

Somehow, though 10 years have passed, most of the issues we face are essentially similar. But now it is a different type of Villanova student which confronts them. It is also a different era.

Students now seem to consider themselves helpless when confronted with a government and a University which are large, powerful, but most of all, distant. The important thing to remember is that the same conditions existed 10 years ago, to an even greater extent.

College students, in the 60's, though, would not accept the fact that they could not make a difference. Through their protests, through their sit-ins, they made a difference.

Maybe Villanova, and the country for that matter, would be better off if students adopted the feelings of their predecessors. No, we are not condoning violent protest as a solution for our problems. Apparently, we have "grown up" too much for that.

But unfortunately, we seem to have also outgrown a feeling of concern for our University, our country, and ourselves.

If the students of the 60's were around today, they would probably protest such things as tuition hikes, the arms race and nuclear energy. Sadly, we will never know, because that spirit of concern no longer lives in the hearts of Villanova students. It died about 10 years ago.

New Dormitory Construction

If Villanova University receives a $3.5 million loan from the Department of Education, construction of a new dormitory facility on campus could begin soon. If the University does not receive the loan, the Board of Trustees will decide whether to pursue alternative actions to come up with the necessary funds.

The University needs a new dormitory and this need should be given the greatest consideration at the Board's October 13 meeting. Vice-President for Student Life Dr. Richard Neville noted in last week's Villanovan that there is a much greater demand for resident space than the University can presently accommodate. With many Villanova students being forced to find off-campus housing, the need for another residence hall is obvious.

A new dormitory would help to make the first year of college more enjoyable for students who might otherwise be forced to find off-campus housing in a location unfamiliar to them. Transfer students are not considered at all for on-campus housing and each year a number of freshmen must wait for placement in dormitories. A new dormitory could alleviate this problem for many students. The yearly problem of housing students through the lottery system could also be lessened.

The University is to be applauded for attempting to come up with the necessary funds for construction of another dorm. If we do not receive the $3.5 million loan, the Board of Trustees and the administration should find an alternative.

Letters to the Editor

Orientation Was Worth It

I am writing this letter neither to defend nor attack the Orientation program of 1981. Rather, I would like to express a personal view of new student orientation at Villanova, one that few people see with the exception of those directly involved.

In February of last year, I applied to be an O.C., simply because I felt a desire to become involved in Orientation.

During the seven days of non-stop training, I learned a great deal about helping new students. But even more, I learned a great deal about myself, and also met ninety dynamic new people. And the best was yet to come.

I walked into Bartley 208 on September 6 at 2 p.m. to meet Group 26 with sweaty palms, butterflies, and a very shaky grin. Staring back at me were twenty-two questioning faces. All the training that had been pounded into me left momentarily, and all that came out was "Hi everyone!" When that "Hi" was returned, I knew I could do it! It was the start of what were to be four of the best days of my life at V.U.

Most students at V.U. don't get the chance to be involved in Orientation. I feel very fortunate that I have. To those who feel [illegible] program is worthless, my advice [illegible] to uncover what's at the heart [illegible] it. You may be surprised at w[illegible] you see. Not everyone is made [illegible] be involved in programs like t[illegible] one, but those who criticize sho[illegible] first know what it is they [illegible] dealing with. One thing [illegible] very sure of is that those involv[illegible] in Orientation '81 will never for[illegible] it. It was one of the best [illegible] periences I've ever had, an[illegible] LOVED EVERY MINUTE [illegible] IT!!!

Villanova Faulted

When I came to Villanova for the first time, I thought the world of this place. I really believed that it was my turn to see, feel, and most of all be a part of the college life that I had come to know, from visits to my brothers at Notre Dame and South Carolina.

At a Notre Dame football game the atmosphere is overwhelming. The morale shown by their student body is fantastic. I have yet to see this type of enthusiasm shown at Villanova, and as we all know by now it will not be shown at football games because there is no football program.

Furthermore, the student facilities at Villanova are far too inadequate. The weightlifting room needs five steel pins to operate the universal machine effectively, right now there is only one pin. With the tuition we pay, you would think the school could afford five steel pins.

Other inadequacies include: (1) An extremely high fee for parking stickers, (2) A beautiful nautilus machine where athletes go free, and other students pay $85 per semester. Who can afford that? Also, scheduling workouts is very difficult. 3) Generally everything on campus comes as a cost to the student.

When I left home to come Villanova, I thought I would [illegible] away from my parents and st[illegible] growing up. Funny a[illegible] may seem, I had more freedom [illegible] home. I am nineteen years old, [illegible] with the rules around here and t[illegible] way the R.A.'s enforce them, I [illegible] like I am twelve again. The po[illegible] for rooms is outrageous. It is pr[illegible] tically a crime to put [illegible] decorations in your room.

This is the only school I kno[illegible] where students would rather [illegible] off campus.

Damage Charges Complex, Emotional

The issue of room and common [illegible] damage assessments is an [illegible]motional and complex one. It is [illegible]t one that lends itself easily to [illegible]ritten debate, but because I [illegible]ree that both students and [illegible]arents deserve adequate answers [illegible] reasonable questions and [illegible]ecause I am committed to an accessible and responsive approach to student concerns, I feel obligated to make this attempt.

Answer to Article

Let me first address the question raised in an article of September 11th by Jerry Arth and Charles Molineaux. While its content was a reasonable but inaccurate representation of our conversation, the centerpiece of their effort was the contention that room damage billed to students plus common area damage billed plus unrecovered damage should equal $116,910.45. According to their calculations the amount billed to students exceeded this figure. The total figure has been provided by Mr. Tom Trucks, Director of Maintenance Department. It represents the real cost of vandalism replaired thru May 1981.

The figure does not represent the total amount of vandalism done. We have indeed billed students for damages that have yet to be repaired and so a more correct formula would read room damage billed plus common area damage billed plus unrecovered damage equal $116,910.45 plus cost of future repairs completed.

I remain absolutely convinced that there has been no concerted effort to exaggerate figures or profit from this billing procedure.

Assessment Calculations

In addition to the information provided in the Arth and Molineaux article, it is important to understand two important differences between this year's procedure and those of past years. First, at the time of my involvement there were few records that would have enabled us to bill on a wing by wing basis. Although I would have preferred to do otherwise,total building vandalism was most frequently divided among the total number of building residents. Where records of costs by wing existed,we did assess only the wing on which damage occurred. More importantly, we used actual costs of repairs to arrive at our totals. My understanding is that previous practices included an approximation of this cost plus random fines. Such a subjective procedure is neither fair nor does it represent good management practice, and such will not be used now or in the future.

Hundreds of Invoices

As for the question of what, vandalism in residence halls this year involved hundreds of invoices and dozens of pages in documentation. While I very much agree that more information than that provided this year should be obligatory, enclosing a complete listing of all damages done over the course of an academic year with each bill is simply not possible.

What about the timing of your bill? Clearly, we were remiss in not being more prompt. Rather than describe the complexities of this summer's re-organization, I would prefer to accept responsibility for our error, and for what it's worth, apologize for the inconvenience and confusion that resulted.

Why weren't the damages for which you were billed, repaired? In some cases, the Maintenance Department simply cannot do all that needs to be done. In others, it is more economical to concentrate on a few large projects rather than many smaller ones in order to maximize our impact on major problems. In any event, the institution clearly has the right to recover damages done to its property. Further, it retains the right to disperse these funds as it deems necessary.

Process Reservations

Is the procedure equitable? Admittedly not. I and others in the Student Life Division have significant reservations about the process. Its intent, however, is to encourage residents to accept responsibility for the environment in which they live.

The Maintenance Department has already been very helpful by volunteering to modify their record keeping procedure so that billing on a wing by wing basis will be insured. The check-out procedure this year requires your input as you leave your room, and the room condition form includes a space where itemized billing will be calculated. Finally and most importantly, Coordinators for Residence Management will be monitoring residence hall vandalism closely to enable us to distinguish those incidents for which charges are justifiable from those for which residents should not be held responsible.

Cynics will not See

Not surprisingly, the cynics have already come to their own conclusions. I am confident though, that if you will watch closely and objectively, if you will make an effort to meet with and work with the group that now constitutes the Office of Residence Life, you will see change, a difference, and that the difference will be in the best interest of both the student body and Villanova University.

onald Reagan's America:

A Broadway Revival

Every speech is based upon and [illegible]veals a conception of the [illegible]udience. Indeed, this is the cen[illegible]al focus of speech making and [illegible]uch of speech criticism. This is [illegible] less true of President Reagan's [illegible]eech on the economy delivered [illegible] September 24, 1981. Indeed, [illegible]eagan's speech may be more im[illegible]rtant as a reflection of his vision [illegible] the American people than as an [illegible]strument of policy.

How then did Reagan view the [illegible]merican people? Reagan's "pain[illegible]g" of America centers around [illegible]e family. One of the first images [illegible] his speech was the "young [illegible]mily who wants to buy its first [illegible]me." The landscape of Reagan's [illegible]merica is certainly not urban [illegible]merica. A Reagan speech is far [illegible]ore likely to feature a "farmer" [illegible]an a factory worker. Small com[illegible]unities with self-actualized [illegible]oblem solvers dot the Reagan [illegible]ndscape. Indeed, it is de [illegible]ocqueville's America that [illegible]eagan admires and to which he [illegible]nts to return. It is an American [illegible]ciety where people solve their [illegible]oblems without government [illegible]ureaucrats. Reagan calls for a [illegible]turn to this America that de [illegible]ocqueville visited in the early [illegible]00's. It is an America that de [illegible]ocqueville visited in the early [illegible]00's. It is an America where [illegible]en stand and fight rather than [illegible]n; it is an American of volunteer [illegible]re departments and the spirit and joy of barn building. It is an America similar to those images summoned by the scenes and songs of a Rodgers and Hammerstein musical. One can almost hear the "wind rushing down the plains" and see the "sweet smelling wheat" of Oklahoma.

Although these are certainly positive and, perhaps to many, inspiring images. But are they appropriate conceptions of the American audience in 1981? De Tocqueville's America was preindustrial, pre-urban America. How relevant is the spirit of volunteerism to the problems of the inner city? Perhaps much can be done by the people of the inner cities to solve their own problems. But is more help in the liberal tradition not still necessary for this section of America? Perhaps the President's case for a return to volunteerism might have been more convincting to the poor and the disadvantaged of American society if he had pictured those people and their environment in his portrait of America. Without such images, Reagan's America is more like a Broadway revival of a once popular musical comedy than like America of 1981.

ppointment Shatters Precedent

Proponents of equal rights for [illegible]omen were understandably upset [illegible]hen the then Presidential can[illegible]didate, Ronald Reagan, would not [illegible]clude endorsement of the Equal [illegible]ights Amendment in the 1980 [illegible]epublican Platform even though [illegible] had been endorsed in previous [illegible]nes. Although supportive of the [illegible]oncept of equality for women [illegible]nd how could anyone be other[illegible]rise), Reagan did not believe that [illegible]mending the U.S. Constitution [illegible]as the appropriate remedy. He [illegible]d say, among other things, that [illegible]acing a woman on the U.S. [illegible]upreme Court was one of his [illegible]bals. Feminists were naturally [illegible]eptical, assuming that Reagan [illegible]ould find male candidates equal [illegible] better than female candidates [illegible]d would justify the choice of a [illegible]ale as the person best qualified [illegible]r the job.

Supporters of placing a women [illegible] the Court thought that their [illegible]et hope came from the fact that [illegible]ere might be several vacancies [illegible] the Court during Reagan's first [illegible]rm, and a woman might get one [illegible] them. There was logic behind [illegible]s thinking, as five of the [illegible]stices are in their early to mid [illegible]venties [illegible], and [illegible] of these (Brennan and Mar[illegible]ll) are not in the best of health. [illegible]To the surprise of practically everyone, the Justice who did resign was Potter Stewart, a man in his sixties and in good health. Nevertheless, he was second to Brennan in point of longevity, being appointed to the Court by President Eisenhower in 1958. Stewart decided to retire while comparatively young and in good health in order to fully enjoy his retirement years.

Speculation immediately arose as to Stewart's replacement, and although several women were mentioned, most observers thought that a male would get this first appointment. To the surprise of many, Reagan chose a female, Mrs. Sandra Day O'Connor, from the Arisona judiciary. Because of this precedent-shattering appointment, one may presume that great care was taken to find someone of impeccable credentials. A mistake by Reagan in this appointment would have been devastating to him as well as to the women's movement. The choice has turned out to be an excellent one, as exemplified by the unanimous vote not only by the Senate Judiciary Committee in recommending her confirmation, but by the full Senate as well in actually confirming her appointment.

The members of the Senate committee held three days of questioning concerning the appointment, and Judge O'Connor acquitted herself in the highest fashion. The only trouble spot concerned the issue of abortion, and she said that she was personally opposed to it, but could not say how she would vote should the issue come before the Court, as it undoubtedly will. Even the arch conservative Senator Strom Thurmond applauded her position, saying that no person should be judged by a response to one specific issue.

On Monday, October 5, Sandra O'Connor will be sworn in as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court. All Americans will be wishing her well as she embarks on her new career. Based upon what we have seen and heard of her so far, it is not far-fetched to think that she will do a superb job in her trail-blazing role, and that in the future there will be not only a "woman's seat" on the Court, but several seats reflecting their role in our society.

Economics Faulted

By DOUGLAS EARL

Dr. Clarke's editorial titled "Reagan's Policies May Work in Time" is more salesmanship than a reasonably balanced editorial. One is reminded of a salesman telling a prospective buyer that the car he's trying to unload has only been driven by an elderly woman who went to church on Sunday. Only after buying the car can the buyer find out that he's bought a lemon.

This is not to say that Prof. Clarke has not supplied us with a wide body of facts, but there is no mention of the increase in government spending caused by outlays for defense. Has it been forgotten that the Treasury Department is increasing its involvement in the financial markets to finance these outlays? Has it been forgotten that MIB has recently not even met its targeted growth rate? How has Wall Street reacted to the Reagan plan?

If only the article had addressed any of these elements, maybe then there would be a balanced account of things.

A Glimpse Of Villanova During The '60s Era

In his book The Firmament of Time, Loren Eiseley states that, "Never before in history has it been literally possible to have been born in one age and to die in another. Many of us are now living in an age quite different from the one into which we were born. The experience is not confined to a ride in a buggy, followed in later years by a ride in a Cadillac. Of far greater significance are the social patterns and ethical adjustments which have followed fast upon the alterations in living habits introduced by machines."

This week, the Villanovan takes a look into our past, to see how different we are. The students of the late 60s and early 70s can give us an insight into this difference.

A Story About Villanova

By MARIE CROSSAN

The 60 s. What was it like to be a college student in the 60 s? More appropriately, what was it like to be a college students at Villanova in the 60 s? Was there really a radical, almost revolutionary attitude change that swept the minds of America's young?

There is no predetermined answer to any of the above questions. There is however, a limitless array of information which can be utilized to form an opinion about the attitude of the student of the 60 s. Attitudes are too personal to be defined by an observer. Trends can be observed, one can anticipate actions, however, it is nearly impossible to define a specific attitude. This article will present information so as to aid the reader in his or her own determination of the answer to the question at hand: "What was the attitude of the student during the 60 s?" The facts and opinions presented here are a result of interviews with alumni, both on and off campus, faculty members and periodical references.

There existed during the early part of the 60 s a mode of continuance. The early 60 s were seen as a "traditional time period. The campus was serne and the students well mannered and polite," stated Barry Young, of the sociology department. An alumnus, James Eastwood, '67, reiterated this statement when he reminisced about a relaxed time. Kids went to college and had fun, and to get a good education. They were preparing for a future, getting married and starting a family." Duchesne Father Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., put it best when he stated that, "Villanova tended to be conservative." This stems from the 150-year-old tradition which this all-male, Catholic university derives its roots.

Economically, times were good. The Kennedy Administration had been accepted with open arms by the enthusiastic American public. This excitement was reflected by the "V for Villanova! , rah-rah," aura around the campus. Homecoming queen, Senior Week, Junior Week and Sophomore Week occupied the front pages of the Villanovan. Joe Villanova wore a coat and tie to all classes andto dinner at the residence dining hall. There were few "coeds" on campus outside the nursing school. Life at Villanova was one of contentment.

So then, one may ask, what happened? What was it that sparked the change? "November 1963 triggered the start of the change," Eastwood stated, "JFK was shot and this triggered the age of assassinations. It started something." Still others see the change occurring with increased U.S. involvement in Viet Nam. Fr. McCarthy states that, "U.S. intervention in Viet Nam took forms in the actions of the students."

Also around this time, headlines in the Villanovan read, "Girls at Last!" (Sept. 26, 1966). Coed life at Villanova was now a reality. Sociology professors Barry Young and Larry McGarry saw this as a "humanizing factor on campus." This added another dimension of change to student life. Add to that, selective service — the draft. All young men, 18 years of age or older were eligible for service in Viet Nam. Problem: No one really wanted to go "over there." Other headlines read, "Viet Nam Casualty Former V.U. Student," and "How to Avoid the Draft." Escalating these anxiety provoking articles were advertisements for "Sophomore Week," and "How Peace at the Fieldhouse." Rising calls for "Black Awareness" appeared again on the scene. Little by little, the real world, if you will, crept into Villanova University.

How did Villanova react? Did the student adopt a "Hell no, we won't go," attitude? Herein lies the problem at hand. Depending on the perspective of the observer, there are many impressions an individual can receive from the situation. Mike Danaher, '70, a former Villanova football player saw this era at VU as "sheltered" and possessing, "some apathy." Many students seemed to be, "inside their own world." He saw Villanova as, "Years behind in demonstrations." Signs such as, "Demonstration cancelled due to rain," were commonplace. Danaher sees a more social aspect of Villanova. "There were more basketball games played at the fieldhouse."

"They protested our Tuesday afternoon ROTC drills on Mendel Field," stated Eastwood. "It was more the local people getting the Villanova students involved."

The students, once clad in jackets and ties, now sported long h air, T-shirts and faded jeans. They found a cause. "They protested the food, the war, the dress, everything," Eastwood continued, "The student were misled. They believed — I'm smart and I should be doing this."

Bill Thompson, '69, saw Villanova as, "a non-political campus. The students were a little self-centered, and there really weren't that many demonstrations." "Villanova was no Berkeley or Columbia," McGarry said, "A significant majority were not for the cause."

Another event on campus was the "food riot." These "spontaneous, organized" uprisings were a form of protest. One explanation found is that of increasing student discontent. These were attributed to the anger of the students concerning the meal plan. Danaher explained the meal system as follows: "We got one piece of bread, two pints of milk and one serving of dinner." Eastwood sees this as the students response to a desire to protest. The desired outcome was to improve, "the quality and the quantity of the food," (Adhoc Committee, Feb. 8, 1967). Still another explanation, as seen by Father McCarthy was that all of these incidents (the food fights and war protests), were a "rejection on the part of youth of the values of their parents." In other words, a rejection of authority.

Reaction by the students? The campus was seen as being "split between protesters and non," noted Eastwood. Articles in the Villanovan commented on the "Lewd Crude Food," and the "Peace Corps" "Hippies" and "The Red Cross Blood Drive."

Simon and Garfunkel, Dionne Warick, The Four Tops and Leonard Bernstein headlined the Fieldhouse. The basketball team sported a Big Five Championship. The football team rallied to beat arch rival Boston College in an impressive victory and Dave Patrick put Villanova in the limelight with his NCAA Indoor 800 Championship. Freshmen wore beanies and rolled up pants while talking to walls as a form of Freshman Orientation.

"It was a period of questioning values," noted Young "It encompassed money and a lot of other things." "The young were rejecting the world as it is, but were coming up with nothing better to replace it," stated McCarthy, "The dress became sloppy and dirty. It was deliberate and a statement against a mode of living."

There you have it. A student, much like yourself in social conditioning, background and lifestyle, implanted amidst the turmoil of a confused and changing society. Villanova remained relatively unaffected by the goings on. (There were no Woodstocks on Kennedy Mall, believe me.) It is impossible to go completely unaffected by outside activities. There will always be a few dissenters, or a few merely unconcerned. These are both factors. Question: What do you believe to be the attitude of the 60 s at Villanova.

Some Excerpts From The Villanovan: 20 Years Gone

Newspaper Reflected The Era

By STEVE RUNK

Vietnam. Racism. Peace demonstrations. This is what the 1960's were made of and what made headlines in the Villanovan of the '60's.

The 1960's was a very dynamic period for the Villanovan, a time of innovation and controversy.

Many of the physical changes in the style, layout and format of the newspaper were a reflection of the changing times. The logo which carries the newspaper's name, went from a very Gothic, religious style to a more flowing, simple style in September of '67. In 1966 the Villanovan began running a box beside the masthead which carried a different slogan each week. Some were lines from poems or Dylan songs, and others were blatant political slogans, such as "Fight Communism," "Kill for Peace," and "War is Hell." In '68, the slogans became colloquialisms like "Hare Krisha, Hare Rama," which held significance at the time. The front page was further experimented upon in the latter part of the decade. In '69 it wasn't odd to see one blown-up photograph occupying the whole front page, like on Oct. 22, when a huge collage of anti-war demonstrations greeted the readers.

The Villanovan also ran many supplements and specials during the '60's. The '66-'67 staff ran a contemporary literary supplement of great depth and insight, and also began printing a full page of Letters to the Editor with one featured letter a week, usually on a "taboo" subject. "We wanted to spark controversy and grab attention," explains Dr. Nicholas Rongione, associated editor in '66-'67, now of the business law department and the issues of the day provided them with plenty of ammunition. The racial issue also led to special features. In 1966 the Villanovan ran three pages on "The American Negro Issue," and in 1969 published two very powerful four-page supplements, called the "Black Wildcat," devoted to civil rights for Blacks. And in 1969 an insert on the nationwide moratorium to be held on college campuses on Oct. 15 was published.

But the Villanovan was not without its lighter side. An annual Junior Week Supplement was run to commemorate a now defunct Villanova ritual which capsulated the week's special activities and also included a few baby pictures of some of the more illustrious Juniors. It is in one of these issues, from the class of '65, that I discovered a picture of a smiling, two-year-old Jim Croce, who was often heard to say, "I graduated from Villanova in '65 totally prepared for life in the fifth century." In 1969 a full page was devoted to a set of paper dolls, presenting two figures, one a conservative from 1962, the other a radical from 1969, along with their respective clothes and accessories in order to contrast the lifestyles of the two student stereotypes. Also rather unique was a two page center spread of campus graffiti from desks, walls, and other areas, some of which was both political and profound.

The Villanovan of the '60's also initiated the entertainment portion of the paper, which consisted mainly of book reviews on contemporary works.

But of all the changes, perhaps one of the biggest was the changes, in content. The Villanovan was reasonably conservative in the earlier '60's, mostly covering campus happenings and "safe" issues, such as speaking out against Cuba and the Communist threat in '62. In December '63 an article and poem paid tribute to the memory of John F. Kennedy, who earlier in his career had received an honorary degree of Doctor of Law from Villanova. In 1964 ads for the Peace Corps appeared and civil rights grew to be a major topic. In '66 the Vietnam War began to gain much exposure in the Villanovan, especially the policies regarding draft deferment for college students. Women's rights, drug abuse and poverty were also major issues.

Of course, with such controversial issues, the topic of censorship arises. According to Eugene Ruane, who was responsible for overseeing what went into the paper during the earlier '60's, says "The Villanovan was not actually censored, but it was the policy of the University to pre-read the paper before it went to print." Ruane, now in the public relations department at Villanova said, "I can't really recall any major problems as far as not allowing an article to be printed," though he did admit certain revisions were made. Ron Javers, a successful journalist, and one of the most celebrated of the '60's editors, recalls a photograph of an actress from a Vasey production who was seated in such a way that a little too much of her knee was showing. A line was drawn in by Ruane in order to maintain the tastefulness of the paper. According to both Javers and Rongione, they sometimes had trouble getting some of the more controversial issues into the paper, but their commitment and persistence was usually rewarded.

Although Dr. Rongione says "we were not actually responsible for stopping censorship, but did serve as a major catalyst," it seems to be a consensus among many sources that the Javers staff of '66-'67 was responsible for introducing freedom of the press to Villanova. One writer in '66 wrote that Javers is "... given credit for giving the Villanovan a name and an image of its own. Those who are familiar with the communications media know that he advanced this newspaper further in one year than it had progressed in the previous 41 volumes."

There is one incident in 1969 that bears looking into. The Villanovan wished to print a relevant article written by a California State University professor, called "The Student as Nigger," about how some professors treated students in a patronizing manner, hence the title, and which contained several "four-letter words." The administration, through its usual pre-reading, pulled the article at the last minute before it could be printed and put in its place an ad for IBM, at no charge to the corporation. As a result one of the two co-editors-in-chief, Iru Abranson, resigned from the paper. But co-editor Rick Sereno stayed on under the condition that everyone know that the article was censored. The article was finally printed with conspicuous white spaces where words were deleted. A full page article on various views of censorship soon followed along with a photograph of the back of a nude woman whose lower back was stamped "CENSORED".

The Villanovan did not officially become a free paper until the early 1970's, according to Ruane. But the '60's atmosphere planted and nurtured the seed of revolution that grew to maturity in the '70's.

A good newspaper not only reports the news, but also stimulates the community it serves. As Joseph Pulitzer was quoted in a '66 issue: "... every issue of the paper presents an opportunity and a duty to say something courageous and true, to rise above the mediocre and conventional; to say something that will command the respect of the intelligent, the educated, the independent part of the community and fear of popular prejudice."

The newspaper had influence on the Villanova community. The newspaper in '67 backed a proposal for Experimental Free School at Villanova, the objective of which was to have faculty, students and members of the surrounding community volunteer to teach non-curriculum courses for enrichment.

Another article in '67 was aimed at the school bookstore. At this time, the bookstore was located in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall and was inadequate, carrying t-shirts, underwear, novelties, and a number of the required texts books. The headline critiicizing the bookstore ran "Nighties Knicknacks, the Nonsense." The eventual result was the proposal to build Kennedy Hall.

But possibly one of the most direct influences came when on February 8, '67 the Villanovan ran a front page article on general student dissatisfaction and alluded to a possible demonstration. The next day a food "riot" broke out in Dougherty to protest the cafeteria conditions. Following a brief throwing of food in the cafeteria, the militants surrounded the monastery, and then blocked traffic on Lancaster Avenue for fifteen minutes. The demonstration over food may seem rather mundane compared to the Berkeley riots over human and civil rights, but Villanova also had its share of crusaders. Ron Javers and three others held the first anti-war demonstration in Villanova. They received taunts from "jocks" and were spat upon by them. Another group called "Concerned Citizens" held a vigil with a sign reading "We're thinking about the war in Vietnam. You are invited to join us. They weren't too well received either.

Dr. Rongione's profound summation of the period was that "no one had a peaceful meal in the sixties: You'd sit down to lunch at the Pie Shoppe and argue with your friends; you'd sit down to dinner and argue with your father." Controversy was indeed the watch-word of the day. And it was this controversy that characterized the Villanovan in the '60's as explained by Ron Javers in one issue: "We hope to ... stimulate and, admittedly, irritate, to infuriate, as we consider WHAT we consider to be our ... issues in the community ... redemption."

In Defense Of Dippy

Editors Note We, The Villanovan staff, felt in tribute to a dedicated reporter that we would reprint one of Javers' outstanding editorials, written on February 23, 1967. Times were different, issues were different and most of all The Villanovan was different.

Rah. Rah. Rah. V for Villanova, V for victory ... President Johnson expects that our presence in Viet Nam will be a long and costly one. We want food. We want food. We want food ... one third of the children of the world go to bed hungry every night. I can't get no tickets to the Palestra. Unfair. Unfair. People cannot get jobs because their skin is black, and they weren't able to obtain an education. We got a lotta Negro athletes at old V.U. Girard College is closing ... The S.G.A. passed a resolution calling for more and better toilet paper dispensers in the dormatories ... Universities all over the country are reported in a universal state of intellectual ferment and unrest ... V.U. coke can throwers protest unfair decision on part of local referee. So I dumped my chicken on the floor, right on the old floor ... The Ph.D. mortality rate at this university is reported as high as 17% per year ... Dad took the cadillac keys away from Sammy Sophomore. It is true that we actually do have a senior who is a Queen? I thought I'd fly to Florida for the Easter break, but I'm afraid my arms will get tired ... No dope addicts have been reported on this campus, plenty of dopes though. Ever try to pour your guts into a typewriter and get no for an answer? ... The VILLANOVAN goes on record as supporting itself and anybody else who swears to be a godalmighty good guy for the rest of his days ... affidavits available in the fourth floor office of the campus Young Republicans ... Is retroactive birth control possible at this advanced scientific stage? Satisfaction is something that you can't get no.

Really rolling along now ... there will be a smoker in my ashtray tonight, bring your own ladder. Penguins personify the olde V.U. spirit. Keep your old spirit, you old spirit. I hope we lose any other sporting event I hope we lose ... Someone has put a curse on the good olde team ... a little gypsy was seen escaping from the locker room yesterday ... She had on a good olde V.U. sweater with a symbolic hole in the left elbow. She had a hole in her good olde left elbow, and her brain fell out ... it rolled along the sidewalk, until a professor put it in his sub-culture identification group pipe and smoked it.

Since feeling is first, who pays any attention to the syntax of things ... so said my dead friend because I bought a book of his and he was only a symbolic friend anyway ... I liked his subversive haircut ... Be Bop a doo to you, little olde Villanova man who's going nowhere ... Be bop a doo to you little blank-faced buddy with your boots all muddy ... mommy'll kill you, dead. But I'll just go on and on ... and I think somebody said it's better to write well than rule ... Since I don't do either, I just thank God every day that I'm alive ... But golly gee, it's tough living a morgue. Good day little rich boy. Good dead little rich boy. You old WILDCAT, you.

Dean Of Women Gives Senior Girls 11 P.M. Nightly Permission

Senior girls who are resident students may now stay out on week nights until 11 p.m. No special permission is necessary for this privilege.

Announcement of the new policy was made last Thursday by Miss Dorothy Boyle, Dean of Women.

Previous policy allowed female seniors out until 10 on week nights, but only with permission slips. There was also an understanding that this was for a maximum of three nights a week. The weekend one o'clock (with permission) policy remains unchanged.

Viet Nam Letters

Editor's Note: The following letters have been received in response to Villanova's activity in "Mail Call Vietnam." The Villanovan suggests that students write these individuals and thank them for their letters.

To the Editor:

Enclosed is a clipping which appeared in the SAIGON POST of today's date. As an alumnus of Villanova University, I was very proud to read this article. It seems ridiculous in this age of advanced communications that one could fail to see the necessity of our presence here in Vietnam.

Our purpose here has been explained in the United Nations, United States and to the world. It is incredible that a supposedly educated college student or faculty member could call for a U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam. Not only would it condemn to ruthless communism the South Vietnamese people who have bravely fought for their freedom for over 20 years, but it would mark a responsible world power retreating from its duty in this so-called age of the "cold war" and "peaceful coexistence."

No one wants to "end the war in Vietnam" any more than I do (and I think I speak for all who are away from their homes and families). But not at any price; especially the price of our self-respect. In the eyes of the Asian we "lost face" in Korea, but at least we achieved a status quo. If we quit in South Vietnam, the loss of face will be complete.

I know of at least two other alumni here in Vietnam. Don Anderson, a classmate of mine is here and the local director of Catholic Relief is from the Class of '57, I believe. Please extend my sincere thanks to Student Council president Frank Eck, Mrs. June Orsteen and the student body of the fighting Wildcats (judging from the football scores this year it looks like a good basketball year). Keep up the good work.

My Dear Villanova Students:

Enclosed is a clipping that made me feel very happy — because of the recent demonstrations against Viet Nam. I thank God Villanova so far is neutral.

I have sent this same clipping to my son Edmond J. Smith a graduate of Villanova Class of '64. My son will be very happy to read about Villanova students and their planned efforts.

Please may I beg of you not to demonstrate, which I'm sure you won't. They have it hard enough, let's not hurt them more.

I have asked the same question of my son "Do we belong there?" He said only one word, "Yes."

I will be ever grateful to you in this situation. May God bless you all.

I had a letter from Edmond this week and he said, "How I wish I were back in Villanova." Would it be possible to send him a Christmas Card? He would be most grateful.

His address is:

Thank you a million times.

Most Sincerely,

P.S. My son is in Da Nang, Viet Nam. Edmond was just recently transferred to the 3rd Engineer. He is in communications.

Dress Code Abolished

Joseph P. Bevilacqua, Dean of Men at Villanova, has announced an alteration in the resident student dress code.

The new regulation, which went into effect on Monday, February 19, deals with dining room attire. Under this rule, casual attire may now be worn at all evening meals. Thus, the coat and tie standard is no longer in effect for all evenings and all day Saturday. However, casual dress is not permitted for Sunday brunch.

Temporary

Mr. Bevilacqua emphasized the temporary nature of the change. The new rules will be in effect for the remainder of the semester and its results will be evaluated. The Dean indicated that the continuation of the dress policy depends entirely on student reaction. If the students dress in a reasonable and "mature" way the changes will become permanent.

SGA

The new ruling came about through a motion passed by the SGA. After consideration by the Student Government the idea was taken up by the Student Administration Committee, of which Mr. Bevilacqua is a member. Father Rice is chairman of the committee. This group took action and decided in favor of a limited change on a temporary basis. After straightening out the details with Abe Hobson, SGA president, and other student leaders, the new ruling became effective on Monday.

Lupton Fails The Acid Test; Loses Job In LSD 'Flip-Out'

Mr. William L. Lupton, the Villanova English instructor who was caught running nude through the Germantown section of Philadelphia during an LSD "trip" last December 8 is "no longer associated with the University," according to Rev. John Driscoll, OSA Vice President for Academic Affairs.

A University spokesman indicated that a meeting between Lupton and University officials had been held over Christmas break and an "agreement" had been reached. Precisely what this agreement was is not known and Fr. Driscoll refused to say whether Lupton had voluntarily retired or had been fired.

Sources very close to Mr. Lupton insist that he was fired permanently but would be paid a salary for this current semester. Why the University refused to admit what action was taken is unclear.

Mr. Lupton has not been recently available for comment; even his close friends have no idea of his whereabouts.

His Second "Trip"

The episode began December 8, a class holiday, late last semester. His wife Mary, an instructor at Tyler School of Art at Temple University had no classes that day either, so it seemed like a good enough day for a "trip" through inner space." Mr. Lupton had taken LSD once before and had found it a rewarding experience but this time he began reacting violently to the psychedelic acid. Despite attempts to pacify him, his wife—who was not "tripping" and not central her friend—found him pacing through the house and running out into the rush hour traffic wearing absolutely no clothes (wearing only his moustache," according to Philadelphia's low caliber, sensationalistic DAILY NEWS). His jaunt caused the Philadelphia EVENING BULLETIN to note: "Rush hour traffic on Wayne Ave. was badly tied up."

Mrs. Lupton reportedly chased after him to try to convince him to come back to the house but he was caught in front of his house by patrolmen who handcuffed him to a fence to await the arrival of a police wagon.

Brought To Station

He was then brought to a police station where his arm, which he had seriously cut when he broke a window in his home, was treated and he was permitted to sleep off the rest of his trip. Later he put on clothes and was questioned.

Lupton was booked on four charges: possession of dangerous drugs, public indecency, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct. An earlier hearing was postponed and he is presently awaiting trial.

By the next day virtually all campus had heard the news and reactions of faculty members and students ranged from "shock" and "disgust," to amusement and almost a sense of pride.

National Publicity

Word spread more than across campus. The major news services carried the story across the nation. The Philadelphia papers had a field day with the story on page one and dozens of papers all over the United States ranging in influence from THE NEW YORK TIMES to the Lexington, New Mexico DAILY LEADER carried the story, always mentioning "William L. Lupton, English Instructor at Villanova University (Pa.) ..."

As a teacher, Mr. Lupton had good qualifications. A member of Delta Epsilon Sigma Honor Fraternity at Mt. Saint Mary's College in Emitsburg, Md., he was graduated from that college Magna Cum Laude in 1961 with a A.B. in Classics. He then studied three years at Temple, he has completed all requirements for a Ph.D. in English except his thesis. He began teaching at Villanova in 1964. He has also taught part time at Temple and Drexel.

He was well liked by his students who in general seemed to have a high regard for the intelligent, easy to talk to young teacher.

Showed Interest

Mr. Lupton spent much time with students outside of formal classes and showed more interest in Villanova and its students than did most of his older colleagues. "He made a mistake, sure, but as far as student problems, Lupton Showed Desire," an acquaintance of his cleverly pointed out.

English Dept. Letter

The English Department sent a letter, signed by almost all of its members, saying that they would have no objection if Lupton continued teaching at Villanova.

In other actions, several petitions have been passed around campus, supporting Lupton, one with as many as 500 signatures of students and faculty members, but none of these have been given to the administration.

Presently Mr. Lupton, is unemployed and is faced with the problem of supporting a wife and twin three year old daughters. Contrary to rumors, he has not received offers to teach anywhere else. His future is in doubt. But "someday Villanova's loss," mused one of his students from last semester, "may be someone else's gain."

Back Then, What Was There To Do?

By IRENE SHALLOW

Although the never-ending lines are still with us, some activities are left behind in the yellowing pages of old yearbooks. In the early '60's there were no national social fraternities permitted, no frat houses, so no social parties or "mixers". What did the Villanova student do when Friday night came along?

The first big weekend was the Sophomore Cotillion. The weekend is packed full of music and dance. Friday night is the kickoff with Howard Linen's Orchestra providing the lovely ladies and their escorts with peppery Latin America tunes to swing and sway to. Saturday is the big football game against Rutgers. And on Sunday, the sounds of the Ramsey Lewis duo and the J.J. Johnson Quintet and the weekend with all that jazz.

The Villanovan looked forward to Homecoming Weekend. The Nick Basca Dance in the fieldhouse was the first event. The songs of the Gay '90's came alive with Eddie Bingham and his society orchestra. The Wildcats defeated Virginia Tech 24-14 giving the usual round of postgame parties an extra burst of enthusiasm. Sunday afternoon the Dukes of Dixieland brought jazz once again to the V.U. fieldhouse.

Sophomores weren't the only ones to enjoy a weekend of dancing. Juniors hosted Eddie Condon and the Seniors held their dinner dance in the Pennsylvania room of the Sheraton. The men in tuxedos and their continental bow ties proudly escorted their dates in shoulder-riding gowns and corsages to the dance floor. All danced to Eddie Bingham to the theme of "Golden Memories."

As the decade moved on, Villanova began to get into the blues and Motown. The first time Villanova's rather academically oriented student body began to partake of the typical college social which parties started to fill Friday and Saturday nights. The men were less formal. They took off suits, they wore all the time and started to don tee-shirts. Haircuts weren't so short. It was getting easier to discern the ROTC's. The women wore their hair longer and threw away their cans of hair spray and their st hairdos. Dresses began to reve knees and some manifested even little more leg.

Smokey Robinson and th Miracles and the Righteou Brothers were here. The Moto sounds of Martha and the Va delles filled the fieldhouse. Musi was changing and so was Vi lanova. Quoting the 1969 Bell Air, "It was the epoch of belief, was the epoch of incredulity, was the season of light, it was th season of darkness, it was th spring of hope, it was the winter despair, we had everything befor us . . ." It was a decade record of fun, music, and dancing. It w a decade of change.

Buildings, Enrollment Change Over The Years

By SHARON WINTERS

The Connelly Center is gone. Stanford and Good Counsel have vanished. Kennedy, an unheard of name, is but a thought years away. The time is 1960.

A Good Counsel Hall does exist in a sense; it is merely a wing of Mendel used as a dormitory. Sullivan and Sheehan are also living quarters: for male students. Everyone living on campus is male. In fact, in 1960 they were required to live on the University grounds. "All undergraduate men except those who reside at home or those who receive permission to live with immediate relatives must room and board on campus," according to the 1960/61 University catalogue.

Other differences are also very apparent upon viewing the campus institutions. The bookstore is housed in Dougherty Hall. St. Mary's is a hall for seminarians. John Barry is used exclusively for the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps. According to the catalogue, "Construction of a science building was begun in the summer of 1959."

In 1960, the student enrollment was about 8600. Some of these were female, although they did not live on campus. These nursing students, either commuted or they resided at Bryn Mawr. The nursing students numbered under 200 at this time.

Villanova viewed itself as "a Catholic institution for Catholic students, even though it welcomes other beliefs," according to the catalogue. All Catholic students enrolled were obliged to take religious training. Further, all those in the full-time curriculum "must make a one-day Retreat in October and a three-day Retreat later in the year," the catalogue states.

The religious aspects of the University were not without some qualities that one might want today. The academic calendar lists four religious holidays for the fall term, not including Thanksgiving and Christmas. However, the term did have difficulties from our vantage point. For example, the student in 1960 went home for the Christmas holidays only to return on Jan. 3 for more classes. Final examinations were held from Jan. 14 to 21. Then the obligatory Retreat for juniors and seniors began on Jan. 22. The second semester did not begin until Feb. 1. The semester continued until the beginning of June. This semester included holidays that are familiar: Easter, for example. But, there were days off for Washington's birthday, a Retreat and Ascension Thursday.

Tuition for the University, although probably dear in those days, was small compared to the fees of 1961. The semester tuition for an engineering major was $500. For science and mathematics the charge was $400 for the semester. Liberal arts cost $375; nursing was $350 and commerce and finance tuition was $375.

Other fees for the year of 1960/61 included room and board for $500. An activities charge was listed as $5 in the catalogue. The library fee was $25, medical costs were $5 and a general or breakage fee was $30. These fees includ the use of various facilities, suc as a study room, parking and locker for commuting students.

The tuition covered more th just the cost of an education in t early 60s. Students were entitl to admission to athletic events, Belle Air yearbook and a stude handbook.

In 1960, the Villanovan w published 30 times yearly, a cording to the University bookl All students received the new paper free despite the $2 year subscription rate. Also, a copy each issue was mailed to ea student's parent or guardian.

Students were entitled to oth publications, depending on th chosen major. Engineers got t Villanova Engineer four times year. Science students receiv the Mendel Bulletin. All co merce and finance majors were r cipients of Business Whirl on quarterly basis.

—Dormitories were all in need of lounges. A large sum was allocated to improve the recreational facilities of dorms. They were also concerned with relocating several major university offices, such as the University Placement Office, and the Student Activities Office.

—A proposal was made to get more residents involved in hall leadership.

—A very major concern during the 60's, particularly later in the decade was the widespread use of drugs on campus. Rather than attacking the problem aggressively, the Senate helped incorporate programs regarding the drugs into Residence Hall meetings and Orientation. Continuously stressed at all meetings of the Senate was that the students, not the faculty, must carry on the anti-drug programs for it to be effective. The Senate distributed pamphlets around campus that would circulate among students and bring the problem out into the open. It was also decided that the Students Life Committee should research and prepare a report on the use and effect of drugs among college students.

—In September, a proposal was made by the Senate to install lighting along Lancaster and Ithan Avenues. The Senate comprised a report and submitted it to both Radnor Township and the University President. This was an ongoing project for quite sometime.

1969 —

—A proposal by the Senate was published in the "Villanovan" to reevaluate the admission standards of the University. A committee was formed to investigate the present policies, and to make recommendations for next year. The Senate efforts were enthusiastically approved by Father Bonnell, Director of Admissions.

—As in the 70's, alcohol was a major problem during the 60's. A proposal was made in 1969 in Harrisburg to lower the State drinking age to 18. This had the support of the Senate and also Gregory F. Stanton, Student Body President. The bill did not pass and a number of petitions sponsored by student government were sent to the state capitol in protest.

Stones Play to 180,000 'Slaves'

By DEAN BALSAMINI

This past Friday and Saturday the Rolling Stones moved into J.F.K. Stadium and successfully rocked over 180,000 to kickoff their 1981 world tour. Being that they tour about every three years, a Stones concert is more than just a show, but rather, a happening.

Stones fever originally gripped this city a few months ago when Mick Jagger announced Philadelphia as the first stop on the Stones' 1981 tour. Tickets went on sale and were gobbled up within hours.

It was not just the concert itself that made the Stones show so special but the events that preceded it.

First, the Stones had everyone scattered about the area trying to figure out where they would play their usual unannounced club date. Last week, hundreds of people gathered at Ripley's to see a band called "Horsepower", supposedly the name the Stones would play under. But this crowd was disappointed as the Stones did not show. As is now known, the Stones did not play a surprise club date but they had intended to. The show was supposed to take place at the Stone Balloon in Delaware last Thursday night, but construction on the J.F.K. stage was behind schedule so the band thought it best not to venture into Delaware.

People started milling around J.F.K. as early as Thursday evening in anticipation of Friday's first celebration. They came from such places as Montreal and Alaska, proving that even Eskimos like the Rolling Stones.

Throughout the evening, starting at around 11:00 p.m., people started to camp out at the stadium. By 2:00 a.m., the area had a carnival-like atmosphere. Having been one of these early arrivers, this reporter could not believe the sight of vendors selling cheese steaks, hoagies, liquor and potpourri of drugs which even Timothy Leary would be proud of.

The crowd, which was rather well behaved, slept anywhere and everywhere. Stones music blasted from assorted car steroes in the parking lots throughout the night. Strangely enough, ticket scalpers were taking a bath.

By the time the gates were about to open at 7:00 a.m., about 15,000 people, most holding general admission tickets, lined up to jockey for position. As the gates opened, people ran faster than they had ever run before, jumping up and down as they raced for the stage.

At 11:15 Delaware's own George Thoroughgood and the Destroyers took the stage, and played for about an hour. Thoroughgood's mean slide-guitarring was well-received, but both he and Journey were building the anticipation for who everyone had really come to see: THE ROLLING STONES.

At 4:45 the waiting ended. The crowd went wild as the Stones hit the stage with their opening number, the classic Under My Thumb. All inconveniences were forgotten as the World's Greatest Rock and Roll Band played for about two and a half hours.

The Stones closed their regular set with Jumpin' Jack Flash, complete with the resplendant Mick Jagger tossing carnations from a cherry-picker high above the crowd. Unlike the 1978 well-documented fiasco at J.F.K., they came out for an encore, ending the concert with Satisfaction, their first American hit.

All in all, despite several inconveniences, the crowd had a great time. Saturday's concert was a carbon copy of Friday's. For two days, Philadelphia had been in the spotlight, as everyone enjoyed vintage Rolling Stones performances, which, for now, slowed down the hands of Father Time.

'...and Justice for All'

By GREG ANTON

The American prison system is indeed a strange phenomenon in our nation, a nation which has historically proclaimed itself to be the international champion of human rights. The catch phrase, "and justice for all" must be all inclusive, yet traditionally the inmates of our prisons have been stripped of even their most basic rights. Granted, incarceration is an effective method of removing the "criminal element" from the societal mainstream; however, justice must not be sacrificed to expediency. Whether or not the American citizen deserves to be imprisoned is not the issue; rather, the concern is with how the convict is treated in the prison system.

According to Jack Henry Abbott, a man who has spent most of his thirty-seven years behind bars, the inmates not only have their rights taken away, but they also are being denied their human dignity. For Abbott, prison life and his personal life are synonymous, and Abbott tells his story and the story of the America prison system in his book, In The Belly Of The Beast.

A quick biography of Abbott is in order. He first landed in a state juvenile detention center when he was twelve. The charge was "failure to adapt to foster homes." At eighteen, after having been in the detention center for five years, he was arrested and jailed for passing bad checks. While in prison, he killed an inmate in a struggle and has been serving an indeterminate sentence in federal penitentiaries since.

In The Belly Of The Beast is a collection of letters Abbott wrote to Norman Mailer. Abbot began the correspondence when he read Mailer was writing a book, The Executioner's Song, about Gary Gilmore. Abbott warned Mailer that neither he nor anyone else knew anything about the prison system. He simply wanted to inform Mailer as to what life in prison and the system was really like. Mailer was overwhelmed by the direct, intense and remarkable writing style of Abbott.

In The Belly Of The Beast is a powerful and grave account of prison life. Abbott reveals his hatred and bitterness for a system that continually debases and degrades the inmates, causing them to be stripped of all dignity and self-esteem. Abbott feels the prison system is not intended to rehabilitate, but to break the prisoner, to submit him to the whims of the guards (Abbott calls them tyrants) until he has been completely destroyed, mentally, physically, and emotionally. And the prisoners know the system can do anything to them and will be backed by the full force of the state. Abbott's concerns are not with particulars, but wish to reveal a much more encompassing situation through these particulars. He writes to expose a hellish and inhumane system where prisoners are manipulate mistreated, and even mangled.

Abbott's observations a shocking and scary. H graphically conveys the fear th reins in every prisoner unlike a other author has. His knowled and intelligence, which were se developed via books, cannot co prehend or grasp the real wor Abbott's attempts to analyze cu rent situations in the world and apply the teachings of the gre philosophers to them are som what inane. Yet, his drive to a sociate with and to understa this unknown world outside him remarkable and commendab Also, his often outrageous clai of tortures endured have to challenged, even by the least sk tical reader.

Throughout the book, Abb suffers from a distorted pe ception. When he tries to sociate himself with the outsi world and to apply his knowled he falls far from reality. Clear however, perception must altered when the vast majority one's life is spent in isolati Failure to genuinely interact wi society and people creates nec sarily a distorted image of reali

However, this concept of per ception raises some questions. Ab bott can only correctly perceiv his society (the prison system and not the one where he has experience or contact. Perha then, we as members of societ can only correctly perceive th real world, and not the pris system. It seems to follow th since we have had no contact experience with the prison syste we cannot have an accurate pe ception of it. We too suffer from distortion.

Adam's ex-Ants Raid the City

By PAUL DURAND

Sex Pistols' manager Malcolm McLaren, former Ants of Adam nd the Ants, a fifteen year old male lead singer, and catchy-hrased "cassette pets" are the properties of England's power pop band Bow Wow Wow. They have been a novelty of sorts for almost an entire year and they recently showed themselves to the greater Philadelphia area for the first time. They had cancelled a tour of America back in May on just a few days' notice. They finally played Emerald City in Cherry Hill, N.J. on September 19th.

Bow Wow Wow have been 'press darlings' since their inception. Before Adam and the Ants' bubble-gum success story materialized, the Ants were different. Adam and the Ants' first album, Dirk Wears White Sox, which to date, is still only available in America as an import, gave him cult success in England. But the former Ants were buddies with Malcolm McLaren, and when Adam decided he didn't want to sing songs about cassettes, they left. Mr. McLaren teamed them up with fifteen year old vocalist Annabelle Lee and they put out a cassette. Everyone was told not to leave home without their "cassette pet" which, of course, would fit nicely into a shirt pocket or a pocketbook. Before long they had a "hit" with a song called C-30, C-60, C-90, Go! For a considerable amount of time, Bow Wow Wow was only available on cassette.

Since then, they've scored dance hits on vinyl with W.O.R.K., and Prince of Darkness. And even a Spanish version of C-30, C-30, C-60, C-90, Anda! garnered considerable attention. Bow Wow Wow has a very distinctive style, their songs have a very fast and up-front drum beat, and Annabelle's vocals are high pitched and quick.

By the time this reviewer reached Emerald City September 19th, he was ready for an amazing show. Unfortunately, he left disappointed with their live performance. The young girl, although she looked over fifteen, was cute, and she managed to keep the interest for part of the show. The musicians looked tired from the road and they played as if it was just another hour of work. Their drummer seemed especially expressionless. And they looked as if they would fit it better with David Lee Roth than Adam Ant! The presence of two female dancers (almost background vocalists) didn't really help although it was pretty obvious that they were there to make up for the lack of showmanship on the part of the band. As a whole, they lacked the stage presence which makes a concert. As for the music, which has always come off powerfully on vinyl, (or cassette), it seemed too limp in concert.

W.O.R.K., their top hit, was shortened for the concert, and it came too early in the show. And the fast, erratic nature of their music doesn't encourage dancing well enough, so, much of the crowd was left nearly standing still. Since there wasn't much to watch, the whole affair became boring.

However, although their set's

New Genesis LP

Banks on New Beginnings

By MIKE JONES

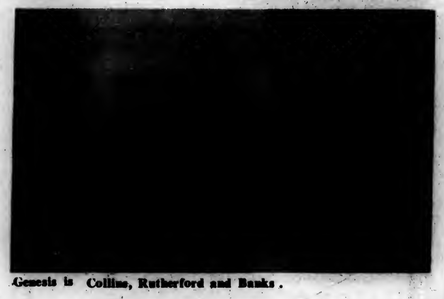
Abacab, the latest release by British supergroup Genesis is an album reflecting current progressive musical directions. Genesis opens the title track with a rhythm closely related to those of the latest Moody Blues effort, Long Distance Voyager, together with an introductory guitar reminiscent of Fripp's work on Scary Monsters. The third element to enter is the characteristically subtle chord shifts of Tony Banks' keyboards. The upbeat tempo, melody and positive phrasings start Abacab off with a spurt of energy, while enabling Mike Rutherford to exercise his new-found guitar virtuosity.

The use of the Earth, Wind and Fire horns on the single No Reply at All may put off older Genesis fans, but the funk influence can be traced to Collins' experimentation with funk rhythms as evidenced in his recent solo effort, Face Value. Collins also makes use of his "discovery" of percussive tape loop technology for many of the rhythm parts of Abacab.

Songs like Keep it Dark, Lurker and Dodo betray a new wave influence through the use of rhythm tape loops and the artificial clarity of the synthesizer programs. Dodo does, however begin in the same majestic manner of certain old Genesis tunes, many of which created aural tapestries which shimmered to the mind's eye, pristine pastoral masterpieces, filled with metaphor and irony.

The artificial banality of the New Wave influence is sharply contrasted by the more conventional yet soothing tone of Who Dunnit?, as the album winds down from the push-button pressure of the New Wave tunes to a kind of romantic movement.

Abacab bursts in with force and energy, then dissipates that energy as Genesis exists on the wind. After their eleventh spiritual journey through music, Genesis moves on, seemingly unconcerned with memories of the past, confident that the future will bring . . . well that whatever it brings, no prob-lem.



Genesis is Collins, Rutherford and Banks.

presents an introspective look at prison by a product of its system. It is indeed a great literary accomplishment. Abbott does have a true literary talent. One cannot help but to sympathize with him, for he truly is a tragic figure. He refuses to succumb to the belittling ways of prison, and must always, unsuccessfully, fight against it. His accounts make one stop and think, to ask if the prison system should subject people to such an animalistic, vile, and harrowing experience.

Writer's Note:

Since the publication of In The Belly Of The Beast, Jack Henry Abbott has been paroled. However, he was recently arrested for the murder of a twenty-two year old restaurant worker.

Gary Bonds with Fieldhouse

By KATHI IANNACONE

Although a crowd of 750 is not exactly the audience one expects to find at a rock concert, Gary U.S. Bonds put on a superior performance in the Fieldhouse Friday night despite a seeming lack of support.

Bonds bounded onto the stage to exuberant applause and opened with his hit Jole Blon. Bonds gave the audience more and more as they responded in kind. As the show progressed, he displayed a tremendous amount of energy and rapport with his fans.

In numbers like Jackson Browne's The Pretender, Bonds combined the song's original feelings with the originality of his own 'sixty-ish Be-bop style. These remakes were all done with style and polish.

Bonds' humbleness and gratitude are worth mentioning, because the small crowd certainly gave him the right to be uncaring. The rudeness of certain audience members, who constantly chanted, "Bruce, Bruce", was enough to drive the rest of the audience crazy, as well as those performing onstage. But Bonds never let on that he even heard, let alone resented, these remarks. He did acknowledge his "good friends" Bruce Springsteen and Steve Van Zandt, who generously helped him get his start again, and then continued his show in the upfront fashion in which he had begun.

As the mood in the fieldhouse ranged from rowdy to mellow to shuffling, the set was full of tunes from Bonds' current album, Dedication. It was the title track from this release that got the audience up and clapping, enjoying the old-fashioned goodness in the rock and roll that he performed. This Little Girl was another of the evening's highlights, and it was during this number that the band peaked. The sax and drums were outstanding, clear and sharp.

Under demand for more, Bonds returned to the stage for two encores, and it was during these selections that he delved into his past. The reincarnated million-dollar sellers Quarter to Three and New Orleans appeared to move him as much as they inspired the audience.

Despite the obvious and unfortunate intrusion of the horrendous acoustics in the fieldhouse, Gary U.S. Bonds presented those who attended his show with a stellar performance. Underneath everything, it must be admitted that he brought good rock'n'roll to that fieldhouse stage.

DURAN DURAN

New Romantics Blitz Philly

By STEVE HELMETAG

The fans call themselves "new romantics," and the bands play 'blitz," in what has developed into the latest musical movement eminating from England. Although loosely tied together by an elaborated Euro-disco sound, the focal point of this movement is fashion. In 1977 people dressed down to be 'punk". New people are dressing up in a "new romantic" style New romanticism has begun to filter into the lives of Americans as well, primarily through word-of-mouth advertising college and radio, and the push clubs have been providing.

Duran Duran, named after a major in the film Barbarella, is often categorized as part of the blitz scene. Actually, the band is not a follower of a movement but a leader that should rise to the top once the fad fades. According to the band's guitarist Andy Taylor (one of three unrelated Taylors in the band) "There's much more to the band than being part of the new romanticism. There's a lot more depth in how we think and what we want to do musically."

Their music, says vocalist Simon Le Bon is "nightmusic" and is written in collaboration by all the band's members.

Duran Duran brought its form of music to Philadelphia last Wesneesday performing before a capacity audience at the East Side Club. In concert, the band displays a driving danceable beat, highlighted by the power chord style of Andy Taylor and the stage presence of Le Bon.

Tel Aviv is a haunting instrumental that features a brilliant interplay between Nick Rhodes' spacey keyboards and Taylor's synthesized guitar. This is serious dance music and was used as a prelude to the Duran Duran show in Philadelphia.

Rhodes, one of the founding members, has his own way of explaining the group: "We wanted to pick out all the good elements of various types of music. We are just trying to make a more interesting dance music, as well as keeping a foot lodged in the obscure end of things."

The band's debut album, Duran Duran, contains eight certified dance numbers, legitimized by the disco-styled rhythm section of John Taylor, bass; and Roger Taylor, drums.

The advent of the band's recording days occured in February when Planet Earth, a top ten hit in England, was born. This song speaks of birth and appropriately enough-starts off the album. When performed live, Planet Earth is out of this world. The band even repeated this tune as an encore.

The group is outstanding lyrically, considering none of band's members look to be past their teens. Some cuts on the album seem to be very personal, particularly Is There Anyone Out There and Careless Memories. "I tried to phone last night but you never answered" in the former is followed up by "I walk out into the sun trying to find a new day" in the latter. An obvious mood of rejection is later changed to nothing more than a "Careless Memory."

Via the mixture of styles contained in the band, ranging from disco to heavy metal guitar leads, Duran Duran has the ability to go several directions and sufficiently break away from the movement. They now seem to be trapped in.

end was welcomed, this reviewer thought it arrogant of Bow Wow Wow to leave the stage after only about forty minutes. They finished with Prince of Darkness and C-30, C-60, C-90, Go! and left with a flashing display proclaiming "BOW WOW WOW, your cassette pet" resembling a toy. After all the music press hype, they should have been able to afford in impressive light show, but they didn't bother. They played a song over again for an encore, and they left without doing Chewawa, which is supposed to be a highlight of their forthcoming album. The album (coming soon), may be good. But they're not worth seeing in concert. They don't bark much.

Maree Captures Fifth Avenue Mile

By THOMAS P. PRIOR

Sydney Maree, sprinting downhill for the last 400 meters, captured the inaugural Pepsi Fifth Avenue Mile last Saturday in New York City. Maree, 1981 Villanova graduate, has just returned from Europe where he posted world's fifth fastest mile time ever outrunning Steve Ovett in Italy.

Maree was clocked in a lightning 3:47.52 for the straight course down the world-renowned avenue. However his time, only .19 of a second off the world record of 3:47.33 held by Sebestian Coe of Great Britian, will not be recognized because the race was not contested on a standard 400 meter outdoor oval track.

The race, virtually the first of its kind, included athletes from eight different nations, including Steve Scott of the United States, Mike Boit of Kenya and Eamonn Coughlan of Ireland. Villanova boasted three entries, Maree and Coghlan and Senior Ross Donoghue. An estimated crowd of 100,000 lined the side-walks to witness this unparalled event.

Donoghue, posing as a rabbit, went out rapidly, going through the first 400 meters in 53.2 seconds and was 1:58.8 at the half. Tom Byers of the United States took the lead at the half, followed closely by Boit and Maree. With 400 downhill meters left, Maree, who appeared to be teasing the rest of the field, sprinted for the tape leaving the bewildered and congested pack well behind. Boit finished second in 3:49.59 and Thomas Wessinghale came on for third posting a 3:50.48.

This unprecendented mile was initially criticized by numerous track and field officials for its commercial overtones. However, the crowd was large and the media coverage extensive. "It's just a wonderful spectacle," commented Coghlan who faded in the final stages, plagued by a persistent achilles heel problem. The last "point to point" mile race was held in 1941 in Atlantic City and was called the Boardwalk Mile.

For Maree, last Saturday's victory capped an amazing outdoor season. In the last three weeks, Maree has run successive miles of 3:48.83, beating Steve Ovett, and 3:49.93.

Though slightly outclassed by the formidable field experience alone, Donoghue ran well, proving himself another strong link in the Villanova track tradition.

Sydney Maree captured the Fifth Avenue Mile last Saturday in New York in a near record time of 3:47.52.

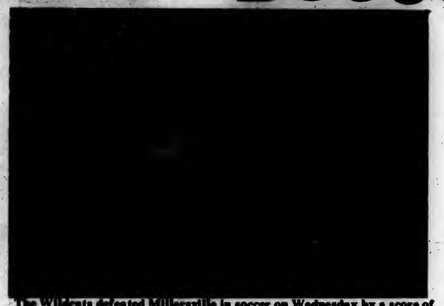
Kickers Boost Record

By JOE MARUSAK

Head Soccer Coach Howard Graff had to be pleased with his team's trouncing of Maryland-Baltimore County, 6-2, in their home opener Sept. 23.

The opening minutes wouldn't have suggested an easy victory, as Maryland banged in the first goal. After that, it was all Cats. Or, to put it in simpler terms, it was all Brian Barr. The junior co-captain led the assault on the vulnerable Maryland defense with a mind-boggling four goals. Not even a slight injury at the end of the first half impeded the Rosemont native, who continually penetrated the Maryland defensive zone.

Mike Layfield and Dino Spadacini also booted the goals for the Wildcats. On defense, freshman Rob Porter played a solid sweeper position.



The Wildcats defeated Millersville in soccer on Wednesday by a score of 4-1.

On the season, the Wildcats sport a 2-2 record. In their season opener against Haverford, Barr, Porter, Layfield and Ramon Garcia all netted goals to insure a 4-3 victory.

The Wildcats next traveled to Philadelphia Textile, where they were simply outplayed. No wonder. Textile was rated as the 10th team in the country last season. This year, they are paced by perennial All-Americans Tom McDonald and Steve McLean. The latter was drafted by the Detroit Express but declined the offer. Both were touted this year as "Players to Watch" by "Soccer America" magazine.

Next came the home opener against Maryland-Balt. Then it was on the road again, this time to Baltimore U. last Saturday. Here the Cats lost a defensive struggle, 2-1.

CORNER KICKS:

Barr leads the team in shots on goal (17) and goals scored (5). Layfield trails with 15 shots and 3 goals . . . VU has had 55 shots on goal this season. Opponents have taken 64 . . . Home game tonight against Spring Garden. 6:00 p.m.

Cross Country Season Opens at Georgetown

By JOHN JORDAN

The Villanova men's cross-country season opens this Saturday at Georgetown. Coach Jack Pyrah is very optomistic about his team's chances for a successful season but sees the season as a two-fold operation.

"First of all, we use the cross-country experience to get our runners into shape for indoor track," said Mr. Pyrah. "We also went to win as many meets as we can but the importance is on training instead of competition." Despite the concentration on training, Villanova's cross-country team has done well in the past and it should not be any different this year.

"The team seems to have a better balance," said Dermot Anderson. "We should do well this year."

Despite the return of five veterans the team will be hard pressed to fill some of the gaps created by the departure of Sydney Maree and Amos Korir, who were the top two runners last year. Ross Donahue, a transfer from St. John's, will ease the loss and is expected to be Villanova's number one man this year. Brian O'Keeffe and John Hunter will also be in contention for the first spot, although John has been recovering from an injury he suffered during last year's track season. Kevin Dillion, a senior, and sophomore, Marcus O'Sullivan should support the middle of the team with some strong running. O'Sullivan is trying to come back after some knee problems which he encountered over the summer.

"I am not running to well right now," stated O'Sullivan, "I hope to be in top shape by December."

Brad Gair, a senior, and Dermot Anderson and Terry Delaney both juniors, should fill out the rest of the varsity squad. Mike Deignan shows promise and might break the top seven.

The first test for the team will be when they travel to Georgetown to meet Navy, Syracuse and the host. When asked how the team will fair in its first meet, Mr. Pryah replied, "I think the team will do O.K. but I'll have a better idea of the team's abilities after the first couple of races."

Syracuse and Navy have well balanced teams and should provide tough competition for the Wildcats. Georgetown, led by John Gregorek, will be running on their home turf which might give them an edge over Villanova.

"They are all quality runners and although we don't key up for cross-country, the team wants to win every race it's in," said Mr. Pryah. "A good track season starts with a good cross-country season."

Women Booters Up Record

The Week In Sports

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The women booters upped their record to 2-1 with a pair of wins last week over Swarthmore and Mercer County Community (N.J.).

In the Swarthmore game, goaltender Sue Onnembo made 23 saves, chalking up her first shutout of the young season. Villanova won the game 2-0 on goals by Jean Murray and Kristin Goulet.

The Wildcats then took to the offense scoring four goals against Mercer County for a 4-2 victory. Once again the goaltending was strong, but this time by Patti Nowlan, who made 19 saves. Senior Karen Clabbers provided the offensive punch scoring twice, while single goals were scored by Nina Woeczorik and Jean Murray.

The only defeat this year was at the hands of Princeton, 2-0. In a preseason poll, the Tigers were ranked first in the Mid-Atlantic Women's Intercollegiate Soccer Association. Villanova was ranked 8th in the same poll.

Murray leads the team in scoring with two goals and three assists for five total points. Clabbers has scored twice and passed out one assist for three points.

The Wildcats have a string of home games, starting on Saturday when they take on Franklin & Marshall at 11:00 a.m. Next week's games include Delaware on Monday and Rutgers on Wednesday.

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

The women's volleyball team competed in the Fifth Annual Lady Owl Volleyball tournament at Temple University last weekend. The tournament, one of the finest on the east coast, sported a 16 team field with top Division I schools competing.

The women opened up the tournament against Division I power Hofstra University. Villanova gave them a run for it, but lost the match, 9-15, 14-16. The Cats then went on and finished Friday's competition with two victories against the University of Connecticut and Fairleigh Dickinson University. With a 2-1 record in the preliminary round the Cats then moved on to the elimination round. Villanova beat Providence College in the first round but were then eliminated by another Division I power, Maryland. Maryland eventually went on to the finals before losing to Georgetown University.

The women will be involved in another tournament this weekend but this time at Towson State. The Cats next home match will be against Fairleigh-Dickinson next Thursday at 7:00.

WOMEN'S CROSS-COUNTRY

The women's cross-country team placed third in a field of 19 teams last weekend in the Trenton State Invitational with 76 points. Senior All-American Suzanne Shea was the top finisher for the Cats finishing 10th (19:05). Other top finishers for Villanova were Mary Ellen McGowan 13th, (19:12), and Bev Reilly, 15th, (19:18).

The Women Wildcat Harriers will participate in the Rutgers Invitational on Saturday, and the Temple Invitational the following Saturday.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

The women's tennis team had a busy week playing five matches in six days, but fared well upping their record to 3-4. After a tough start to the 1981 season, the women netters are now on track winning three of their last four matches.

Junior Dawn Fisher had an outstanding week losing only one match and leading the Cats to victories over Bryn Mawr, Seton Hall and Mount St. Mary's. Carol Harrison then teamed up with Fisher to win the deciding doubles match over Big East foe Seton Hall.

Villanova lost a heartbreaker on Saturday when they traveled to St. John's and lost 5-4. The 4-1/2 hour long match was won by the Redmen in the final match.

The women will enjoy four home matches in the upcoming two weeks, beginning with Georgetown on Sunday at 1:00 p.m. and Towson State on Tuesday.

RUGBY

The Villanova Rugby Club traveled to Georgetown University last weekend and came home with two victories and one tie.

In the "A" match, strong running from Mike Terlizzi and a score by Frank Sergiovanni helped the Cats pull out a 6-6 tie. Co-captain Paul Hartwyk and Pat Gallagher had strong games at their scrum positions.

In the "B" match, Villanova dominated, winning 14-0. Chris Poke was the Cats offensive weapon setting up the two scores. The Cats then completed their winning ways by edging the Hoya's in the "C" match, 4-0.

The Villanova Ruggers continue their fall schedule tomorrow when they host the University of Pennsylvania. The three matches begin at noon with the "B's" heading the schedule, followed by the "A's" and then the "C's."

Flag Football Feuds Begin

By BOB CONWAY

The initial week of intramural flag football has been played. However, the week has not gone by without major changes, or classic confrontations.

The biggest change in the intramural football format is that Craig Hudson, who is the president of intramurals, has decided to dispose of regular season games that were to be played under the lights.

Hudson pointed out that the only night the field was available to 48 teams were Monday nights. (The fraternities and women's intramural football use the field on the other available nights.) Hudson cited two reasons for dropping the night games from the regular season schedule. "Cost, and lack of manpower are the major reasons," Hudson noted.

Playing on the turf under the lights will be added incentive for teams to get into the play-offs. Hudson said, "the stadium will be used for play-off games."

Already, many teams have taken a step toward reaching the play-offs. Many of last year's top teams seem to be the class of the lot again this year.

One of the top games last week was the match-up which pitted Athletes Foot against the Waves. Both of these teams were in the play-offs last year, and both teams will likely make it back to post season play again this year. Athletes Foot was the sharper club in the season opener for both teams. Athletes Foot took it to the Wave winning by the score of 13-0. "The Foot" piled eight first downs to the Wave's five.

Another play-off team of a year ago, Wally's Gators, passed their opening test by defeating the Mean Machine by the score of 13-0. The Gators have only lost one player from last year's squad, and are looking toward the play-offs once again this year.

GBU took it to Tanz's Terrors, the very first day of the season. GBU won the contest 19-0. No small feat considering the terrors were a play-off team last year. Tanz's Terrors are not ready to give up yet. John Maxwell, quarterback for the Terrors, said "one game doesn't make a season."

In one of the most exciting games of this young season was played by the Travelers and Roach and O'Brien. The Travelers won the game by notching a safety late in the game. The two points proved the difference for the Travelers who won 8-6.

EXTRA POINTS: The women's intramural football season gets underway next week. Pam Zenkowski, director of women's intramurals, said, "in only its second year as an intramural sport we have doubled in size supporting 23 teams this year." ... After a week of play, and tackling third every team has not played an independent observer listed his top five: Athletes Foot; Wally's Gators; Black Sheep; GBU and the Wave.

Budget Process Already Begun

Who Runs Villanova?

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

The Administrative Budget Committee is working on the 1982-83 budget which will include increases in tuition, room and board and escalation of faculty salaries.

The four-man committee is responsible for estimating Villanova's income and distributing it for expenditures with the approval of the President and Board of Trustees and the consideration of the University Senate.

According to committee member Father Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice-president of academic affairs, "it all depends on inflation. The inflation rate is 13 percent. We must keep up with it. Yes, tuition will go up. It has to."

Gallen, assistant to the president, Edward Murray, vice-president for financial affairs, Gary Fenner and Assistant Vice President and Controller Charles Dietzler are meeting three times a week to meet the December deadline set by Father President John Driscoll, O.S.A.

"We are still in the preliminary stages," said Gallen. "Sitting down and estimating the income and the possible expenditures is not easy. We must come up with a realistic essay. It can be guesswork."

"It's a very difficult process," according to Fenner. "From my viewpoint, it is both frightening and challenging. It is not like a corporation. Once it is buttoned down and approved, the university is locked into it for eighteen months.

Institutions can not pass on increases as they occur. It is not the most effective. We're at the mercy of the state and federal governments. The budget is made with an awful lot of assumptions as are most institutions."

Once the Administrative Budget Committee comes up with what it considers to be a balanced budget, it confers with the University Senate Budget Committee which may suggest changes. After possible revisions, the budget is considered by the full Senate, then approved by the President and the Board of Trustees. Last year, the 1981-82 budget was approved by the Board in February but was not accepted by the Senate until late in March then by a 13-11-5 vote.

Concerning distribution of monies, each college submits a budget of expenditures that is expected not to exceed 10 percent of the previous year's budget. In

M.B.A. Program Adopted

By BOB HERMAN

Villanova University will implement a Masters of Business Administration program (MBA) for the 1982-83 academic year, pending approval by the Villanova University Board of Trustees and the University Senate.

Father Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., the Villanova University vice-president for academic affairs explained the order in which the MBA program must be approved. Gallen said, "the faculty and the Dean of the College of Commerce and Finance must have completed a final proposition, the final statement must be approved. We have to go to the Graduate Committee of the University Senate, then to the full Senate for its approval. After this we must go to the Academic Committee of the Board of Trustees and then to the President. If everything is okay, then we must go to the full Board of Trustees hopefully sometime in December for their approval."

Clay believes that approximately four new faculty members will be needed for the first year of the program and perhaps eight more after that. For the MBA program, 75 percent of the faculty must be full time and doctorially qualified by discipline. This means that a teacher who is teaching accounting must have a doctorate in accounting. The MBA program also will require the faculty members to have a reduced teaching load because, a graduate course counts double what an undergraduate course does. This means if a faculty member teaches strictly at the graduate level for a period of time, he could teach only six credit hours. If the faculty member teaches at both levels, he could teach nine hours.

Evaluating the cost of the graduate program, Clay said, "the greatest expense will be the capital improvements necessary to prepare us for this. For instance, we (Bartley Hall) need more office space; at the present time it is inadequate for our faculty right now. By just moving the library downstairs and trying to redesign the third floor I could guess that this is costing $150,000 and we haven't done anything upstairs. There is also the problem with the possibility of air conditioning — it's pretty difficult to run some of the classes in here during the late spring and summer — that's another consideration we haven't talked about yet. In my opinion the program itself will be self-sustaining and pay for itself. The program will contribute to the overall income of the university. The initial college will be for the capital expenditures and for the faculty salaries. Some of these initial outlaws must be made anyway."

Gallen and Clay estimate that the graduate program will accept approximately 150 students per year. Clay feels there will be no problem with the present classroom facilities in Bartley Hall because the program will be two or three years depending upon the individual student's undergraduate degree (students with a business degree will need only two years).

Father Gallen said that the MBA program has been studied for the past four years. Explaining the need for the graduate program he said, "we have many teachers whose talents are being wasted right now. This will be a very solid academic program not thrown together like some surrounding schools' MBA programs. This MBA program will hopefully be on the level of the one from the Wharton School from the University of Pennsylvania,"

Clay said, "Villanova needs the MBA program because it will be very helpful to Villanova's undergraduate level because the type of faculty member we need on the undergraduate level is attracted to a graduate program. I'm glad we are doing it this way on a small level; a lot of colleges go out on a big level and just about reduce any chance they have for getting the accreditation. Once these schools get accustomed to the increased income, its tough for them to reduce their size — that's one reason why we'll have a quality program because we intend to stay small; not everyone will be able to get into the MBA. Admission will be based on a formula of applying the applicant's GMAT score and his undergraduate cumulative grade point average."

Father Gallen feels that there is no reason to believe that the proposed MBA program will not be accepted, "I think that the proposition is so well done and the finances in regards to the program are so sanguine that it really looks good."

Senate Considers Football

By BILL CLARK

The Villanova University Senate will address a motion directing the Board of Trustees to reconsider the dropping of football at its next meeting on Oct. 23.

The motion, coming from the Student Life Committee of the Senate, states that, "The University Senate strongly recommends to the Board of Trustees that they reconsider their decision to discontinue the football program at Villanova University."

According to Bob Rosengarth, student body president, the motion asks the Board to re-open the football issue. "They seemed to act without examining many of the resources which were readily available, especially the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Athletics for the Villanova University Board of Trustees," said Rosengarth.

Thomas LaBrecque, a member of the Board of Trustees and chairman of the Ad-Hoc Committee, summarized the report to the Senate at an extraordinary meeting in November, 1979.

The report, which has previously been unavailable for public record, states that the football program was losing approximately $227,000 in 1979. "We run football today at the Division 1A level with a very modest budget," the report said. "Given that, there is no advantage to moving from Division 1A to Division 1AA or Division 2. Both of these alternatives, given the lower guarantees on the income side, would actually cost the University slightly more money. Division 3 would cost us roughly $50,000 less, and no football at all would cost $227,000 less, on a net basis," according to the report.

This $227,000 figure was calculated by taking the difference between the athletic budget with a Division 1A football program and no football program, the report said.

By dropping the football program from Division 1A to Division 1AA, the report said, that income from the program would drop by $50,000, with expenses declining by only only $22,000.

The report, which was presented to the Board of Trustees, directly addressed the football issue. The report said that the value of tuition-free scholarships to football players should not be considered when figuring the expenses attributable to the football program. "The reason for this is the students are quite disbursed and that there will be no teacher, classroom, or other savings, if in fact those students were not there," the report said.

"There are other expenses attributed to football which, if in fact you dropped it, would not proportionately disappear," the report added. The report listed such expenses as publicity, telephone, and trainers.

The Ad-Hoc Committee, which was composed of Thomas LaBrecque, Father President Driscoll, Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A., and Art Kania, said that the advantages of prestige, publicity, the week end rallying point for students, and the week end rallying point for social activities for alumni "served to more than offset the $227,000 cost differential."

While the report did say that by dropping football, Villanova would have no football budget, make room for more paying students, and make it easier to comply with Title IX regulations, it listed several disadvantages for the dropping of football.

In addition to the loss of income, publicity, and tradition, the report said that the dropping of football would be "injurious to the general prestige of the University (i.e., all other major eastern universities have a football program, and where some schools have discontinued the sport, in almost all cases, it has been revived.")

Basketball Club

There is a club meeting, Thursday, Oct. 15, in the West Lounge at 12:45. The Big-5 film will be shown. Anyone interested in joining may attend. Ticket forms and money will be collected. Terry Smith, Sue Girard and Patman, we want to see you there!

Nursing Tutors

The tutoring program of the Undergraduate Nursing Senate is underway. If you would like to tutor or be tutored, please contact Mary Alice Rice. Undergraduate Nursing Senate mailbox, located in the College of Nursing.

The Academic Committee of the UNS will meet Tuesday, Oct. 16 at 5 p.m. in tolentine 210. All interested people are urged to attend.

Intramural Tennis

On October 3 the finals of the Sullivan first Floor West tennis tournament were held with the champion being Michael "Queenhead" Chardon over Ken Bull (HBD), with scores of 7-6 (5-4), 2-6, 6-2. Third place was captured by Guillermo (Ed) Grenier who ousted his opponent Kevin O'Keefe. The tournament had 20 active players in all and rewarded its winners with Milwaukee Tall-Boys.

Waiting List

The Office of Residence Life is in the process of updating and combining its waiting lists for all off-campus resident students. In order to maintain your active status on the list, we must hear from you. Please report in person to 219 Tolentine Hall as scheduled below:

October 12
Current — Freshmen Women — 10—30 a.m.-12:00 noon
Sophomore Men — 2:00 p.m.-4:00 p.m.
October 13
Current
Sophomore Women — 10:30 a.m.-12:00 noon
Junior Men — 2:00 p.m.-4:00 p.m.
October 14
Current
Junior Women — 10:30 a.m.-12:00 noon

Students with commuter or part-time status are not eligible to be placed on these waiting lists.

Internships

Intern your Spring Semester.

Stop by the Booth in the Lobby of the Connelly Center, Tuesday through Thursday, October 20th to 22nd, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., and meet student-interns.

Washington, D.C., Internships: Meet with the representative of The Washington Center for Learning Alternatives, Tuesday, October 20, 1981, 2 p.m., the Haverford Room.

Intern in the Delaware Valley, New York, and elsewhere: Thursday, October 22, 1981, 12:00 Noon, the Haverford Room.

For further information contact Dr. Dorley, Coordinator, 102 Vasey x4686.

Trip to France

A team-taught three credit course offered by Profs. Cummings (History) and Mongeau (Modern Languages), France Through the Ages will feature a trip to Paris and the Loire Valley during mid-semester break (2/26/-3/7). The cost will be approximately $660.00 (New York to Paris) plus some meals. Those interested should contact, by mid-November, Dr. Cummings (Vasey 104) or Dr. Mongeau (St. Thomas 312). Students may sign up for the tour without taking the course. Enrollment is limited.

Belle Aire

The Belle Air staff is now scheduling appointments for yearbook pictures. Carl Wolf Studios will be on campus October 14 and 15 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Please contact Jeanne, Kathy or Mary Kay or drop a letter in the Belle Air box in Dougherty Hall Rm. 108 with dates and times you're available for appointments.

We would like to invite all organizations and clubs to submit their own copy to accompany their group picture in the yearbook. We also ask that you include a listing of your present officers as well as a list of current members.

This is very important if you want to quarentee your picture to appear in the Belle Air '82.

Please notify us as soon as possible. Appointments made on a first come, first serve basis.

Thank you,
Mary Kay 642-8964 p.m.
Jeanne 525-9558, Rm. 16
Kathy 525-9553, Rm. 13

Stage Crew

Villanova Stage Crew meetings have been changed to Tuesday evenings at 6 p.m. on the stage in the field house. All members are asked to attend on Tuesday instead of Mondays from now on. The Stage Crew can be reached at these meetings at the telephone number 645-7218.

Religious Art

"Faith and Vision — Contemporary Religious Art" opens this week in the Art Gallery. A lecture on Religious Art and Artists will be presented in the Gallery on Wed., Oct. 14th, at 3 p.m. The speaker, Rev. John J. Miller, is Chairman of the Commission on the Sacred Liturgy for the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. He will use the objects on display in the gallery as illustrations for his talk. The exhibit includes a hand-lettered book of mass prayers used by the Pope during his visit to Philadelphia.

Engr. Joint Council

The Engineering Joint Council is holding a tee-shirt contest. The slogan or design should represent all four (4) disciplines. The contest is open to all Engineering students and faculty, and the winning design gets $25.00! Submit your drawings on 8-1/2 x 11" white paper to the E.J.C. mailbox in Tolentine 131 no later than October 30th.

Pi Sigma Epsilon

Pi Sigma Epsilon, Villanova's national co-ed fraternity in sales, marketing and management, would like to thank all those who patronized our 5th annual plant sale. The plant sale was held September 28, 29, and 30. Thank you for helping us to make our plant sale a Villanova tradition.

We would like to extend special thanks to the Career Development Center for their friendly cooperation which helped make the plant sale run smoothly.

Women's Basketball

Women's basketball

Tryouts for Women's Basketball Team will be held Saturday, October 10, at 10 a.m. in Butler Annex.

Homecoming

Homecoming Applications are available in the Student Activities Office in Dougherty Hall. The deadline is October 14th, 5 p.m.

Circle K Club

There will be a meeting October 13 at 12:30 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr Room of the Connelly Center for all those interested in forming a Circle K Club (College level Kiwanis) on campus. Dr. Thomas A. Spitz, chairman of the Valley Forge Kiwanis Circle K Committee, will be head of the meeting.

Puppetry Workshop

On Saturday, November 14, 1981, a Puppetry Workshop will be held in the Graduate Department of Library Science, Villanova University, between 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Mr. Darrel Hildebrandt, Children's/Young Adult Coordinator of the Veterans Memorial Public Library, Bismarck, North Dakota, a nationally-known puppeteer, will present the workshop, "Puppets and the Library." Mr. Hildebrandt makes all his own puppets and will demonstrate how he uses them to teach library skills, perform story hours, and to form library puppet clubs.

The cost of the conference (including lunch) is $15.00. To register, contact: Carolyn C. Walsh, Librarian, Graduate Department of Library Science, Villanova University, Villanova, Pa. 19085. (215) 645-4672.

Bike Club

The Bike Club will hold two rides this Sunday, October 11. One ride will be 7 miles long while the other will be 15 miles in length. The rides will leave at 2 p.m. from the rear of the Connelly Center. All V.U. students and faculty are invited to come along. Anyone interested in going on the trip to Barnegat Light, N.J. on October 17-18 please come to the meeting on Thursday, October 15 at 7:00 in Tolentine 215.

Augustinian Retreat

The Augustinians will sponsor a retreat for young men considering a vocation to the religious life on the weekend of October 30 at Villanova. For further information contact Father John Stack, O.S.A., 108 Corr Hall, or write P.O. Box 338, Villanova, Pa. 19085, or call 645-7595.

Literary Contest

The Lynx Literary Magazine is offering a $50.00 reward for the best prose-fiction story. It must be between 750 and 1000 words. Drop off entries at the English Dept., Vasey Hall by Oct. 31, 1981. Include your name and a means to contact you.

Connelly Center

The Connelly Center Board of Directors is composed of 13 members. These members represent Villanova Trustees, Administration, faculty, staff, students and alumna/alumnus. At the present time, the Board is looking for one staff member who is interested in serving the University and the Connelly Center in this capacity.

All faculty, students, alumna/alumnus, and staff on the Board are members through a petitionary process. This process includes a written petition to the Connelly Center Board of Directors Nominations Committee.

Applications for the position are available at the Connelly Center Information Desk and in the office of the Vice President for Student Life, 206 Dougherty Hall. All petitions must be filed by Wednesday, October 14, 1981, at either location.

The Chairman of the Connelly Center Board of Directors is the Vice President for Student Life, Dr. Richard Neville. The Director of the Connelly Center, Marc Tuchman, is an ex-officio member of the Board. Mr. Thomas Trucks, Director of Maintenance, serves as the administrator appointed by the President to the Board. Reverend William Krupa, O.S.A., is a member appointed by the Board of Trustees.

Cultural Film Series

Cousin, Cousine, a love story with a twist, is a film in the finest tradition of French comedy-love stories and will be shown on Sunday, October 11 and Monday, October 12 at 7:30 p.m. in the Cinema. It is the next in the line of Cultural Films this semester.

It is the story of Marthe and Ludovic, cousins through marriage (his uncle and her mother) and of their acquaintance that develops into friendship and their friendship that blossoms into love while their patient and loving families look on in dismay.

According to Judith Crist of the Saturday Review, "Cousin, Cousine is one of those rare delights you want to see again and again, a feel good movie that makes you like the people on the screen — and yourself."

Campus Parking to be Revised

By BILL CLARK

Villanova University is in the process of revising its parking procedure to limit the number of cars allowed on the main campus.

At its April 10 meeting, the University Senate approved a motion to limit the number of cars on campus, as well as to charge a premium fee for "preferred parking." According to Edward Murray, assistant to the president, "the policy adopted by the Senate has been adopted by the administration, and we will come up with procedures and recommendations for implementing those policies."

While claiming that something needs to be done to correct the present situation, Murray feels that the changes, "will be so drastic that input from all the parties involved will be required."

The Senate motion calls for a premium fee for those parking in the following on-campus lots: Bartley, Kennedy, Library, Corr, Mendel, Tolentine, Field House, St. Mary's, Stanford, Good Counsel, and North Ithan. In addition, these spaces are to be assigned on the basis of 1) physical disability, 2) job classification, 3) seniority, and 4) location of office.

Murray stated that the plan, which will be implemented in September 1982, will mean that fewer cars will be permitted into these lots. "There will be fewer faculty, administration, and staff that will have access to the main campus. We will definitely have to accommodate all the handicapped parking, but you have to draw the line somewhere," he said.

In the meantime, Murray feels that the solution to the crowding problem is stricter enforcement of the present regulations. "I gather that cars parking without stickers has become an increasing problem," said Murray. "This will have to result in more towing and ticketing of cars."

Captain Cunnane of Villanova security claims that cars parking without stickers has always been a problem. "We have a hard-core of people who park without stickers," he said. Cunnane added that incidents of towing cars have been consistent with those of previous years.

Even though Cunnane was unable to provide information about the number of stickers sold for the 800 employee and 2300 student parking spaces, he said that the beginning of the academic year usually poses parking problems.

"Every year at this time we have a lot of congestion," said Cunnane. "Nobody seems to have any patience about it."

Mr. Warren Richardson, chairman of the speech communications department, however, claims that student cars in the St. Mary's lot is the cause of the problem. "Students have been told they can park in the St. Mary's lot at night, as long as they are gone by the next morning. The cars however, are always there the next morning. We are often forced to park in the driveway and the access road," said Richardson.

Both Murray and Cunnane felt that an additional parking lot would not solve the parking problem on campus. "I do not see the creation of any large scale parking lot on the main campus in the near future," said Murray. More spaces would probably not be acceptable to the community.

We have to consider the environmental impact of paving large sections of the campus," added Murray.

Finances Reviewed

most instances, the deans submit proposal over the 10 percent guideline.

It definitely is not enough, said Robert Lynch, dean of engineering. "If we want some equipment that costs a great deal, 10 percent won't cover it. Instead of taking the expense out of one year's capital budget, the cost should be spread over a number of years. Why should one class have to pay for equipment that will be used for ten years by other classes?"

"Some colleges definitely need more — the deans request it," explained Gallen. According to Gallen, the expense for certain materials is taken care of as soon as possible by the supplementary budget — surplus money accrued after the primary expenses are paid throughout the year. Father Driscoll releases portions of the money as deemed necessary.

Both Gallen and Fenner agreed — that cutbacks in financial aid by the Reagan administration could affect the financial outlook at Villanova.

"We can't estimate as exact as we would like," said Gallen. "We don't know how many current students will have to drop out because of costs and lack of available aid or those who won't be able to attend in the first place."

According to Fenner, while the cuts may be felt slightly, it won't affect most students. "There is a ceiling for the students who will be affected. I don't believe the 'pool of students' will feel it."

In breaking down the $47 million operating budget for 1981-82, 68 percent came from tuition, 23 percent from room and board and service facilities and the balance from gift endowments, investments and state grants to the university.

"Villanova is extremely tuition-oriented," said Fenner. "I was amazed at the lack of endowment for Villanova considering its size and reputation. As an outsider, I believe that most Catholic-related universities have depended on living endowments from the religious people. With a lot of lay people filling faculty and administrative positions, a lot of the endowment funds are changing."

"Father Driscoll decides on percent increases," said Gallen. "His views are made known to the committee. He decides what Villanova can afford."

Nobel Economist Speaks On Reaganomics

By RICHARD DI STEFANO

Lawrence R. Klein won the 1980 Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences for his innovative work in econometrics. This discipline seeks to forecast how an economy might react to changes in the many variables that comprise the economy. Equations are set up to represent these variables; mathematics and statistics as well as economics are used to make predictions.

Klein earned the doctorate in economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In 1978 he received an honorary degree from Villanova University; he holds ten others. He has written, co-authored, or edited nearly two hundred published professional articles and a score of books.

He is Chairman of the Professional Board of Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates, Inc., and a Benjamin Franklin Professor of finance and economics at the University of Pennsylvania. Following are excerpts from an interview that took place there last Friday, October 2.

The Villanovan: Dr. Klein, last December in U.S. News & World Report you said that with "good luck and wise policies, we could be in much better shape by 1986, with an annual growth rate of 3 percent and an annual inflation rate of 7 percent." You did note that this was contingent on a tax cut tilted toward the business sector, rather than one across the board toward the private sector as well. In light of President Reagan's across the board reduction which took effect yesterday, how would you revise last December's figures for growth and inflation?

Klein: I think the Administration's tax program is ill-advised, partly because it's personal rather than business it doesn't have the right tilt, and partly because it's a big cut being stretched over three years. So the end result of that is to increase the deficit position of the federal government. And together with their tight money policies, assuming that that's what they want, that generates pressure on capital markets and high interest rates which feed back into poor investment activity. So I think it's counterproductive. And it wouldn't be difficult to make it better. Either they could relax their stance on monetary strategy, or they could restructure the tax program so as to have less of a big cut: either cut out the third year or trim back the size of the cut. Or, preferably, to tilt it toward the business end of the cut. You see, when I said 3 percent, I meant 3 percent on average in each single year, and I think that if what they do gives us 3 percent, it may give us a little more inflation, it may give us a bigger deficit, but a less good economic picture than we could have otherwise.

The Villanovan: Also last December you noted that the Federal Reserve had "over-rated and lost control" of the money supply. At this time, would you revise that statement?

Klein: I think they overreacted again. Now, they've been running too low, and when they overreacted they went very high, in 1980. First they were too low, in the beginning of 1980, and that was an overreaction. And then they went too high, and that was an overreaction. Now they're too low again.

The Villanovan: In the future can we expect to see more of this behavior?

Klein: That's what I feel, yes, as a result of the Reserve's activities.

The Villanovan: Dr. Klein, your work with Project LINK involves formulating econometric models for developing countries. We've recently heard the Administration's statement that the "magic of the marketplace" will determine aid to these countries. How will this approach affect your analysis?

Klein: Our model works through the marketplace; basically, we have a market economy, but you can nudge it along. I think that many third world countries are in a poor state, and they can't wait for the market to do its magic. It might be slow, or it might fluctuate around missing the market, and I think it should be helped along. And I think the problem is building up.

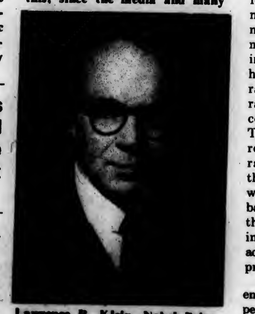
The Villanovan: What adjustments, then, will you make; where will the emphasis be?

Klein: I think more conscious policy planning for transfers of capital from North to South, but I don't recommend, of course, any giveaways. I don't recommend supporting unworthy areas of the world, but I think there are so many worthy things that can be supported, that's the way it should go.

The Villanovan: The Consumer Price Index (CPI) has been criticized for being based on 1972 patterns of consumption, which have now changed; for example, less gasoline is now consumed, and housing is overemphasized, not being treated as investment. What can econometrics do to improve this, since the media and many people give the CPI so much attention?

Klein: I think that's true of many economic statistics, and certainly any one that's published monthly or weekly. But the CPI in the United States has a few special problems. I think the CPI in general is a very complex subject. We probably need a presidential commission to re-examine this. Any CPI should have the weights recalculated every five or ten years, so it's due for a weight change. We don't have to say it's due simply because of the big things that have happened just the past few times, but in normal routine management the CPI should be re-assessed, and then the reasons that you've advanced are additional. Now, there is one other point about the value of the CPI, and that is that we give very unusual weight to the treatment for housing, and in particular, mortgages. And it means that we magnify in the total index, very much, movements in short term interest rates, either getting very high increases in the CPI when rates go up, or abnormally low rates when they come down. A commission should examine that. There are rather simple ways of re-assessing treatment of interest rates in housing costs to cut out this roller coaster. Nevertheless, whenever we start to modify the basic index (and at the same time there have been great uses in that index, as in figuring cost of living adjustments), we will run into problems. People will be frightened that the index is being tampered with in order to do them out of their just earnings, and I think we will have trouble, especially from trade unions, as we start to reconsider the index.

"I think the Administration's tax program is ill-advised. Partly because it's personal rather than business it doesn't have the right tilt, and partly because it's a big cut being stretched over three years."



Lawrence R. Klein, Nobel Prize winner in Economic Sciences, comments on Reagan economic policies.

The Villanovan: The Reagan Administration is apparently considering the move toward a return to a United States gold standard. Other nations would also return to a gold standard.

Klein: We can't force them; they could turn it down, and it wouldn't do us any good to do it unilaterally.

V.U. Improvement Would Cost $30M

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

The Villanova campus buildings and grounds are in need of over $30,000,000 in maintenance and repairs, according to a survey conducted by the maintenance department. And, according to Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, most of the work will not be completed because the University does not have the money.

The "Physical Plant Survey" of the Villanova campus was conducted by the Villanova maintenance department between September 15 and December 31 of 1980.

The three-volume study concentrated exclusively on work needed to improve existing facilities which have deteriorated with time and have had most major maintenance work deferred over many years.

One example of deferred maintenance, said Trucks, is roof renovation. "Some of these roofs are 70 years old and have been patched over and over" because complete replacement is much too expensive."

The Plant Survey notes that on Tolentine Hall, "Thirty percent of the roof slates are broken or missing," and the buildings lightning rod system is inadequate for its size. The survey also called attention to renovations needed in plumbing, lighting, heating, electricity, fire alarm systems and insulation in almost every building on campus.

Most of this work will probably not be done in the near future, said Trucks.

Maintenance deferral is a financial fact of campus management, said Vice President for Student Life Dr. Richard Neville. "When money gets tight, one of the easiest things to cut is maintenance. I mean it's pretty easy to put off painting your house for another year," he said.

"It happens everywhere," said Trucks. "Villanova is not at all unique in that area." Recently, Bryn Mawr College added up its deferred maintenance to a sum of $20 million, said Trucks.

Most of the funds for deferred maintenance, said Neville, have to come from outside sources.

Glenmead Trust, a Philadelphia family trust that gives grants to institutions on the basis of need, gave Villanova $800,000 towards replacement of all windows in Tolentine and Vasey halls.

Trucks said that another source of funds is the U.S. Department of Energy. The federal government grants matching funds to help schools decrease energy consumption. For such projects as insulation and improvements in heating system efficiency, the government will pay half of the cost. Projects such as replacement of the Fieldhouse roof comes under this designation as the new roof is heavily insulated, according to Trucks.

This year Villanova received $388,820 in matching funds for energy improvements and an additional $26,000 to look for more ways to improve energy efficiency here.

"We were lucky to get that money," said Trucks. "A lot of schools did not get any at all. We did our homework better."

Economist Views Administration

The Villanovan: The Administration has established a commission to study the problem. Would the costs of a return to gold outweigh the benefits for the U.S.?

Klein: Definitely. It's an inflexible system of establishing international exchange rates. I think the floating system we have now is better, and I would prefer, even to that, a return to Bretton Woods, but at a new set of parities. The Bretton Woods system of fixed parities worked very well for twenty-five-odd years; let us reset the parities and see if we can get another twenty or twenty-five years out of the system. That's a much better procedure. I think that's better than the present float, and it's better than going back to gold.

The Villanovan: Dr. Klein, where is the United States headed during the 1980's?

Klein: Basically I think the U.S. economy is going to have an O.K. decade, and that we will progress reasonably well. The consensus view is that we are going to slow down compared with previous decades, particularly the fifties and sixties, in terms of growth; not only us but also the Western industrial countries. And more inflation, because in the fifties and sixties we had more growth and about 2, 3, or 4 percent inflation. Now the prospects are for a point less growth and 4 or 5 points more inflation. That's the best judgment this period. Now at the present time I'm detecting great pessimism in other parts of the world about the problems of achieving prosperity. That's especially true in Western Europe; I think the Europessimism has been overdone. Indeed, if you want to call this a scaled-down view by the United States as optimistic, then I would say that the optimism seems justified.

Radnor/V.U. Relations Surveyed

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY and CAROL ALKONS

The relationship between Radnor Township and Villanova University is, despite some minor problems, basically friendly.

For at least the past ten years, students have maintained a friendly relationship with their Radnor neighbors, according to Eugene Ruane, director of public relations.

"Generally, the Radnor police and Villanova University have an excellent relationship. It is as good as can be expected given the set circumstances between the university and the community," stated Ruane. Since the tailgates are contained on campus, complaints about them come only from residents living in the immediate vicinity. He noted that between tailgates and off-campus parties there is "a surprisingly low number of phone calls." Generally, the students are well-behaved, although some friction can't be avoided, commented Ruane.

Charles B. Guernsey, Radnor township manager, agreed that there are some problems between residents and students and stated: "Basically about the only things we hear about are the problems, but we've been able to work them out. There really aren't that many."

Ruane described a friendly relationship between students and the community and credited the Radnor Police Department for "carrying off its duties with an understanding of the needs of the students." He explained that although Villanova is set in the midst of quiet suburban communities, Radnor police are "tolerant and considerate."

Regarding the university's use of property, problems once arose when plans were made to build Good Counsel and Stanford dormitories. Good Counsel was constructed according to building ordinances, but Stanford's structure was in violation of them. Questions arose concerning the height and density of people per square foot. The Radnor Zoning Board waived the technical violations, but the township's Board of Commissioners felt that the Zoning Board did not have this authority. After a court battle, a decision was made in favor of the Zoning Board.

Ruane noted that although some people drew sides on this issue, the disagreements "dissipated within a few years."

Ruane summed up the situation by stating that "Villanova brought apparent confusion to a tranquil community. This irks some, but exhilarates others."

Debate Team Successful

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The Villanova debate team, with a recent record of three victories since July, is expecting its most successful year to date, according to moderator Dr. Russell Church of the Speech Communications department.

The team's topic of debate was chosen over the summer and, said Church, generally remains the same throughout the year. The team has chosen "Resolved: That the Federal Government should significantly curtail the powers of labor unions in the United States" as its stance. This policy proposition calls for the Federal Government to impose significant, direct legislative limits upon the authority and/or influence of labor unions in the United States.

The team competes against students from throughout the nation, and this year has been invited to a tournament at Xavier University, to which only 24 teams have been invited.

Church said that the Villanova University debate team returned victorious from the Arizona National Debate Institute held at the University of Arizona in Tuscon from July 29th through August 11th. The Villanova team of Carl Giordano, Senior Pre-Med and Dan Sullivan, Senior Pre-Law finished the preliminary rounds of competition with a win-loss record of 6-2.

Villanova competed against teams from throughout the nation. Over 250 students and faculty from 39 states attended the 5th Annual Arizona Debate Institute.

The Villanova team placed 3rd in the preliminary competition in a field of 33 teams in their division. Dan Sullivan also was awarded a trophy as second best speaker in the field of 80 debaters.

The Villanova University debate teams also had a victory at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md. on the weekend of September 25-27, 1981. The Villanova team of Bill Dawson, junior accounting major, and Arthur Figueiredo, junior math major, finished the preliminary rounds of competition with a win-loss record of 6-2, explained Church.

The Villanova team of Dan Sullivan, senior accounting and English major, and Carl Giordano, senior chemistry major finished the preliminary rounds of competition with a win-loss record of 5-3. Both teams qualified in the top eight of the twenty-six teams attending from mid-atlantic states. Their qualification in the top eight made both teams eligible to compete for the tournament championship.

Dan Sullivan also was awarded a trophy as the 4th best speaker in the field of 72 speakers.

The teams again returned victorious from the tournament held at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. on the weekend of October 2-4th. The Villanova team of Bill Dawson, junior accounting major and Arthur Figueiredo, junior math major finished the preliminary rounds of competition with a win-loss record of 6-2. Villanova defeated teams from the University of Pennsylvania, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Columbia University, West Virginia University, Seton Hall University and Harvard.

The Villanova team of Dan Sullivan, senior English and accounting major and Carl Giordano, senior chemistry major finished and preliminary competition with a win-loss record of 5-3. Sullivan was also awarded a trophy as 4th best speaker in the field of 72 speakers.

After the preliminary rounds, Dawson and Figueiredo entered the quarter-finals elimination round where they lost to the team from Bates College on a 2-1 decision.

Church said that most team members learn their art by training here at Villanova.

"Right now we're training a group of beginners. They just learn like anyone learns." said Church, who explained that only one member of the team had any debating experience previous to attending Villanova.

"This will probably be our most successful year. Villanova has never qualified for a national tournament," said Church, and added that he expects the team to have a good chance of qualifying for one this year. "Our region includes Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, West Virginia, Virginia and Maryland, and the District of Columbia. Only four debate teams are chosen from hundreds. This year we may qualify."

What Is Newsworthy?

Last Friday, the Villanovan ran a story about Villanova basketball player who had been arrested by Radnor Police. Many people have reacted to the story, some vociferous and negative. In fact, the basketball team has been instructed not to speak to us.

Some people close to the events asked the Villanovan not to print the story, at least for a while. They claimed the story would be detrimental to Villanova basketball.

The publication of that story and other stories is an editorial decision.

Neither the Villanovan nor any other newspaper should resort to being a cheerleader for anyone, including a sports team which it covers. The job is to present the facts.

By necessity, a basketball player is a public figure. Some people claim that this story would not be given such coverage if the student were not a basketball player. That is true. A story automatically becomes more newsworthy, depending on the prominence of the person involved. Television and newspapers do this every day.

The arrest was public information, and the incident was printed by other local papers.

Finally, rumors of the incident were circulating the campus several days before we printed the story. Many of these rumors were completely inaccurate. The Villanovan feels it is better for everyone to know the facts that for many to rely on hearsay for their information. That is our purpose, and the purpose of all responsible newspapers.

Damage Monies Are Misspent

"In any event, the institution clearly has the right to recover damages done to its property. Further, it retains the right to disperse these funds as it deems necessary."

Director of Resident Life Christopher Janosik asserted these claims in an op-ed printed in last week's Villanovan concerning fees assessed resident students for vandalism damage.

In particular, Janosik stated that Villanova University, while it may charge students for specific damages to its property, is not in the least compelled to spend these funds on repairs of the breakage.

By implication, he is saying that the damage charges are not necessarily for purposes of restitution, but are punitive actions against resident students by the University.

We feel that this is grossly unfair.

We do not dispute that the school be able to recover monies from students for specific vandalism damage done to its property. This is a standard practice in any tenant-landlord relationship.

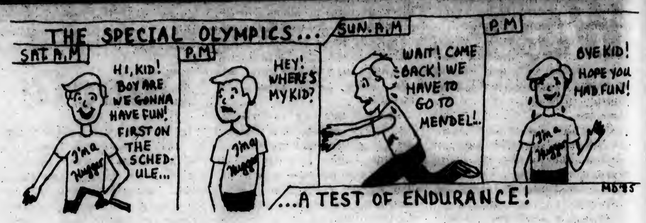
The University, however, is obligated to act in good faith. By not repairing these damages, Villanova has misled students into thinking these funds would be used for their original intent.

Report Unheeded

The Ad-Hoc Committee reporting on athletics to the University Board of Trustees, published for the first time in this week's Villanovan, reports that the Villanova football program was losing approximately $225,000 per year in 1979. This figure contradicts rumored losses of approximately $700,000 per year.

When one considers not only the loss of prestige for the University, but also the loss of revenue (i.e., alumni contributions and free advertisements), it seems that by dropping football, Villanova was losing more than they thought.

The Villanova Board of Trustees should have listened to its own sub-committee.



Letters to the Editor

Arrest Article Response

Dear Editor:

In response to Miss Winter's article about Stewart Granger, I feel that I must take exception.

Journalistically one is always told to report the facts and I agree that the Villanovan has done this, but what I really disagree with is the layout decision for this article.

In my opinion this story was not worthy of the front page. True, it was a very slow news week: nevertheless, the Granger article should not have been on that page.

For the past two years I have done the play-by-play for many of Villanova's basketball games both home and away. When traveling on the road with the team one gets to know the players fairly well. Stewart Granger is one of the nicest persons that anyone could ever hope to meet. Granger, a fairly quiet and shy individual off the court, has demonstrated a tremendous amount of leadership and integrity on the court which has been necessary to make Villanova's basketball tradition the success that it is.

Maybe this article did not even belong in the Villanovan. When I suggested this to some of the editors I was told that the Villanovan could have made more out of the issue than it did. Many students often feel that it is unfair that the basketball team members get more attention than the "regular" students at Villanova; if this is true, then this is exactly what the Villanovan is doing — we have put Stewart Granger on a level above everyone else. Would this article have appeared in the Villanovan if Granger was not a basketball player? Probably not!

In closing, would you have printed this article if Granger was your roommate and best friend? Journalistically I know you will say yes, but as the person and friend that I've known you as, I'm not so sure.

Sincerely,
Bob Herman

Villanova Should Be Proud

To the Editor:

This may come as a shock to you but Villanova University has its detractors. Yes, this is true. I kid thee not! There are some residents of Radnor Township who take umbrage at the behavior of Villanova students. There are some members of the administration of this University who have fixed, pejorative views of the students they serve. By golly, there might even be colleagues of mine on the faculty who do not particularly like their students.

Well, I am here to tell you, your Exalted Editorship, that Villanova University should be proud of its students and its faculty — but in this regard especially its students.

On a marvelous Fall weekend, October 3 and 4, 1981, the students of Villanova responded most generously and most admirably in order to provide for some very special people some very special moments in a very Special Olympics. They organized, they operated, they hugged, they fed, they taught, they took care of and participated with children who needed them. Outside volunteers from Sun Oil Company and other corporations remarked at length about the quantity and quality of our student volunteers. What I find hard to believe is that some of them were surprised.

In short, my dear Editor, a number of our faculty, tons of visitors, and scores of children learned once again of the real Villanova students. I would like to express to the student body and to the community as a whole the pride that I feel for being a part of Villanova and for being associated with so many outstanding young men and women.

Sincerely,
Dan Regan

Wage Peace by All Possible Means

Hardnosed realism is going to be the death of us all.

Ever since 1945 the United States has been arming itself at an unprecedented rate. Just now the Reagan administration is planning to surpass by far even that formidable record. We hear of a new bomber fleet, a whole new generation of missles and missle systems and major new additions to the Navy. All of these expenses, which are rapidly driving us towards fiscal collapse, are justified in the name of realism.

Their very proponents admit that a nuclear war would be terrible, almost unthinkable. Still, they say, the Russians are doing it, we must remain strong enough to survive a first strike, and, anyway raw power has always been the final arbiter between nations. Naive idealists, bleeding hearts, and fuzzy-minded pacifists are the real danger. They are likely so to weaken us as to tempt the Russians to start a war that they think they can win.

Unfortunately none of the reluctant realism is realistic. A better name for it would be blind traditionalism. It rests on a series of assumptions that are hopelessly out of date.

The first of these is that we can play the nuclear game and the Russians won't. That is, we are basing our entire hopes for the successful defense of Western Europe on a scenario of response which would cost the Russians a minimum of one million military dead and which would literally obliterate the Polish, Czeh, and East German peoples as well as the western fifth of the Soviet Union. Having done that we argue that the latter will quit rather than respond at the nuclear level against Western Europe and the United States. Fat chance! But that is what the deployment of Pershing missles in Europe is all about.

The second of these assumptions is closely related to the third. That is, that a successful nuclear first strike is possible. Presume, for the sake of argument, that the Soviet Union is able by some freak of luck to destroy every intercontinental bomber, every land based missle and every nuclear submarine of the United States — save just one such submarine. That single submarine is armed with 224 nuclear warheads, each much more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb. Within twenty minutes it alone can destroy every city of more than 100,000 inhabitants in the Soviet Union: A "successful" first strike by the United States against the Soviet Union is just as impossible.

The third assumption is that defense is possible against nuclear weapons and their effects: Grant an absolutely successful first strike against the United States. Such a feat would require the use of approximately 3,500 warheads. Their detonation would create a massive radioactive cloud, which weather patterns would quickly disseminate throughout at least the northern hemisphere, lethally poisoning the atmosphere, the water, the earth, and so the food chain. The "victors" and every other mammal in the hemisphere would die surely but slowly, and painfully, of radioactive poisoning.

Present circumstances permit only one realistic course — to wage peace by any and all possible means.

Place Cross Before Sword

"Thus says the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to bring such evil upon this place that all who hear of it will feel their ears tingle. This because they have forsaken me and alienated this place by burning in it incense to strange gods which neither they nor their fathers knew; and the kings of Judah has filled this place with the blood of the innocent. They have built high places for Baal to immolate their sons in fire as holocausts to Baal: such a thing as I neither commanded nor spoke of, nor did it enter my mind." Jeremiah 19:3-5

Last Tuesday afternoon while walking across the campus to catch the Paoli train, I somberly witnessed the resurgence of the military on the U.S. Catholic campus. Seventy men and women, dressed smartly in naval/marine uniforms, were parading to the beat of a drum corps at Villanova. As I turned my head to catch the show; the church spires adorned with the cross of Christ, the nonviolent one, created a gentle backdrop of contradiction. No one on campus seemed the least bit ruffled at the sight. Priest, student and professor would pause for a brief moment and then resumed their journey. I did the same.

Later, certain questions arose in my heart. I wondered: Are these ROTC students being told the full story concerning the U.S. role in the world as one of the two dominant superpowers? Do the marine candidates know about their role in El Salvador to advise and train soldiers for a brutal regime guilty of countless atrocities upon civilians? Are the students required to take courses from non-military personnel in Christian ethics, the primacy of conscience, and the modern hazards of war? Are they questioned on whether they could follow orders which might command them to push the buttons of our nuclear arsenal and unleash the forces of hell upon innocent men, women and children?

One possible assignment for these naval students could be the new Trident nuclear submarine. This 'god' of the sea is about 560 feet long or equal to two football fields. One sub will contain 408 warheads with a destructive force of 2,040 Hiroshima bombs. There is a proposed fleet of 30 such subs with a cost of $1.7 billion per ship. The Tridents' kill capacity is inconceivable and that is why it is so difficult to comprehend what demons have been created in the name of defense, national security and peace.

Catholic social teaching for the last 20 years has resoundingly been clear on the question of modern warfare: "Any act of war aimed indiscriminately at the destruction of entire cities or of extensive areas along with their population is a crime against God and humankind . . . The arms race is an utterly treacherous trap for humanity and one which injures the poor to an intolerable degree," Vatican II, Church in the Modern World. '65.

When I hear from our president of budget transfers (not cuts) from the social services for those most in need to the tune of 48.6 billion dollars while the Pentagon is to receive approx. $1.3 trillion in the next five years; I question why Christian-based universities aggressively seek research contracts from the Pentagon thru liason officers as well as permitting the training of students to be the cannon fodder in the next bloody war for power and national pride/greed.

I respectfully plead with the president of Villanova, the Board of Directors, the student body and, especially, my brothers and sisters in ROTC to struggle with the real meaning of the Pentagon intrusion here in the light of the Gospels. Do we need 10,000 strategic and 22,000 tactical nuclear weapons for defense? Does Christ say to us to compete with or to imitate our enemies in military viciousness or does He ask us to be a beacon of reason and hope for reconciliation? The cross is an object of ridicule today as it was 2,000 years ago. Yet, every Christian is asked to put the cross before the sword. The warning of Jeremiah holds true today. The state and the church implicitly or explicitly continue to perform the age old ritual of sacrificing our children to the gods of war.

'Teddy Scores Big Hit With Nation'

In early March of 1907 a serious disagreement between the baseball commissioner and players threatened to disrupt the forthcoming season. Tensions heightened when Commissioner Lewie Kuhn, announced that there would be no season unless all players agreed to take a loyalty oath pledging support of the commissioner. Kuhn, a distant relative of his contemporary counterpart, had his authority questioned several times during the '06 season following decisions related to player suspensions and game protests.

The president, still buoyed by his Nobel Prize for participation in the post-war negotiations between Russia and Japan, threw himself into the controversy. Secretly he believed that Kuhn, a Democrat, hoped for a player strike to embarrass the president. Teddy Roosevelt was particularly miffed as he was scheduled to throw out the ball on opening day.

As spring training drew near, no settlement was in sight. Roosevelt played his trump card — he called to his office the secretary of the Army. It was leaked to the press the president planned to utilize the Army as players; he would, as commander-in-chief would, serve as commissioner!

Kuhn called the move a bluff; baseball fans eagerly awaited the showdown. Club owners, to a man Republicans, had only accepted Kuhn as commissioner to thwart his political ambitions, now revelled at the coming duel.

When Kuhn refused to revoke his order, Big Ed Delahanty, speaking for the players, announced — "There will be no season unless the loyalty oath is revoked." Kuhn refused.

On April 17 at 9 a.m. an announcement came from the White House — the following Army units will proceed to the stadiums indicated to begin pre-season practice. A hastily called secret meeting of the owners lasted until the early hours of the morning. At 5, April 18, reporters were read the following: "Commissioner Kuhn has been relieved of his duties; players are to report immediately to their appropriate teams. The President will throw out the first ball on opening day."

The nation cheered, The New York Times ran an extra "Teddy Scores Big Hit With Nation." On the season's first day Ed Delahanty presented the president with an oversized bat in appreciation. Henceforth, historians referred to TR's masterful stroke in saving the season as "Big Stick" Diplomacy.

Books:

Quality, Price Questioned

What ever happened to hardback books? They seem to be an endangered species. A few years ago, you would be glad if the book you needed was a paperback, because it would be a little cheaper and easier to carry around. Now, after some quiet observation and the acquisition of a larger collection of books it is apparent that the book industry is slowly phasing out hardback editions. The reason for this is quite obvious, hardbacks are more expensive to produce then softbacks. The less money publishers spend manufacturing books, combined with the outrageous cost of these books translates into more money in their pockets. The end result of this is a cheaply made book that is likely to fall apart in the very near future, and less money in our (the students) pockets.

This situation requires careful examination, but it is all too often swept under the rug. The University gets some percentage of total profits from book store sales, so administrators are most likely indifferent to the problem of poor quality and exorbitant prices. Secondly, professors get their books free from the publisher (usually a hardback version of the students' softback). Thirdly, some students couldn't care less whether their $14 paperback falls apart, because it will probably go in the circular file at the end of the year.

For these students who care about the quality of the books they buy, they can go through the long and cumbersome process of gathering together at least twenty students who have the same misfortune with the same book. They then must write a letter giving the details of their complaint, those with the signatures of those twenty students with the same complaint. In most cases this process would be much more trouble than it's worth, and be dismissed as "just one of those things you have to live with."

The sad reality is that publishers are quite aware of the many variables they have working in their favor, and don't hesitate to capitalize on them. On the other side of the coin, students need certain books that can only be obtained at a certain place (namely the book store in Kennedy Hall), and are therefore left with no other choice but to buy a poorly made product at an inflated price. Is there really any remedy to this situation?

'Specials' Thanked

Villanova University Administration, Faculty, Staff and Students:

Villanova University has long been a school noted for its outstanding sports programs and its outstanding athletes, a number of whom have been honored as Olympics winners. Through the support and interest generated by Villanova in preparing and running the 1981 Special Olympics Soccer/Frisbee Tournament it seems as though Special Olympics is becoming a very important aspect of the Villanova Sports Tradition. This program enables Villanova Administration, faculty, staff, and students to participate in a joint effort to produce a tournament based on a shared enthusiasm and love. These special athletes join a new Villanova Sports Hall of Fame due to the great amount of effort they put forth in all they do. Villanova gains more than the effort put into the games through watching and experiencing the joy in these special Olympians.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank each and every one of you for all of the time, effort, enthusiasm and love that went into making the 1981 Tournament the best Villanova and Pennsylvania's special athletes have ever seen. It has been my pleasure to work on the tournament for the past three years and to see the growth in the program which has been made possible only through your efforts.

Sincerely,
Angie Cassiffe
Events Director

Tradition Defended

Dear Editor:

This letter is in reference to your article of last week entitled "Chugging Contest Prohibited." The decision to end fraternity chugging was made last year by Fr. Robert Martin for what I feel are personal reasons. In the article he is quoted as saying that chugging was "personally repulsive" to him. This is no doubt a result of last year's Fall chugging which, due to many delays caused by the Villanova red tape was held on a very cold December night (chugging is usually held in October) and as a result of this weather, several of the chuggers became sick. I can understand Fr. Martin's feelings but do not consider this a valid reason for ending a tradition which is one of the highlights of the Greek year.

There was also some concern expressed by Dr. Richard Neville that "rapid consumption of alcohol may have damaging physical effects." As a member of past chugging teams, I can attest to the fact that it does not.

Fraternity chugging is a great tradition at Villanova which, like so many others lately, has fallen prey to a select few who do not particularly care for it. There is one difference, however, in that chugging is organised and funded totally by the fraternities. Of course, the administrators will always have their concerns and justly so, but chugging has always run smoothly in the past and I hope it will be given the chance to do so again.

Sincerely,
John Staunton

Headline Faulted

Dear Editor:

The headline used on the Op-Ed article by Mr. Christopher Janosik, Director of Residence Life, failed to call the attention of your readers to the core of the letter: it was a point by point discussion of questions raised regarding damage charges.

Not only did it discuss the questions, in several instances it acknowledged that actions of the University were less than desirable, and Mr. Janosik promised there would be no recurrence of these actions.

In a situation where an administrator chose to be direct and accountable, and to acknowledge error, you settled for a muddled headline. Maybe you'd rather have the targets of criticisms remain vulnerable?

Sincerely,
Barbara Agnew
Department of Religious Studies

Attitude Contrast

Dear Editor:

Last weeks glimpse of Villanova during the 1960's did a great job in contrasting the attitudes of former Villanova students to the current students now at Villanova. The "Let's get involved" has given way to the "Who Knows-Who Cares." In all fairness to today's students it should be pointed out that the students of the 60s had more important issues to rally around that we do today. We are living in great times, just this week the president's tax cut went into effect allowing me to save enough money at the end of the year to buy an extra bottle of hair to drown my sorrows over the ever increasing cost of attending Villanova. If we had a Viet Nam, you would see the same amount of activism displayed today as was displayed in the 60s. All we have to worry about is Nuclear War and all of its consequences that we read about in [illegible] Goodbye." That's hardly anything to get concerned over, the matter is in good hands. We have a man in the White House who always gets the bad guys in the movie, and a former Army general who is always "in control" for our secretary of state. What more could you ask for besides Soviet leaders who in their splendid wisdom know they can win a limited Nuclear War.

The one issue we do have to fight over is the elimination of the football team, and even that could be solved easily. All we have to do is get the program classified as "truly needy" and I'm sure Reagan will "do it for the zipper."

Yes, they really had some great issues back in the 60s. As for the issues of today, we all know, but do we all care?

Berger Gets 'A Taste Of Honey'

By J. HART

"What a "taste of honey' is, is those moments when you're touched by happiness, when you experience love. It is something sweet, but it doesn't come often."
— Theresa Berger

On Wednesday, October 14, Villanova's Vasey will start its fall season with Shelagh Delaney's award-winning A Taste of Honey, and Theresa Berger, who stars as Jo, the wisecracking teenage heroine of the production, will celebrate her 23rd birthday.

Berger, a senior nursing student here at Villanova, is tackling her first major role on Vasey's stage. As she sat, curled up in a chair, eating cheese and drinking Diet Pepsi ("Don't mention the brownies.") she talked about her character, her studies and herself in a recent interview.

"I want people to take the play as an honest presentation of a person who is lonely and bitter and searching for meaning," Berger said, "and I'm scared it won't be as honest as I'd like . . . It's not a play, it's real life."

For Berger, it is very real. Her character, she said, is easy for her to relate to. "It's that sense of insecurity that comes when you don't know where you're going," she explained.

Growing up in Lancaster, Pa., the third of four children, she remembers herself as being "independent and aloof" like the character she portrays in Honey. And, like Jo, she is familiar with the pain that accompanies adolescence, especially the trauma of establishing one's self as an independent. "That is a very hard time. And, I think, until you become totally independent there is always anger. Afterwards, you can become friends," Berger noted.

Now, she says, she is grateful for her relationship with her parents. Especially since she has started playing Jo. "It's nice to find out what it means to have parents who care about you," Berger said.

Sitting, talking to her, one is struck by Berger's intelligence and energy. Although she carries a relatively light course load in the College of Nursing, her day is a full and hectic one.

Diane Cribbs (standing) is Helen and Theresa Berger is Jo in Villanova Theatre's production of "A Taste Of Honey."

On any given day, she rises by 7 a.m., studies in her apartment, attends classes or "clinical" (hospital training at the Pediatric's Ward of Philadelphia's Children's Hospital), until 9 p.m. Then it is off to rehearsal at Vasey Theatre until 11 p.m.

Throughout it all, she still manages to maintain a high grade point average and time to sing at occasional weddings and Mass every Sunday. "Don't get me wrong, I come home exhausted. But I enjoy school, so it makes it easy to find time to study," she said.

Last year, she took time off from her school and studies to teach Math, English and Art to 6th graders at St. Therese, a Catholic School in Mount Airy. She also wrote and directed a Christmas play for her students.

The reason she keeps herself so busy, stems from her definition of a real nurse, and her goal in that field. "Nurses are not just people who go into the hospitals, they should go out among the people and teach them to prevent physical and mental illness," Berger feels.

Berger hopes finally to combine her nursing, teaching and acting to pursue the field of psycho-drama therapy, a method of treatment in aiding patients understanding of their problems by acting them out.

After Honey closes, Berger's schedule will be no less hectic. She is involved in the planning of Hunger Awareness Week and another Christmas play at St. Therese. She also will resume taking ballet lessons.

What's A Band?

By MARISA BOLINSKI

The decision to drop the Villanova Football team affected not only the players and fans, but also a group of students that represent the spirit of Villanova. This group is the Villanova Band. Previously, the band spent the majority of the fall term practicing and performing at the weekly games. Now many people are wondering what the band is doing. According to John Dunphy, director of music activities, the band is presently developing a new program. "The band is now free to represent Villanova in places where it was never represented before," said Dunphy. Villanova's band is a unique one. It is the only band in this region with the time to go out into the community and join in activities that spread the Villanova spirit around to all. Even though there is a sadness attached to the loss of football gameon Dunphy feels optimistic concerning the future of the band.

The band has been in existence since 1850 and over the years had changed and developed. It has "adapted to new things in the past and and will continue to do so."

Thus far the band has performed at various campus activities, including an outdoor concert for the Freshmen on Labor Day and Special Olympics last weekend. They plan to perform on Parent's Weekend and in the Philadelphia Columbus Day Parade this weekend. Since the [illegible] have been practicing for these events also the entire band and front will be involved.

Villanova University is committed to the program of keeping the band going strong. There has been no budget cut or drop in personnel despite the absence of football. There is hope for new and brighter, more casual uniforms for the band. A white jacket and blue pants will replace the old grey and blue uniforms.

Dunphy reports that enthusiasm in the band is still high. There are presently ninety students in the band, which is the largest group ever. Dunphy said this could be due to good recruiting and also to the fact that many students have had enough of the traditional marching bands in high school. The new Villanova band offers them the potential to be "the pride of the Mainline." The band plans to service as many on campus and Philadelphia area activities as possible, including the tree lighting ceremony and campus ministry events. The group looks forward to the chance of performing at the Phillies play off games also.

The year 1982 is the Celebration of Century Four in Philadelphia. It is the 300th anniversary of the city and one event in which the band plans to take part.

Dunphy feels that diversity, development, and service are the goals for the future of the spirited Villanova band.

HoJo's Reacts To Students

In a recent study, it was found that Villanova students and faculty have a significant impact on business in the surrounding area. Still, the opinion of students by area businessmen is not always positive. Rick Denunzio, a manager at the Howard Johnson's restaurant on Lancaster Ave., was asked his opinion of students who frequent the restaurant. "My opinion is pretty good. I don't mind them. They'll really good kids."

When asked about the student's conduct in general, he commented, "During the week it's great, but Friday and Saturday nights..."

What about Friday and Saturday nights? Are the students loud? Do they harass other customers? Do they engage in boisterous play? His answers to these questions were no. "They order, they study, do homework and are well behaved during the week, but Friday and Saturday around 12 p.m. they waste time and some don't pay checks," Denunzio said.

Vandalism is a problem many times caused by students. This consists mainly of writing on restroom walls, stealing signs and tearing open packages. Theft is another problem that Howard Johnson's contends with. Denunzio mentioned that he has "lost sixty dollars a week in candies from stealing."

His biggest complaint about the patronizing by students is many times "they don't want to pay. They walk out on a lot of checks." "But," he contends, "Students really do help the business and most of the time they are well behaved."

Nautilus Comes to Villanova

By NANCY ALBERICI

Varsity athletes as well as non athletes are taking advantage of Villanova's new on campus sports training programs. This facility is a non commercial, management operation, designed for properly training athletes on campus. Located behind the fieldhouse, ATRA houses 15 varieties of Nautilus machines with two working circuits to accommodate each member.

Peter Halsch, director of ATRA, explained the advantages ATRA has to offer to Villanova students. "ATRA is the first mobile sports clinic in the country. It's the first time Nautilus has gone hand and hand with management. We are attempting to keep this center as uncommercial as possible.

"ATRA is a management program that is on campus for training athletes. Most Nautilus centers are created for the masses, we are not. We want a professional no nonsense look at the whole thing" explained Halsch.

"It is absolutely essential that athletes are in good shape or they can get injured. ATRA trains athletes for performance. It is also very valuable on campus activity," Halsch commented.

Nautilus machines are used at ATRA because they are manageable tools. "The biggest advantage of Nautilus is that it is a full range exercise. It's very manageable. The value of a program shouldn't be based only on tools, but rather it's how you use them that is important. Nautilus is the manageable tool that if in the right hands can get results," Halsch emphasized.

Each ATRA member is closely monitered by a staff of trainers who encourage them to improve by making sure the proper weight is being used and the proper technique is being applied.

Membership to ATRA is $85 per semester. Varsity athletes can use the facilities for free. The $85 is reasonable according to Bob Loscalzo, one of the trainers who is a Villanova senior. "The price is reasonable because it costs less a semester than other Nautilus programs. They have more frills that are not necessary to the program."

As can be expected athletes are pleased with the program. Don Casey, a V.U. varsity baseball player, feels that ATRA will benefit his teammates. "ATRA is an excellent program that will benefit a lot of the pitchers. It's good because varsity baseball players get to go for free. I feel the team this fall will be improved for the spring season. I went to Main Line Nautilus last year. ATRA is a lot more convenient.

Dante Santoni, another baseball player also felt the ATRA could improve his teammates' performance. "Nautilus tones, it doesn't bulk you up, and for baseball you want your muscles to be toned, not bulked up."

Dawn Fisher, a varsity tennis player, is also taking advantage of ATRA. "A lot of girls were scared of getting big muscles but from what I've heard you're not supposed to get big muscles, just toned, so I thought I'd give it a shot. In season athletes should take advantage of ATRA since its free," Dawn commented. Dawn found no problems with scheduling. "I like it because you can work it between your own schedule." Dawn felt the trainers were helpful. "The trainers are doing a good job and they are cute!"

Non athletes were also pleased with ATRA. "My legs were in shape when I lived on 3rd floor Sheehan. When I moved off campus, I don't get as much exercise," explained Nancy Armstrong. "It's good to meet people. It's an outlet to get out my frustrations and it gives you something to do besides walking to class," Nancy added.

Shay Duffin Brings 'Behan' to Life

By BERNADETTE McGOLDRICK

Shay Duffin has brought back to one of the most interesting as well as controversial writers in Irish history, Brendan Behan. In his one man show, "Confessions of an Irish Rebel" (which Duffin put together himself from the writings of the late author), the incredible wit and humor of this great man are once more remembered, as is the tragedy of his untimely death at the age of 41.

The show opens with Brendan, a glass of Guinness in hand, "mother's milk," as he calls it, addressing the audience on those subjects which he knows best, "Myself, Ireland and Ireland's contribution to literature." From there he enchants us with tales of his youth in Dublin, to the times spent in jail as a result of his political activities with the I.R.A., (from which experiences came his autobiography, The Borstal Boy, and his first stage play, "The Quare Fellow,") as well as his many occupations from house painter to Paris pimp. Included also are his opinions on newsmen, politicians, judges, writers, etc., etc... No one escapes his scathing tongue.

Concerning his own place in Irish literature, Brendan states "I'll have to die first for anyone to appreciate me." He goes on to add that one of the main reasons that he quit writing poetry was, "Because I found easier ways to starve."

Duffin's transitions into the many different characters who passed through Brendan's life, from judges and prison guards to priests, are truly brilliant, as well as the many aspects of the character he portrays to perfection.

From the hard drinking Behan we learn, "As regards drink, I can only say that in Dublin during the depression when I was growing up, drunkenness was not regarded as a social disgrace. To get enough to eat was regarded as an achievement. To get drunk was a complete victory!".

The semi-socialist Brendan finds, "The Communists want to free all the workers of the world. I'm content to make a start and free one member of it at a time . . . myself!" And finally the diseased and dying man who reflects, "Every man should be given fame for a month and then given a pension and forgotten about."

Shay Duffin, himself a native Dubliner and one-time neighbor of Behan's, is not only a remarkable and gifted actor, (winner of the Los Angeles and San Francisco Drama Critics' Best Actor Award), but is pursuing a career as a writer as well. He has just completed a play which he hopes to produce as well as perform in, with friend and fellow actor Nehemiah Persov, when he returns to his home in California.

As for Duffin's philosophy of life . . . well, it is much like Brendan's: "As Behan once said, "I respect kindness to human beings first of all and kindness to animals . . . I have a total irreverence for anything connected with society except that which makes the roads safer, the beer stronger, the food cheaper, and the old men and old women warmer in the winter and happier in the summer."

"To get enough to eat was regarded as an achievement. To get drunk was a complete victory!"

Book Review

'Scuse Me While I Kiss the Sky'

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

We demand a lot from our heroes. They are supposed to be larger than life. They are supposed to live high, run fast and die young. We would like to touch them, but we won't hold on.

'Scuse Me While I Kiss the Sky:

Jimi Hendrix

The Life of Jimi Hendrix touches the reader, and if Hendrix would have read it, he'd have wept, too. David Henderson laces 380 pages of interviews, reviews, song lyrics and photographs, with fascinating detail and a fine sense of phrasing that makes his book as exciting as Jimi's sound.

As Henderson lovingly puts forth the story of Jimi Hendrix, he manages to identify very important political and cultural threads of the 60s and how they were woven into Hendrix's career. The early rock and roll years of 1963-4, when Hendrix pursued his own electric place in music history through work with Little Richard, the Isley Brothers and King Curtis, are documented with the vigor and energy of a young decade, a decade which culminated in assassinations among a dream of peace and love and the disintegration of the Band of Gypsies.

Some of the incidents and characters with which Hendrix lived and worked were so incredible that 'Scuse Me While I Kiss the Sky sometimes reads like a fan's fairy tale: Hendrix taking a Greenwich Village stage with Buddy Guy and B.B. King the night Martin Luther King, Jr. was murdered, and donating $5,000 to King's organization, the Southeastern Christian Leadership Conference; Hendrix jamming at Steven Stills' for 14 hours after their performances at Woodstock; Hendrix living in a London flat which once housed George Frederick Handel. But since Hendrix' story is so closely linked to that of his generation, it defies a simple plot summary.

And, after the initial exhilaration that comes from touching the bits and pieces of a man gone for so long subsides, a most important realization occurs. At the end of his career, Hendrix' life was a saddening circus in which he was the star attraction. He couldn't even plug in and play somewhere without lawyers and record companies threatening each other with lawsuits and contracts, and more than anything else, Jimi Hendrix badly needed to play. His death was born of artistic frustration, drug-shattered friendships and ravaged dreams, and such as it was, may have been a sweet release.

Maybe that's a bad way to think. Maybe the excitement he brought to life is far more important than his death. Maybe he's found that perfect sound that drove him on and on. Maybe this living grain of sand swallowed a mouthful of ocean, spat out the waste, and is walking on the waters of a new day.

Neil Simon Film Flounders

By MEG EGGERT

Only When I Laugh, Neil Simon's new comedy release can be classified, if at all possible, as a depressing comedy. The cast includes Marsha Mason, Kristy McNichol, James Coco, and Joan Hackett, who are all competent comedians; however, the script detracts from their true capabilities as both comedians and actors.

The film has the capacity of being another Simon masterpiece but it falls short in attaining the cohesiveness of perfection. The shortcomings in Only When I Laugh are centered in the plot. The characters, who are heavily comical, are placed in a potentially deep, dramatic story about the relationship of an alcoholic mother and her daughter. The mother, Marsha Mason, is released from a rehabilitation center and returns home only to find her 17 year old daughter, the product of a divorce, wanting to move in. It is at this point where the comical characters cannot carry what could be a potentially dramatic story. Simon's synthesis of "Odd Couple" type comedy and drama do not blend well.

Neil Simon's qualifications as a playwright are boundless. Only When I Laugh, which is based on his play The Gingerbread Lady, is easily identifiable as a Simon genre comedy. Simon's wife, Marsha Mason, has been leading lady in many of his movies, and they have proved to be an extraordinary team. Simon flatters Mason's qualities as a comedienne-type actress and Only When I Laugh reveals the potential of both their abilities, but unfortunately displays a lacking in his ability to tie all the strings together. They could have proved it once again if the script was more balanced between comedy and drama.

The movie starts off hilariously funny but after a few short minutes begins to wear thin, so thin that by the time of the lame ending the audience is left feeling somewhat depressed. The type of comedy is entertaining at

ELO Alights on the Spectrum Stage

By PETE BERKERY

The Electric Light Orchestra thundered into the Spectrum last Friday night, using their spectacular lighting and dazzling special effects to put on a show that will be remembered by both the band and the audience for a long time. From the very first moment, when a droid resembling R2D2 whizzed on the dark stage, lights ablaze, and started singing the first few synthesized lines of Twilight, the audience knew they were in for a special treat. The lights came up to reveal the seven members of the band playing instruments which varied from drums to a violin. The band performed the first three songs, all off their latest album, Time, against the backdrop of a futuristic-looking skyscraper.

The crowd was extremely enthusiastic, almost overwhelming the band. Lead singer and composer, Jeff Lynne, felt "real welcome" on their first U.S. tour in three years. The reason for the crowd's enthusiasm was the way the band was able to play so very energetically without losing any of their precision and timing. At one point the band launched into a medley of more than ten of their big hits, which included songs from Strange Magic to Confusion, that left the audience reeling in the aisles and screaming for more. The band then performed their latest hit Hold on Tight, while the audience clapped, danced, and sung along. Two encores consisting of Don't Bring Me Down and Do Ya and the final song Roll Over Beethoven were played with even more energy. During Roll Over Beethoven, the droid reappeared on stage and danced and reeled with the rest of the band. The droid stayed on stage to give a final "thank you" and "farewell."

From start to finish the audience was made very much aware of the genius of Jeff Lynne and E.L.O. Many people feel a sound like E.L.O.'s cannot be performed on stage. The vast array of electronic equipment and the huge mixing board show just how serious the band is about producing their unique sound stage. The overwhelming respo of the audience proves the has succeeded. The same audi who almost booed the opening Ellen Foley, offstage, stood applauded for five minutes tween each encore. Ole, E.L.

Grisman Unleashes 'Dawg' Music

ease read this!
don't mean to start this review such a desperate tone, but you ever find some kind of ng place in the woods or under house that was unique and ded and you just had to tell one about it? That is the way l right now and if you are still ing then you're one of the y people who get to know
re this hide-out is.
is really quite simple. The e is the hole in your ear, and you don't realize how unique and secluded it can become until you hear "Dawg Music."

David Grisman is his name and he plays Dawg Music (pronounced — "dog"). What I'm about to say will probably scare half of who ever is left away, but Dawg Music is all acoustic instrumental music. I can see we're going to have a very small club already.

Now that we've weeded out all the earplug people, I'll tell it to you straight. This music is such a unique blend of the jazz, bluegrass and classical disciplines that it has been given a name all its own. I cannot tell you where the name came from but you've got to call it something.

David Grisman played at the Ripley Music Hall last Thursday night to a sold-out crowd with three other incredibly talented individuals who make up the David Grisman Quartet; David Grisman on mandolin, Darol Anger on violin, Mike Marshal on guitar and mandolin and Bob Wasserman on acoustic bass. The band was nothing short of invantasticredible. They played long and hard, mixing their old and new material into breakless medleys with occasional pauses to let the blood rush back into their fingers.

As a gifted soloist, Grisman showed the kind of generosity I have only seen at Zappa concerts, giving the spot light to each member of his band for considerable amounts of time, allowing the audience to appreciate the integral parts of a band which is so tight, they could play with their backs to each other, never needing the star of the show to jump off of 50 foot speaker cabinets and smashing his $600 Les Paul to signal to the other musicians that the song has indeed ended.

I'm getting semi-carried away and I really don't mean to put down another type of music in order to plug Dawg, but I'm finding that more and more people are turning on to this electrifying music that doesn't need electricity.

I played it for my little sister, who still listens to The River, and she said that Dawg Music sounds "neat." I played it for my Mother who said it sounds "nice", and my Dad said "it's like Chinese water torture." Like I said, it's a unique kind of secluded music that not everyone is going to get a chance to enjoy.

If anyone of the five of you are interested enough to buy an album, Grisman has a new one out called Mando Mando, but since it was just released a couple of days ago I would definitely go for the David Grisman Quintet album on Kaleidoscope records which was the ice breaking disk in 1976 for Dawg Music.

Finally, I'd like to say that the Ripley Music Hall was an ideal place to see a band like this and I highly recommend its intimate atmosphere to anyone who likes to hear great music while drinking a nice cold Molson. And always remember, when in doubt, do a Dawg.

Tripp Cartoons 'Wurst'

By PAUL BERN

Wallace Tripp's Wurst Seller is an amusing collection of cartoons, comics, and laughs. Published by Sparhawk Books Inc., Wurst Seller is a satire on cartoons as well as society.

The majority of cartoons are single-celled misinterpretations of common cliches that are "Virgin on the Ridiculous". Cartoons like "Lil' Orphan Spruntly," who scolds a tiger for eating her dog ("The big lummox!"), and "Little Bunny Wuffy," a sickeningly-sweet bunny who gets eaten "for the common good," are what make this collection worthwhile. If it's excitement you want, then rest assured that "William the Conker" is stuffed with "Saxon Violence."

Mr. Tripp does not stop with just "William the Conker;" he carries on with "Fred the leg man," "The perfect ten," and "A Flash in the Pan," which stars the world's sexiest mouse.

Wurst Seller has its practical uses too — where else would you be able to find the difference between a "Pseudo-Nym and a True-Nym," or a "Quasi-Modo and a Genuine-Modo?" You'll also be glad to know that there is a very accurate illustration of a "Gnome de Plume."

Don't think that this book is only for the idle dullard: it is a veritable history lesson about "Atilla the Bun," "Darius the Meaty," and "The Sack of Rome." The book is not limited to history though; you can find "Mozart's Lost Trio," and "Dante in the Lumber Region," not to mention the old maxim, "I stink, therefore I am" (or for our vegetarian readers, "I think, therefore I yam.")

Wurst Seller is a thoroughly enjoyable time-out from life's "Wail of Toes." Never has anyone written a book of cartoons that are still funny after the fifth reading: Wallace Tripp has captured the essence of what makes life just a little easier — laughter.

Vasey Offers 'A Taste of Honey'

A Taste of Honey, by Shelagh Delaney, will be the first produc tion of the 1981-82 season at Villanova Theatre. Brian Morgan wi be guest director for the production which will run October 14-1 and October 21-24.

A wise-cracking, wistful teenager named Jo is the heroine o this award-winning play. Jo is accustomed to a drab existence wi her mother whose main interests are whiskey and men. The troubles begin — her mother abandons her, and a brief affair wit a sailor has left her pregnant. Only the friendship of a young artis and her own irrepressible spirit can help her through the dif ficulties she faces.

Shelagh Delaney wrote A Taste of Honey in 1958, when she wa just 18 years old. Considering her age and the social climate of the 1950's, she demonstrates "an incredible compassion and foresight into issues of human liberation and civil rights" says director Morgan.

A Taste of Honey will run Wednesday, October 14, through Saturday, October 17, and Wednesday, October 21, through Saturday, October 24. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts and group rates available.

Novel Resurrects 'God's Other Son'

By DONNA HAYES

...od had two sons, Jesus was his ... and I, Billy Sol Hargus, was ...second." Absolutely nothing is ...ed in Don Imus' new novel ...'s Other Son, a religious satire ... in irony and humor. It ...rds the life and times of the Reverend Billy Sol Hargus, a modern day evangelist preacher who becomes a millionaire on the road to saving a few souls. For example, Hargus had his own "Jump for Jesus" radio show, ("Reach into your soul as you reach into your pocketbook!"), Discount House of Worship, ("I don't care if it rains or freezes, long as I've got my plastic Jesus"), his own line of Jesus Jets, ("No need to worry, no need to fret when you're flying aboard a Jesus Jet"), and a religious fast food chain, ("Did Jesus bless the fowls goin' into your jowls!").

The book gets much of its irony and humor from outrageous profanity, drug-use and explicit sex which unfortunately was edited from this article. Well, perhaps one tame example. Hargus believed himself to be divine. He claimed that his mama, "knew no mortal man as the seed of the Lord's own doin' blossomed in her Holy Body." The fact that half the men in town had a "To John, anytime, Love Wilma" picture in their wallet did not bother Billy one bit. Robbing the poor and giving to himself didn't worry Billy much either. Hargus didn't believe Jesus could save souls; only people could save them.

Like many, I am a product of the Christian tradition and I found that the book, on a deeper level, made me uncomfortable, then angry. In this, Imus accomplishes his purpose. He forces the average Christian to take a good hard look at established religion under the guise of absurdity and humor. You get the sneaky feeling that you'd met Billy Sol somewhere before, like maybe in church. Imus' vivid characters, colorful language, and non-stop hilarity make you laugh, cry, angry and thoughtful all at the same time.

Critically, the novel becomes a bit too bizarre towards the end to be realistic. For example, Hargus' grand finale was to walk on the water with the aid of sex hormones extracted from a female mosquito in heat. You might as well flush the whole human race. Billy is finally wasted when he attempts to walk on the Sea of Galilee, "Just like my brother did."

All in all though, the book is worth every word. "God's Other Son," offers sheer fun, food for thought and a unique perspective.

moments but quickly becomes redundant. The comical content of the movie is lacking in fresh new situations.

Simon has the workings of a good movie but relies too heavily on trite comedy and thus detracts from the actors abilities to seriously perform in the serious situations. This reviewer recommends Only When I Laugh strictly to fans of Neil Simon, other viewers may be disappointed.

If you're a senior, you'll be job hunting soon—and everyone knows how much fun that is. 300 resumes . . . saving forever for stamps . . . that letter to Dream Corp. you've written 12 times. You're beginning to wonder if you'll ever attract anyone's attention.

Why not let Dream Corp. come to you?

CPR could be the answer. We're an information service that will give over 10,000 employers in 44 countries access to your complete records. (Any idea how much stamps for 10,000 letters would cost?).

Here's how it works: You fill out a short form, listing your career and geographic preferences, your special skills, your GPA. This information is fed into the DIALOG Information Retrieval Service—a system used by businesses large and small, by research firms, accounting and insurance companies, publishers, advertising agencies, international and multinational corporations, most of the Fortune 1,000.

Employers search through computer terminals for a combination of factors, such as your degree, your languages, your extracurricular background, and so on. If you have what they want, you won't have to get their attention.

They'll come to you.

Race Tightens in Intramural Football

There are seven divisions in the intramural flag football league this season. After only two weeks the good teams, in their respective divisions, are beginning to separate from the weaker clubs.

In the American League East the Fury (2-0) appears to have a firm grip on first place. The Fury romped over the Disciples 34-0 last week. The Fury is one of the few teams which still is unscored upon.

The Travelers, also of the American League East, will probably be the Fury's toughest competition as the season winds down.

The American League Central has two undefeated teams after the second week of play. The Stallions (3-0) and the Good, Bad and Ugly (2-0). These two top clubs should stay undefeated until they play each other. Tans's Terrors, avenging an early season loss, whipped Simple Dreams 19-0. The win keeps the Terrors in the chase for a play-off spot.

Wally's Gators are the team to beat in the American League West. The Gators (2-0) rolled over the previously undefeated Stackers 33-0. Ignacio Halley quarterbacks this fine team. The defense is headed by Andy Cangelosi, who scored one of the three defensive team's touchdowns, by returning an interception for a score.

In the National League the central division is the strongest unit. Athletes Foot (2-0) beat a strong Delts team 14-0 to retain first place. Kelly's Commuter, a strong team in this division is undefeated.

Perhaps the Wave best illustrate how tough this divisi not by winning, but by l

Freshmen Play Important Role in 1981-82

By MICHAEL HEALEY

The dawning of a new season ...s upon the men's basketball ...m, and as far as this ...eorologist can see, blue skies ... overhead.

...Combine the solid nucleus of ...ers which has been formed, ...h the incoming crop of talented ...shmen, and you have a winning ...bination. Coach Rollie Mas...mino and his staff have as...bled what seems to be the ...t mix of players to produce a ...ner.

...Among the new recruits is Ed ...ckney, a 6'9", 195 pound for...rd-center from Adlai Stevenson ...h School in New York City. ...e of the most heavily recruited ...yers in the country last year, Pinckney averaged 21 points per game and an impressive 17 rebounds to boot.

In his matchups with Patrick Ewing, the Hoya of Georgetown whom Cat fans will learn to hate, Pinckney more than held his own. According to one basketball expert, "If I had to rate Ewing versus Pinckney, I'd give Ewing a 9.5 and Pinckney an 8.9 — they're that close."

Joining Pinckney in the frontcourt will be a 6'6" forward, Dwayne McClain. A leaping, left-handed shooter, McClain is from Holy Name High School in Worcester, Mass. Dwayne, like Pinckney had exceptional stats in high school, tallying 22 points and 10 boards per game.

McLain too, had the pleasure, or rather chore, of facing Ewing in an on-court battle, when Holy Name faced Cambridge Ringe and Latin in a Christmas tourney last season. In the head-to-head confrontation, Dwayne had 28 points and matched Ewing evenly before eventually fouling out with seven minutes to go in the game.

The last, but certainly not the least of the recruits was Gary McLain from Methuen High School, Methuen, Mass. Gary was the earliest recruit signed by Coach Massimino since he's been on the Main Line. McLain was a standout point guard for his squad, dishing out eight assists per game, and his strange, yet effective shot netted him an additional 13 points a contest.

McLain's high school accolades include being named to the Boston Globe and Herald American All-Massachusetts teams. He was, in addition, a two-year All-Merrimack Valley Conference player.

It would be absurd, however, to state that there are no question marks on this year's squad. Certainly one area of concern is how the team will cope with the loss of graduated seniors, Alex Bradley and Tom Sinkiewicz. Gone with those two players are nearly 3,000 points worth of offense and the invaluable intangibles: experience, poise, and above all leadership. How quickly the freshmen mature is vital for the Wildcats success.

The schedule is once again one of the toughest in the east. Besides the rugged 14 game Big East Conference schedule, which is in itself murderous, the future holds the traditional Big Five games, the Notre Dame Fighting Irish, and defending National Champion Indiana in the E.C.A.C. Holiday Festival Tourney at Madison Square Garden.

So, the forecast has pretty much been predicted. The storm fronts move in in the form of Georgetown, Syracuse, etc. The freshmen will be relied upon heavily, but with the likes of Dobbs, Mulquin, Howard, Granger, and Pinone returning, the winning Wildcat legacy should continue. Besides, who knows when the rain clears, come N.C.A.A. time?

Ruggers Sweep Three from Penn

Week in Sports

RUGBY

Last Saturday the Villanova ...gby Club notched three straight ...s over the University of Penn...vania Rugby Club. The day ...rted out with the A side ...nking the Quakers 11-0.

...Greg Siegler and Jake Chelli ...vered over four tries and Mike ...el added three points on a ...alty kick. Scrummers, Chuck ...hler and Mike Scalzo also had ...e games.

The B side match was a run away with Villanova on top 34-4. The scoring was well balanced between wing and scrum, with Mark Spencer scoring twice on short yardage situations. Many of the B players had excellent games as they swarmed all over the hopeless Quakers. The C side match provided the final victory and maintained the undefeated record for the Cats.

Tomorrow the club will travel down to Delaware to take on a strong University of Delaware squad. Villanova will bring three sides and is looking forward to avenging three losses at the hands of Delaware in the past two years.

FIELD HOCKEY

The second half seems to be killing Julie Keaveney's field hockey team. In all three contests this week, it was second half goals that defeated the Cats. Early in the week, defending division II champs La Salle used two second half goals to defeat the Cats. Over the weekend the Cats were tied 1-1 at the half 3-1, and 4-1, before losing to Bucknell and Indiana (Pa.) respectively. Goals scorers this week were senior Suzanne Comly and freshman Suzanne Lora.

WOMEN'S CROSS-COUNTRY

The womens cross-country team traveled to New Brunswick, N.J. last weekend to compete in a 17 team field in the Rutgers Invitational. Scoring 175 points, the Wildcats placed 7th in team standings. Junior Beverly Reilly took team honors for the Cats placing 25th in 19:12. Other Wildcats scorers were Eva Marie Beradi 19:14, Mary Ellen McGowen 19:21, and Carol Gilsinger. The Princeton Tigers captured the team title with 58 points.

WATER POLO

The Villanova Varsity Water Polo team won their first game of the '81-'82 season by defeating Rose Hill Club. The Watercats travelled to Iona College for the Iona Tournament last weekend.

Despite difficulties in the first two games against Iona Club and Williams College, the Watercats pulled their offense together and defeated Rose Hill 9-5. Leading the scoring for Villanova were Sophomores Chris Morris and Bill Beck. Freshman goalie Scott Varum was the asset to the team by blocking the many shots of Rose Hill.

The Water Polo team is in its second Varsity season. Again this year the team is coached by Al Paolo. Juniors George Anderson and Bill Bonk are the '81-'82 captains as well as key defensive and offensive players respectively. Returning players rounding out the team are Senior Eric Pippen and Sophomores Bill Beck, Joe Bobrowski, Chris Morris, Kevin Powers and Josh Selekman.

Being such a new sport at Villanova, the Watercats are improving as the team becomes more experienced. This year the Water Polo team has recruited many freshman. Outstanding among them are Brian Bushe, Mike Duch and Scott Varum.

The Water Polo team will travel to Princeton University this weekend. They will play four teams in their NCAA Mid-Atlantic League. Those teams are Monmouth College, RPI, Army and the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy.

Cats Boost Record, Undefeated at Home

By STEVEN FALLON

Friday night the Villanova University soccer team played for the first time under the lights at Villanova Stadium. The debut was a successful one, as the Wildcats edged Spring Garden College of Philadelphia 1-0.

The two teams played the first half to a scoreless tie as the Wildcats played down to the level of their competition. Villanova, decidedly the better squad, was plagued by sloppy play which allowed Spring Garden to keep the game tied through the half.

The deadlock was snapped early in the second half as fullback Robert Porter scored on a direct kick from 25 yards out. This would be the only goal of the night and become the second game winning goal of the season for the freshman from Middletown, N.J. The first came in the first game of the year against Haverford.

Given the lead, the defense did its job and protected the narrow margin. Anchored by goalie P Jirak, who recorded his first s out of the season, the Wildc kept Spring Garden off scoreboard and protected the victory.

The victory raised the Wildc record to 4-2 and 3-0 at hom Coach Howard Graff hopes team can maintain its winni ways this Saturday, Pare Weekend, with a 1:30 ga against Rutgers-Camden.

Spikers Take Second

By JOE BAGLEY

The Women's Volleyball Team seized the attention of everyone at the Towson State Tournament by spiking, diving and battling their way to a second place finish last weekend. The Wildcats, a rapidly growing force, opened the tourney by defeating all three teams in their pool, the Universities of Delaware and Virginia and the towering Navy squad. The Cats then went on to thrash Lehigh in the first round 15-6, 15-13, and Western Maryland 13-15, 15-13, 15-11 in the semi-finals.

Their single loss came in the finals, in a teetering two games to previously beaten Delaware, 14-16, 9-15. The second place finish to a powerful Delaware team, though disappointing, still showered the squad with recognition.

"I think we firmly established ourselves as potential regional qualifiers," stated Head Coach Bob Covell, who pointed out that Villanova has never before made the regionals in Women's Volleyball. The formidable squad packs the powerful punch of sophomore Stephanie Moore, captain Sara Holyoke, 6-4 senior Lisa Ortlip and a wealth of hard hitting others.

"Lisa played well in the tour ment" Covell said of the versa middle hitter, who is also capt and center of the women's bask ball team. "Overall, simply eve one played well," related Co "Especially the freshmen and subs off the bench. They came strong."

Firmly established in the sea with a 10-4 record, and laden w the well-recruited freshmen Covell lauds, the team anticipa another head-turning showing the upcoming Rutgers Invitatio Tournament.

Women Win Fourth Straight

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The women's soccer team kept its winning streak alive as the Wildcats beat Franklin and Marshall and Delaware last week.

Villanova was on top of the 3-0 score in the game against Franklin and Marshall, a team they hadn't beaten in four years. The offense was provided by seniors Nina Wieczorek, who scored twice, and Karen Clabbers, who scored once. The defense spearheaded by freshman goalie Sue Onnemebo held F & M scoreless.

The Wildcats won their fourth straight game by beating the University of Delaware, 5-0. The defense stood out again as Onnemebo picked up her third shutout, but there was also plenty of offense. Tallying for Villanova were freshmen Jeannie Comlish, Jean Murray, and Kristen Goulet, sophomore Annie Kempf, and Wielzorek.

Coach Lee Stevens comments, "This is the best week of soccer that we've played. We've been keeping the ball on the ground, passing well, and all 22 players have been contributing."

The Wildcats have scored 15 goals in the last four games, but another key to the team's success, according to Stevens, is the defense. Goalie Onnemebo has shutout opponents in the last three games that she has played. The rest of the defense has also helped greatly by limiting F & M and Delaware to only eight shots on goal each.

"We're playing with a total team effort. We have very good players, but there are no outstanding individuals. Everybody blends together well," states sophomore Mary Novick.

The Wildcats' record is 4-1 and they will be looking to add more wins on the home turf against West Chester on Saturday and Swarthmore on Wednesday.

The women's volleyball team fi ed second in last week's tourna at Towson State. Their rec now stands at 10-4.

Donoghue Paces Wildcats in Season Opener

Cats Win at Georgetown

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Wildcat Cross Country team kicked off its 1981 campaign with an impressive performance in a four team meet at Georgetown on Saturday. The Cats emerged victorious over the Naval Academy and Syracuse, while settling for a tie with the host Hoyas. The Cats edged Navy 27-30, beat Syracuse 23-32, and tied Georgetown, 28-28.

Leading the Wildcats across the finish line was senior Ross Donoghue, a St. John's transfer, with a speedy 25:26 clocking. Donoghue placed second overall, behind Georgetown's John Gregorek, a member of the 1981 U.S. Olympic Team, who paced the field with a 25:17 performance.

Villanova's other top finishers were Brian O'Keeffe who placed 4th, Kevin Dillon who ran 8th, and John Hunter who came in at the 11th spot. The Cats sorely missed sophomore Marcus O'Sullivan who was out with a knee injury. Head Coach Jack Pyrah felt, that O'Sullivan "would have finished somewhere up there with O'Keeffe."

Tomorrow the Cats will travel to Bethlehem for the Lehigh Invitational which will pit them against the Air Force and Naval Academies, as well as Penn State and the host Engineers.

Coach Pyrah has set no future goals yet for this Wildcat squad which has an extremely tough schedule ahead; his philosophy is simple: "We'll take them one at a time, and do the best that we can." Obviously that effort will have to be great to fill the void left by graduated centers Sydney Maree and Amos Kerr. Maree and Kerr were instrumental in propelling the Cats to a second place finish in the Big East last year, just behind the Friars of Providence College.

Student Life Changes Enacted

Who Runs Villanova?

By JAMES DeLORENZO and LEONARD J. La BARTH

Villanova's Student Conduct Code has been revised by the student life office to "clean up the appeal process," according to Dean of Students, Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A.

An evaluation of the student life offices revealed a lack of coordination between the various areas and a problem with administration by the dean of men and the dean of women. Currently, there is one dean and an assistant to the dean for both men and women and the addition of a judicial affairs officer, all whom are responsible to the vice-president of student life. According to the administrators, this "streamlining" allows for a greater amount of communication.

"Now there is a better perspective," agreed Martin. "There are better sense units. A lot of plans interact. Meeting with the vice-president regularly leads to a better sense of understanding among all," he said.

Concerning the judicial process, Martin emphasized, "The whole hearing process has been changed. It became obvious that there had to be changes. The student will definitely receive due process. For a simple case, the goal is to have a ruling within two weeks."

In cases involving possible suspension or expulsion, the student is notified by the judicial affairs officer. A procedural interview is arranged. The student has the option of requesting a hearing before the judicial affairs officer or the judicial hearing board. The judicial affairs officer of the hearing board will then determine whether the accused student has violated the student conduct code.

Appeals may be filed by the student for the following reasons: a) Inappropriate sanction; b) procedural defect in the original; c) presence of new evidence that was not available at the time of the original hearing.

"With a judicial affairs officer hearing their case, the student should feel that it is an unbiased ruling," said Martin. "I'm pleased by the response, which has been pretty good," he added.

Newly appointed Vice-President for Student Life, Dr. Richard Neville, is also pleased with the restructuring. "The quality of student life is where our priorities are," stated Neville." The fundamental needs are the ones to be addressed. The staff generates the ideas. I make sure they make sense and support them," he explained.

"I don't know what the Board will allocate (for student activities). If the allocation doesn't meet the estimated expenditures, then each activity and organization will be asked to revise their budgets and cut costs."

Lucyna Gorski
Director of Student Activities

Neville reports directly to Father President John Driscoll. "The issues go through the president to the Student Life Committee of the Board," explained Neville. "The initiating actions are done by the president. If I wanted something considered, I'd have the president present it to the Board. The Senate can lend support. The president should consider the Senate. It can be a powerful resource," he said.

The Board's Budget Committee is responsible for the funding of student activities and organizations through the general University budget. In August, the director of student activities applies to the vice-president of student life for a budget which is based on the previous year's expenditures and future estimates. After review, the vice-president submits it to the budget committee.

"I don't know what the Board will allocate," said Lucy Gorski, recently appointed director of student activities. "If the allocation

Ethnic Courses Find Low Demand

By KERRY LYNCH

Examination of past master schedules reveals that several ethnic studies courses in various departments at Villanova University have not been offered in at least three years.

Although courses such as black literature and studies of the history of black America, are listed each year in the University Bulletin, they have not been offered since the spring semester of 1979. Therefore, it is virtually impossible for a student to take them.

Dr. Joseph P. McGowan, chairman of the English department, explained, "The enrollment for these courses dropped . . . theoretically they are on a back burner." History Department Chairman Joseph George, Jr. said that in courses of the same nature offered by the history department, "the enrollment has been comparatively lower than other courses."

The ethnic studies courses offered by both these departments are currently listed in the bulletin with a postscript which reads: "Not Offered 1981-82." McGowan said the postscript is so that the bulletin will not mislead students, and so, "the information is accurate."

Demand for courses is usually considered sufficient if five or more students register for the course but the final decision on whether or not a class will be offered rests with the dean's office. McGowan said that requests by five students to return black literature to the curriculum would prompt him to offer the class again. "I took it out with great reluctance but I would like to see black literature come back. If there were a demand I would have no hesitation of putting it back in. . ." Usually McGowan allows five to seven years of a course not being offered before he drops it from the bulletin listing.

Dr. Charles L. Cherry, assistant to the vice president of academic affairs, and compiler of the Villanova University Bulletin, claims his office processes information given him by the department heads and deans and that he relies on their judgement concerning whether or not a course should be listed in the bulletin. "We try to keep the bulletin as current as possible and generally rely on the judgement of the department heads and deans." He believes that ethnic studies courses listed by the various departments are listed legitimately; "the department still feels they are active courses that have not been dropped from the program and could potentially be offered."

McGowan attributes drop of enrollment in these classes to a nation-wide trend reflecting loss of interest in ethnic studies. Cherry agrees: "Some subjects have a contemporary interest. I don't think it is merely window dressing done to deceive." George is planning to offer one of the black America history courses next year. Although he predicts limited enrollment, he said, "We appreciate that these are courses that have to be taught."

McGowan stressed his readiness to open up the courses as soon as he perceived an interest and added that if the Social Action

Dormitory Loan Rejected

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The University will not receive a $3.5 million loan towards the construction of a new dormitory from the Department of Education, it was learned earlier this week.

The department received 224 applications for college housing loans this year, with only 19 of these being approved, according to Assistant Vice President for Development Edward Morosky. The applications were evaluated by the department with scores ranging from 72 to 89 necessary for approval of the loan. Villanova received a score of 70, said Morosky, and ranked 93rd of the applicants.

"Not one application was funded for Pennsylvania," said Morosky. He added that 80 percent instead of the 10 percent originally planned went to black colleges.

Morosky also noted that the $78 million that had been intended for distribution among colleges had been reduced to $68 million.

"I don't know what will happen now," said Morosky. "It is up to the Board of Trustees to decide how to fund a new dorm."

Construction of a new dormitory is tentatively planned for the area east of Good Counsel and Stanford Halls. Blueprints for the facility have been drawn up by the architectural firm of Ewing Cole Cherry Parkay of Philadelphia. The dorm is designed to resemble townhouses from the outside. It is estimated that the dorm would house about 400 students.

The application for the loan was considered by the Department of Education according to five basic criterion, including: Whether the applicant was residential prior to 1976; use of existing dormitories; current housing deficiency; and impact of proposed project.

Correction

There was an error in the headline of last week's lead story.

The headline read, "M.B.A. Program Adopted." The correct headline should have been "M.B.A. Program Planned." The Villanovan regrets the error.

The story, however, was accurate.

Photo Exhibit

An unusual collection of unique photographs will be shown November 11-24, in the Connelly Center Art Gallery from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

The exhibit, which comes to the United Nations from the Centre Pompidou, Beaubourg in Paris, and a previous showing in the Council of Europe, deals with the 30 year history of Fourth World children and their families. They exist in all countries and are those who have been left out of the progress of the societies of which they form a part. The exhibit has considerable dramatic and emotional impact, and recalls the work of the famous photographers of the "thirties" who dramatized the plight of black sharecroppers in the South and of poor white families in Appalachia.

The main goal of the Photo Exhibit is to open people's eyes to what many ignore or forget — that a part of society remains excluded, rejected, and often ignored because of their poverty.

A full-time worker with the International Fourth World Movement will be present daily at the exhibit to answer questions.

The official opening will take place on Sunday, Nov. 15 at 2 p.m. with a Reception at the Art Gallery of the Connelly Center.

There will be slide presentations and discussions on Tuesday, Nov. 17 at 8:30 a.m., 11:30 a.m., 3 p.m. All are welcome.

Gamma Phi Society

There will be a mandatory general meeting of the Gamma Phi Honor Society on Tuesday, Oct. 26, at 12:45 in Bartley 209. All money will be collected.

V.U. Hiring Process Analyzed

By BILL CLARK AND PETER KONDAS

In the spring of 1980, Father President Driscoll broke with precedent and appointed a faculty member not recommended by a faculty search committee. Even though guidelines have been adopted by the Faculty Assembly for a hiring procedure, the official Villanova hiring policy still does not grant the faculty final decision-making authority.

Ed Collymore, Villanova's affirmative Action Officer.

Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, former chairman of the Faculty Assembly, said that the Faculty Assembly guidelines are still being viewed by the administration. "Right now, no where is it written down that the faculty has the final approval of any new faculty member. The faculty is the best judge of new members, and they should initiate and be the principle judge," said Hahn.

The guidelines adopted by the Faculty Assembly, which stemmed from a report about the hiring of Dr. Vincent Sherry, an English professor, establish a hiring process in which a faculty search committee would recommend any new faculty members.

Hahn said that any academic department would initiate a request for a new faculty position. A search committee, normally composed of three faculty members, would review any applications for the position. The committee's decision would be reported to the Vice-President for Academic Affairs, who would then give the recommendations to the President.

"I hope that since Villanova is Catholic and Christian, people will do what is right but I sometimes have doubts about this."

"Under normal conditions, Father President would approve the committee recommendation," said Hahn. "If the President says no, the matter would go back to the search committee, and the whole process would start again."

Hahn explained that if the President again refused to follow the committee recommendation, he could appoint another faculty member, "but he must submit in writing an academic reason for not accepting the committee recommendation."

In October 1980, a Faculty Assembly Committee, studying the appointment of Sherry, stated that "It therefore appears that the faculty's role in the hiring process is, in practice, considered more substantial than the official documents of the University would indicate." While stating this however, the committee explained how this process was violated in the Sherry appointment. "The President personally reviewed the dosier of this candidate and judged him to be fully qualified, both academically and in terms of the mission of Villanova." The report said that Father President Driscoll became interested in Sherry, "as a result of conversations with influential outside sources."

After the two faculty positions were filled, Driscoll created a third full-time position, appointing Sherry to fill it. "Clearly this third position would be created explicitly for this particular candidate," stated the report.

"I quite sincerely and honestly feel Villanova is following all avenues available for the recruitment of minorities."

The Middle States Association evaluation of Villanova conducted in November 1979 (five months prior to the Villanovan story on Driscoll's appointment) also pointed out the need for Villanova to adopt a definite faculty hiring procedure. "The team would strongly urge that the University develop a consistent set of procedures to be used at departmental and school levels for arriving at recommendations with respect to new appointments, reappointments, tenure and promotion."

We noted that the procedures for these critically important personnel decisions vary considerably from department to department often at the inclination of the current department chairperson." Continued the report, "While these procedures are undoubtedly carried out in a good faith effort at fairness, the lack of consistency, the lack of a prescribed set of procedures, leaves the University and the individual departments and schools open to charges of unfairness, or of arbitrary decisions based on processes designed ad hoc to bring about a certain result."

Dr. James Cleary, former vice-president for academic affairs, explained that other factors are also involved in the faculty hiring process. "Sometimes we have had to say no on the basis of money," to faculty-committee recommendations. Cleary also explained that a new faculty member must also, "be in sympathy to the philosophy of the University." In citing examples to explain this point, Cleary said that a prospective Nursing faculty member could not teach that abortion is the answer in ending a pregnancy, of that euthanasia is an acceptable means in ending suffering.

In commenting on the University faculty hiring process, the Middle States report criticized Villanova's record on the hiring of minorities and women. ". . . We would like to urge that a stronger effort be expanded in affirmative action. The number of minorities on the faculty, or on the administrative staff, is very small.

Not only the laws and social policy of the state and nation require it, but also the Universities own professed commitments to equality of opportunity," said the report. According to Villanova's EEO-6 report, filed with the Equal Opportunities Employment Commission (filed on Nov. 30, 1979) three of Villanova's 368 faculty members were black. The report also stated that 17 of Villanova's faculty members came from other minority backgrounds (Hispanic, Asian, of American Indian).

Cleary explained that Villanova's lack of minorities is the result of "supply and demand." "I quite sincerely and honestly feel Villanova is following all avenues available for the recruitment of minorities," said Cleary. "There are just not that many minority Ph.D.'s in the work force."

Hahn also agreed with Cleary in regards to the difficulty of recruiting qualified to teach in some areas.

Hahn also agreed with Cleary in regards to the difficulty of recruiting minority faculty members. "It is hard to find minorities qualified to teach in some areas. Minority teachers with good educational backgrounds are snapped up by larger universities," stated Hahn.

Ed Collymore, Villanova's affirmative action officer, is responsible for the major recruitment of minorities and women. When a position opens up, ads are placed in Affirmative Action Registers and Collymore passes on information by word of mouth.

Collymore is also responsible for the monitoring of minority-hiring. He says that this monitoring is difficult. "I'd like to have more 'teeth' in the affirmative action policies, but I am not involved when the decision is made as to who is best qualified." Collymore feels that many of the chairpersons make an earnest attempt to hire fairly but that others do not, "they create a farce and my hands become tied."

"I hope that since Villanova is Catholic and Christian, people will do what is right but I sometimes have doubts about this," concluded Collymore.

Decision to be Appealed

By ED SULLIVAN

Gary Bonas, director of Greek affairs, said today that he plans to appeal an Inter-Fraternity Council, (IFC) sanction against the Villanova chapter of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity (LXA). The sanction, issued Oct. 9 was for a violation involving a party where alcohol was served.

The incident occurred on Sept. 18 when an advertisement appeared in the Villanovan promoting an LXA party at the Covered Wagon Inn. The ad stated there would be cocktails and a cash bar.

The original sanction by the IFC, which governs Greek affairs, was a written warning and one service project. But Bonas believes he IFC is too soft, "I firmly believe the sanction is too light; I will appeal in order to give credibility to the IFC Judicial Committee."

Chairperson of the Judicial Board Paul Crowley, and an LXA member, disagrees with the decision to appeal, "As far as the IFC's verdict goes, we did it; we were wrong. There was a mix-up in communication. But as far as the appeal goes, we think the original decision was strict enough. The main issue that irks us Greeks is the fact that other people have done it too." Crowley stepped down from his position on the Judicial Committee for the hearing. The most notable of the other parties were the crew team party, on Oct. 3, at the Inn of The Four Falls, and the Blue Key Parents' weekend cocktail party, he noted.

According to Joe Burke, judicial affairs officer, action has already been taken against the crew, but he declined to elaborate. However, Tom Smart, member of the crew team, said that no action has been taken against the team and that the party was planned by several students who happened to be members of the crew team.

Bonas commented on the Blue Key party, "Blue Key was technically in violation of the policy, but the University's stand was, if it is a University function, then advertising is okay."

Bonas' appeal will go to the University Appeal Board, which contains one faculty member, one administration member and one student. Bonas said he would support a sanction that would suspend LXA's social privileges for the remainder of the semester and assign two social projects.

Bonas' motivation for the appeal is to maintain the credibility of the IFC. "If we are to be effective in governing ourselves, we must have high standards and goals and maintain them ourselves in trying to resolve conflicts within the Greek system," Bonas said. "It is inconsistent to assign a sanction less severe for a second offense," he continued. Bonas was referring to LXA's loss of social privileges last semester for an infraction at a Dougherty party.

The IFC Judicial committee, however, thinks last year's violation should have nothing to do with this year's. According to member Lori Cullen, "There have been similar infractions in past years and this year as well." Cullen said. "We didn't feel we should punish a frat that severely when others have done it. We didn't want to make an example out of LXA." Cullen continued, "as far as we were concerned they (LXA) served their time last year and we (the IFC) had nothing to do with that."

Student Life Viewed

doesn't meet the estimated expenditures, then each activity and organization will be asked to revise their budgets and cut costs," she explained.

Gorski pointed out that some of the activities that hadn't been funded properly in the past were now receiving better financial attention. "Right now, none of the activities are underfunded. If there should happen to be a surplus, it would probably go towards programming for the commuters," she said.

According to Gorski, another anticipated change concerns revision of the student handbook. "We're looking for a more 'complete' format for the Blue Book. We're comparing it to other university student guides. Emphasis will be on more organizational information."

Another area of student life that the student life administrators is concerned with is the alcohol policy. An alcohol education program was established after a culmination of events, including the arrest of students for LCB violations.

"The students who drink should drink responsibly. We will support them if they do that," said Neville. "The problem is that we have underage drinkers. The extreme position is that there be no drinking. It seems unrealistic but its the safest legal position. We want to avoid trouble with the LCB." This year Neville upheld the prohibition of fraternity chugging contests.

"We are doing what we can within the law," echoed Martin. Martin indicated last year that he believed chugging to be illegal, immoral (to him) and personally repulsive. "Through the alcohol education program we want the students to realize the effects of alcohol and the guidelines that should be followed."

Ethnic Courses

Office requested that the courses be offered, "We'd try again."

Expressing concern over controversy if the courses were dropped altogether, "I wouldn't be surprised if Mr. Collymore's office would be concerned. I wouldn't want to drop it (black literature), there might be some controversy."

However, Edward Collymore said that his office is not at all involved with course offerings. "My office has nothing to do with academics." An ethnic studies committee does exist but Collymore did not know where it might be involved in this issue.

Although department heads and Cherry seemed confident that the courses would be offered if the demand was satisfactory there seems no official way to determine student demand unless the courses appear in the master schedule and registration is monitored.

Ideals Of Peace Historically Perish

The notions of peace, prosperity and pride are not new ones. These ideals are locked into the hearts and minds of virtually every world citizen. The world secretly desires to be a place where the good can live in a land free from violence, overflowing with abundance and the inhabitants wish to view themselves as children of their chosen idea, be that a spirit, force or prophet.

Historically, the ideal has been given life countless times since the beginning of the human race. The great notions have been reborn, over and over, in grand cycles climaxing with groups of the faithful, gathering to follow the path to freedom and peace.

Recent history has been no different from pagan and early Christian eras. The ideals are with us all, in secret. Some are afraid to think the thoughts, much less verbalize them.

Great thoughts tend to die in our world, perish on the lips of those who dare to speak them. The most recent fallen champion was Anwar Sadat. Oct. 6 marked the untimely demise of a man who felt that the dreams of humanity deserved a chance; he expressed his desire for ideals and proceeded to act in accordance to promote an order.

This was his downfall, as it was the downfall of others who committed themselves to similar courses of action. The names of the people in recent times who have attempted similar courses of this noble quest are legendary: John Kennedy, Martin Luther King, Robert Kennedy and John Lennon, to name but a few. These individuals all tried, in their fashion, to experiment, to make the ideal of the good life come into being.

Unfortunately, these people managed to threaten others whose ideals were not as noble. Nameless assassins, who rise from obscurity after their heinous act, kill not only a human being, but also an ideal, a dream that should be.

Perhaps some day, the dreams of peace, prosperity and pride will not disturb the fragile egos of those who feel they need to be placed above average mortals. Perhaps those who speak for the secret desires of the majority will be allowed to live to help the world become as it should. Perhaps some day, this will happen.

For now, the waiting must begin. The turmoil in the Middle East, an area of both extreme unrest and world importance, is not abated in the manner that seemed to be a reality for a brief moment in time. One of the major backers of the peace agreement has been eliminated by those who would rather see other futures for that area of the world. The new Egyptian president, Hosni Mubarak appears to want to follow the path of his mentor; but, where will that lead him?

Parking Roulette A Hazardous Game

The student parking lots across the street from the main campus are not merely littered; they are hazards. The routine dumping of beverage bottles is at least an annoying form of visual pollution.

A larger problem, however, is the broken glass from the bottles. The pieces of glass, scattered over the lots, create a form of roulette for commuters and others who have the misfortune to use the lots in order to park their cars. Everyday the odds increase for having a flat, mutilated tire.

Why use the lots for garbage cans? Plenty of containers exist on the campus grounds for waste disposal. Besides, the tire that you save might be your own.

Statement Denied

Hollie Massamino, Villanova's basketball coach, has denied a statement appearing in last week's commentary. The statement said that the basketball team was instructed not to speak with the Villanovan.

Letters to the Editor

Response to Op-Ed

Dear Sirs:

Regarding Stephen Oldham's article "Place Cross Before Sword," I found it to be excellent in many aspects and brought to light some very interesting points.

Stephen Oldham impressed us with some very large numbers, yet he failed to state anything about why the United States is building this arsenal. Could it have anything to do with Afghanistan, Poland, the steadily increasing influence of the Soviet Union in Africa and South America? When was the last time U.S. forces rolled over a country (Afghanistan)? When was the last time the United States closed down foreign newspapers (Poland)? When did the U.S. find it necessary to build a wall to keep its citizens within (East Germany)?

Has anyone given any real thought as to how our world would be if there were no Soviet Union? Yet, there is one underlying statement, that there is in fact a Soviet Union. We cannot retreat from this fact. During the 70s we tried to cut defense and turn to a peaceful co-existence through SALT I-II. Repeatedly the United States made concession after concession and soon it became quite clear that the Soviet Union broke promise after promise, and thus creating the window of vulnerability.

What is it we're faced with? We have the free world looking towards us for leadership. Do we meet this challenge? Or, do we listen to the Stephen Oldhams of the world and let other free countries fall? Remember, Mr. Oldham, our brothers and sisters in Russia don't have the opportunity to worship openly or take up religious studies courses.

Does our country condone terrorism? When a man like Anwar el Sadat, who worked so hard for peace, is brutally murdered do we rejoice as did some nations? These are the kinds of countries that parallel us.

How nice of Mr. Oldham to wonder if we really need these weapons. Let him ask of his brothers and sisters in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, East Germany and, the largest concentration of Catholics in the world, Poland if they believe that they are necessary.

Can the Villanova's, Georgetown's, Notre Dame's (largest percentage of students in ROTC in the country), St. Joseph's, La Salle's, Holy Crosses, and Marquette's all be wrong!

Mr. Oldham, what you had to say was very easy, but how many other countries could you have said it in?

Robert Saldutti

To the Editor:

Mr. Oldham claims in his editorial that Christianity and national defense are two completely incompatible ideals. I suggest that he has not read his history. If he would take the time to think about it, he would realize that the world's most vicious and bloody wars have been fought in the name of God. It doesn't take much thought to remember the Crusades, or the Holocaust, or even the fighting in Northern Ireland.

Obviously religion and war are not only compatible, but inextricably related. There is no hypocrite worse than the one who is too good to fight for his ideals, but is the first one to complain when his ideals are compromised because someone else did not fight for them.

Obviously if we Americans wish to maintain our freedom we must be prepared to defend it. America is by no means perfect, but it is the best government to exist since the beginning of recorded history. I am prepared to do what I must to defend it: I don't intend to let this country go down without a fight. I am proud to be a member of the ROTC and to have the privilege of aiding in its defense.

Sincerely,
Mary Di Joseph

Egyptian History Linked To Present

'He lived for peace and died for principles'

"He lived for peace and died for principles" was Anwar El-Sadat's answer to a question posed to him once as to how he would like people to remember him. There seems to be little disagreement that Sadat championed peace; it is however his principles and his policies to implement them, which generate the most controversies between his critics and supporters.

Pan Arabism

Sadat, a participant in the 1952 Egyptian revolution remained an obscure figure until Gamal Abdul Nasser's sudden death in 1970. Nasser, still a hero for many arab nationalists, engaged Egypt on a road of socialism and Pan Arabism. A period, where under the banner of equality, was marked with expropriation and redistribution of lands to the poor and nationalization of businesses. As a result of wide political repression, discrimination and lack of opportunity, many left Egypt. Brazil, Canada, Australia and the United States were the major countries which absorbed the educated, the artists, those who identified themselves with the pre-revolutionary era and those who had foreign ancestors, whom once had immigrated to Egypt and then considered undesirable; the Greeks, the Armenians, the Lebanese etc.

Nasser, under Pan Arabism was also engaged in a hate campaign against Israel and an aspiration to lead the Arab world, a project which in 1958 enjoyed a bright period with the formation of the United Arab Republic, a short lived union between Syria and Egypt.

Russian Aid

Engaged in a war in the Yemen, in which no Egyptian believed, plagued by an uncontrollable growth of the population and frustrated with the Americans who refused to finance his project to build the Aswan Dam, Nasser turned to the Russians for economic aid and arms. In 1967, a crucial year for Egypt, the six days war demonstrated to the Egyptians the ineptitude of their armed forces and of their Russian advisors. An equally strong belief of the Egyptians at the time, was that Islam being at odds with communism, the ties between the Kremlin and Cairo were necessary as long as Egypt remained in a continuous state of war with Israel, necessitating a continuous Russian presence.

Era Ended

In 1970, unexpectedly, Nasser died. Masses took to the streets in emotional demonstrations, a fact many observers in the past few days contrast to the calm which followed Sadat's assassination, alluding naively only to Sadat's lack of popularity compared to Nasser. It is a mistake to ignore the fact that in Egypt, especially under Nasser, demonstrations were forbidden without government approval and that most were orchestrated by the government.

Sadat's Initiative

Sadat's initiative to go to Jerusalem and later conclude a peace treaty with Israel will remain the major accomplishment of his presidency. A precedent of an Arab leader recognizing Israel had been set. To prepare for it, Sadat had to restore the Egyptian honor gravely hurt in 1967. In two separate bold moves, he kicked out the Russians in 1972 and used Soviets armaments for the last time in crossing the Canal and attacking Israel in October 1973.

Determined to accomplish a limited victory, he took advantage of a stalemate situation and accepted a cease fire.

Stage Set

The stage was set for what he termed as "An honorable peace treaty," which culminated in Camp David. Sadat was a man who ignored details, choosing rather broad concepts in implementing his policies.

His policies at home included the ending of political oppression, the formation of a multi-party system to express views and the ending of the police-state aspects of the Nasser regime. He also ended 20 years of a state controlled economy through his economic "open door" policy approach.

Sadat A Hero

With the return of portions of the Sinai, and his domestic policies, Sadat was acclaimed as a hero and for many years enjoyed vast popularity in Egypt.

Many believe today that putting all his eggs in one basket by relying exclusively on the U.S. for support was his major problem regarding the difficulties he would later encounter.

Unfortunately, U.S. business remained sceptical and money did not pour into Egypt as predicted, while the increase of the population compounded the economic problem.

A small wealthy class was, however, created accentuating the visible gap between the rich and the poor.

Low Point

Sadat's popularity while remaining high in the West started to slip in Egypt, reaching its lowest point last September when he introduced repressive measures of his own and deprived the same political parties he once helped create of their freedom.

Open Criticism

It is also believed that large sums of money paid by Qadaffi, of Libya, considered Sadat's strongest enemy and channelled through the Moslem fundamentalists, helped in increasing the open criticism of his regime.

In striking at the Moslem Fundamentals, Sadat equally attacked the Coptic Christians in Egypt by closing their associations and banishing the Coptic Pope, Shenuda III, to a monastery. This action against the Copts, looking genuine at face value was mostly taken to decrease criticism of his actions against the Moslem fundamentals. The threat of continuing violence from Moslem extremists will remain the most dangerous problem facing the president-elect, Hosni Mobarek.

There is no doubt that Sadat will be remembered for his actions and philosophy but above all, for his courage; a courage he paid for with his life.

United States Involvement

The viability of the new government will continue to depend largely on the United States and the conservative Arab States, who may find a rapprochement with Egypt, now that Sadat is dead a possibility that they will only consider if it does not endanger their own rulers' lives.

The United States relying heavily on Egypt and Israel for the security of the Middle East region will no doubt take a more militant stand against Libya by supporting the new Egyptian government militarily. This action while dealing with a short term solution, does not address the major problems of the worsening of the Egyptian economic situation and the Palestinian problem.

By expanding economic aid while helping the Egyptians undertake structural agricultural projects in Egypt, allowing therefore the reduction of internal tension, the United States can also turn to stepping up the peace process by luring the more conservative Arab states and the conservative Palestinians into active participation.

This will no doubt entail some combination of guarantees and behind the scene pressure applied on all participants, including Egypt, Saudi Arabia and the Begin government. AV MOVE, FROM THE "LOOKS OF THE AWACS deal, the administration is more willing to take than the Congress is.

Alternative In Greece

On Oct. 18 the citizens of Greece are presented with an alternative to the present ruling democratic party the PASOK, the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, led by former Berkley economist Andreas Papandreou. Mr. Papandreou as of August was far ahead on most public opinion polls. His theme is the "socilistiki aporyia", the socialist transformation or change, which if analyzed is much more extreme than Mitterand's rhetoric. Mr. Papandreou four years ago claimed to be a non-dogmatic Marxist. However, this election year he has moderated his ideology to socialist-leftist; a effort obviously to gather more moderate votes. His socialism at the same time is used much less in terms of describing an economic ideal but an institutional ideal. For instance, he proposes to have the large corporations subplant their profit goals with the economic goals of the nation resulting in a very aggressive central planning system.

Mr. Papandreou may very well win, as George Karathimou, an aspiring candidate for the 300 member Parliament points out: ". . . the fact is that Greece no longer wants to be influenced by Western needs or in particular American needs outside our sovereignty — Greece is for Greeks." This nationalism is strong in Greece today and this has been credited to Mr. Papandreou and his party. And a growing anti-Americanism is also strong among members of his party as well as the KKE (Eurocommunists), the centre democratic, and even the fascist faction in the diverse political spectrum of Greece.

The main factor for this feeling is that the United States either conspired or approved a Turkish invasion of Cyprus which ironically has allowed greater political freedom in Greece since this event resulted in the downfall of the colonels reign which ended in 1974. Another major factor is the economic scene which is blamed on the ECC for aggravating the balance of payments problem and a inflation rate of 25%. The high inflation has set off many labor strikes by teachers, aviation workers, electricity workers, and civil servants.

Mr. Karamanlis is no longer a popular figure in Greece since he has taken a different role in the government as president of the democracy.

The tax incentive intiatives of the democratic party have been an utter failure. The result being a highly regressive incidence. Mr. Papandreou has jumped on this issue proclaiming a redistribution of the burden. "A revolution in our tax system is necessary," claims Mr. Karathimou, "to bring equity."

Another factor might very well be the fact that Mr. Karamanlis led Greece to a democracy after the fall of the junta and since he has found himself a stabilizing presence Greek voters might very well place Mr. Papandreou in power.

The "socilistiki aporyia" is much more than a socialist transformation or change. It has a semantical problem in its translation. The word "aporyia" is much more than just change but revoultion. It's not just change of government policy but it implies a social structure change; a step away from the efforts of free enterpize to a movement of nationalism — "Greece is for Greece." So this is much more than a "Mitterand fever" that has caught on. The PASOK party may very well be victorious. The "aporyia" may very well start on Oct. 18.

The end of an era?

Education Should Be A Federal Priority

The announcement of the Reagan administration's plans to abolish the Department of Education and to cut back on certain educational programs signals what may be the end of a period of remarkable federal activity in education.

Although, by precedent and constitutional provision, educational authority is vested in each of the fifty state governments, the federal government has a role in education by virtue of the powers of the Supreme Court to protect the constitutional rights of citizens, of Congress to enact laws which "promote the general welfare," and of the president to enforce the laws. Beginning with the Brown decision of 1954 which outlawed racial segregation in public education and extending through the elevation of education to cabinet status in 1970, the federal government has exercised legislative, executive and judicial powers in education to an unprecedented degree.

Much of the federal activity in the last quarter century has been directed toward redressing inequalities in the educational opportunities afforded to various groups of Americans. Major weapons in this attack have been the use of federal monies and the threat of withholding them. The Brown decision was followed by Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act which required the withholding of federal funds from institutions engaging in racial discrimination. Title IX of the educational amendments of 1972 banned sex discrimination in programs (including sports) receiving federal aid.

Whatever the immediate cutbacks in federal spending and programs may be, there will exist a continuing need for a strong federal role in education. Education is a much more complex thing today than in the days of the little red schoolhouse when the precedents for local and state control were established. Formal education is much more necessary today for the individual's participation in American civic and economic life. It plays a vital role also in national security and prosperity. Shortly after Russia launched Sputnik into orbit in 1957, Congress passed the National Defense Education Act in support of educational programs in science, mathematics and foreign languages; "education is our first line of defense" became a byword. If scientific and technical training were national priorities then how much more so should they be priorities now? With its command of the resources of the income tax and other federal revenues, the federal government should be contributing much more than 10 percent of the cost of public elementary and secondary schools.

American commitment to social justice and the vital relationship of education to the national welfare demand that education continue to be a priority item on the federal agenda.

This week the Villanovan decided to ask students: "How do you think the death of Sadat will affect the Middle East and the United States?"

"I think that there is going to be a rapid arms increase in the Middle East countries and that world tension will be heightened."

Steve Cholewiak
Junior, Accounting Major

"I think it depends on the new Egyptian administration and whether or not they decide to uphold present relations and policies of the old regime."

Mike LaVilla
Senior, Marketing Major

"I think it will lessen the other countries' willingness to strive for peace now that his influence is gone. Now there is a greater chance for war."

Roberta Reynolds
Sophomore, Psychology Major

"I think it is going to have a very upsetting affect on the peace process in the Middle East. However, I think the new president will try to follow the same ideals. I do not really think it will have a harmful affect on U.S.-Egyptian relations."

Lori Stevens

Women Neglected

Dear Editor:

I was very disappointed to notice in the October 9 issue of the Villanovan, that you had completely neglected to give any coverage to women's intramural football, although men's intramural football received coverage on page 18. Your minimal coverage of women's intramural football last year was understandable in view of the fact that it was a new program, but this year, it is a well established program and in my opinion deserves equal coverage.

I hope that in future issues, as much attention will be given to women's intramural football as is currently being given to men's intramural football.

Sincerely,
Kathleen Esmonde
Junior, Nursing

Dear Editor:

I would like to comment on the lack of coverage of women's intramural sports by your publication. The men's intramural football program is covered extensively in the Villanovan. Each week, one or more of the men's games are reported, as well as, the rank of the top five teams. The only mention of the women's intramural football program in any previous issue of the Villanovan occurred prior to the start of the season. All 22 women's teams had competed before the printing of the October 9 issue of the Villanovan. There was no mention of this in that issue. As a commissioner in the intramural department, I feel that the women and men deserve equal coverage.

Sincerely,
M.F. Schubert

Nursing Explained

Dear Sir:

I am writing concerning the article "V.U. Academic Control Limited," front page of the Oct. 2, 1981 issue. Two errors concern me. First, my statement concerning our students "enrolling in the humanities and sciences" was a misquote. The College of Nursing does not encourage our students to take a "smattering of courses." Our curriculum is so designed that we require students to enroll in some prescribed courses from other disciplines which assists them in understanding the complexity of man or "the whole person." Also, we have free electives which enable them to somewhat individualize their education.

Secondly, my "misquote" was squeezed into another statement, completely out of context.

I am certain that these errors were not intentional, however, do feel that it is important to notify you of them.

We are very proud of Teri Berger and her leading role in "A Taste of Honey," however, I do take issue with the comment in the article by J. Hart that suggests that Ms. Berger has a relatively light course load. Ms. Berger's program requires much of her, including two clinical sessions per week in hospitals and health agencies.

Her time commitment is a heavy one which is all the more reason why she is to be congratulated on this achievement. I did enjoy the article very much but hope no false impressions were conveyed.

Team Denied

Dear Villanovan:

I am writing this letter on behalf of the Women's Soccer team. This year we were denied Nautilus privileges and were told that this decision was based on the fact that Women's Soccer is a club sport.

Although this is understandable, it has been rumored that the cheerleaders are permitted to use the Nautilus facilities at no expense. Could you please verify this information for me?

If this information is in fact true, how can it be justified? Cheerleading is no more a varsity sport than soccer is, and they do not even have a fall season. I am not suggesting that the cheerleader's privileges be revoked, as they are as deserving of them as are any of the other club sports, but it would be nice if the administration was a bit more consistent. Perhaps it would be helpful if Dr. Aceto's wife managed us.

Thank you.

Four Pages Wasted

Dear Sir:

Evidently, Villanova University is so bereft of news that its paper had to waste four pages on recycled print from the past for the October 2 issue (the era chosen, the Sixties, was not surprising).

Regarding the search for news, articles such as the one on convict Jack Henry Abbott's book should be promptly disposed of into the cylindrical file by the editors in the future. Our newspaper has fallen into the trap of glorifying this convict, instead of recognising first and foremost what he is and why he was put behind bars. In addition, the closing note mentioning Abbott's recent arrest while on parole for murdering a twenty-two year old restaurant worker was an insufficient asterisk that could almost have been swept under the rug.

Either through incompetence or lack of sensation, the article's writer, Greg Anton, omitted the facts that the dead man's name was Richard Adan and that he was considered a promising playwright. Anything that Adan could have contributed to the stage would have been far more appreciated by myself than any venom spewed by an antisocial wretch.

Nevertheless, Mr. Anton "cannot help but to sympathise with him" (Abbott). However, I will reserve hemorrhage for Jack Henry Abbott, nor would most rational people.

Sincerely,
Philip W. E

Modern Heating System Planned

The maintenance department plans to begin installing modulating control valves with outside weather thermostats in University buildings next September. The valves will allow a regulated amount of heat into each building depending on the temperature.

Maintenance will use an average of $2500 per building for this purpose. The majority of the buildings in which these control valves will be installed are not dormitories. Sheehan Hall, Sullivan Hall, and Austin Hall will be the only dormitories in which these heat regulating valves will be installed.

Thomas Trucks, head of maintenance, is responsible for the operation of all heating systems throughout the University. Discussing the problem of dormitories being uncomfortably cold before the heating is turned on at the Univerarity, Trucks said, "In Pennsylvania, October 15 is the deadline by which all public buildings must turn on their heat. I do not feel this date holds steadfastly for Villanova. If we knew, through weather forecasts, that there was going to be a cold spell before the October 15 deadline, we would turn on the heat."

The heating system at Villanova is a manual operation. If Trucks decides to turn on the heat for a particularly cool night and the following day is a warm one, the heat must be completely turned off in order to cool down the building. Trucks explained that heating valves should be completely closed when room temperature reaches between 58-60 degrees, because the building retains enough body heat and light heat for comfort.

The process of turning on all heating systems in the University takes approximately four days. The activating of heating in dormitories started October 8 and continue until the October 15th deadline required by state law. The time it takes to get the heating systems operating properly varies with each building. Some buildings have minor repair problems which can be corrected quickly while other buildings have more serious repair problems which take longer to alleviate.

Along with repair problems, Trucks said, "The heating situation is a nuisance especially in the fall and spring seasons when the weather is so unpredictable. The days are warm and the nights are cool. We may be a little slow turning on the heat this year, but it (weather) is an immeasurable thing."

New Sorority Organized

By ANN SUYDAM

Tri-Delt (DDD) is a national sorority with 119 chapters on various college campuses throughout the United States. Laura Moreno has done extensive work on forming the 120th chapter (Gamma Beta) here at Villanova.

"I decided this would be the first step in getting people involved more in Greek life," stated Moreno, a sophomore political science major. "I'd like to see Villanova have a bigger Greek organization and a better social life."

Moreno first got the idea of starting the sorority from a friend who is in the chapter at Miami of Ohio. Moreno first got in touch with the National Panelitic Committee, which is head of all national sororities. The head women from this organization contacted Moreno and helped her in getting things started.

Moreno first spoke with Father President Driscoll because "I figured I would start at the top and then work my way down to the other people who could help." She was prepared to argue with Driscoll about the start of the sorority but he approved of the idea. She then contacted Gary Bonas, assistant dean of student activities, who was "very helpful and encouraging."

After speaking with Driscoll and Bonas, Moreno was left with the organization and planning of the chapter. Everything will be completed by October 31. Twelve women from the National Panelitic Committee will interview each of the pledges, as well as alumnus and girls from chapters at Maryland and Bucknell.

"Dues now are very tentative. National sororities are more expensive than the locals but they also provide many benefits," explained Moreno. Some of the benefits include: a gold pin upon acceptance, rushing fees paid by the national committee, loans secured for things such as establishing a house, and girls can stay at other chapter houses on other campus throughout the country.

The largest number of pledges are sophomores and Moreno stressed that more freshmen pledge. "I want to get enough people interested to show the women (from the National Panelitic Committee) we care and are enthusiastic."

Moreno also stressed that she "is not trying to outdo the locals on campus. I hope they will also go national." She is adament on getting off-campus residents involved as well as on-campus students. "Something like this is needed, especially since football is off, we need to bring students together," Moreno stated.

More information will be available in the next two issues of the Villanovan, in the FYI column.

The "Best and Worst" of Villanova

The Villanovan is by far the best college newspaper in the area. At least our parents tell us so.

Therefore, we feel eminently qualified in passing judgment on the "Best and Worst" of Villanova. The opinions expressed are not necessarily those of the University; however, we don't really care.

In determining our choices for the "Best and Worst" of Villanova, we utilized criteria which were totally subjective and scientifically unverifiable. If anyone should desire to dispute our methods . . . again, we don't care.

Let loose the lions . . .

Student Organizations
Best: Us, of course.
Worst: The RSA. Intricate hierarchy, little action. WKVU would have made it had it possessed any organization at all.

Best and worst classroom — "cheat o rama," Bartley 209.

Best Academic Department
Best: Any of the engineering ones. Though they bred only technocrats, at least they are of the high-quality.
Worst: Communications. Wow, reach out and touch someone!

Augustinian
Best: Father Bernard Lazor. A brilliant professor, though the picture in the Blue Book has to go.
Worst: In the interest of preserving the Villanovan, we leave this choice to the reader.

Bathrooms
Best: The ones in the Connelly Center. Clean and well-kept, they show that Marc Tuchman can do something right.
Worst: Men's Room, Tolentine Hall. Where is it?

Security Guards
Best: The only good security guard is a dead security Guard

Soda Machine
Best: The Coke machine in the basement of Vasey. Abuse it long enough and it gives two for the price of one.

Wombats
Best: Pie Shoppe.
Worst: The Connelly Center. What? They're students? Precisely.

Cafeteria
Best: Wihtout a doubt, St. Mary's. There has to be some benefit to living over there.
Worst: The Pit. Dante described it quite accurately.

Pick-up spot
Best: The fourth floor of Falvey. A meat-market among the musty stacks.
Worst: The monastery.

Best Augustinian, Father Lazor. We hope this is the last time we'll see this Blue Book picture.

Swimming Pool
Best: St. Mary's, it's big, relatively clean, and open at convenient hours.
Worst: Mendel Field after a heavy rain.

Secret
Best: That the Student Government really does exist.
Worst: How much money the Union loses each time it sponsors a concert.

Off-Campus Housing
Best: Any place which won't rent to students.
Worst: Where else but the infamous roach motel, Sugartown Mews.

Dormitory (Male)
Best: Austin Hall. Although the rooms are as small as closets, at least the only smelly underwear on the floor is your own.
Worst: Could it be anything but Sullivan? It's rumored that some walk around on all fours in the basement.

Administrator
Best: Thomas Trucks, Director of Maintenance. The only honest and straight-forward one of the bunch.

Building
Best: Tolentine. It may be a ratty fire-trap, but it's open all night.
Worst: Tolentine. It may be open all night, but it's a ratty fire-trap.
Honorable Mention: The Connelly Center. Also known as Tuchman's Folly or Villanova's cement-block ski lodge.

Water Fountains
Worst: The newly-installed fountain on the second floor of Dougherty. After years of absence, it tastes like maintenance hooked it up to a cess-pool.

Coach
Best: Harry Perretta, women's basketball. He doesn't get much publicity, but his team continues to improve every year.
Worst: Dick Bedesem. What do you mean he's not here anymore?

Place to Study
Best: Anywhere off-campus.
Worst: Falvey. It's like trying to study in a singles' bar.

The best soda machine is located in the basement of Vasey. Abuse it long enough and it will give you two for the price of one.

Armed guards protecting the immaculate condition of Good Counsel Hall, worst female dormitory.

Dormitory (Female)
Best: St. Rita's. There is no better place to consummate the desires of youth than in solitary splendor.
Worst: Good Counsel. "Immaculate Conception" is the motto there. Enough said.

Professor
Best: There are three Villanova professors who are all equally worthy of this honor, for both teaching style and intellectual ability: Dr. Barbara Agnew, Religious Studies; Dr. Fritz Nova, Political Science; and Mr. Dan Regan, Philosophy.
Worst: We're not that stupid.

Sports Team
Best: By far, it's the track team. Internationally known, it consistently produces some of the finest athletes in the world.
Worst: The 1981 Villanova football team.

Trustee
Best: Are you kidding?
Worst: How many of them are there, anyway?

Worst male dormitory, Sullivan Hall.

Social Gathering
Best: The Fifty Days party. Merely by the process of elimination.
Worst: Friday afternoons at the Faculty Club. If you don't believe us, ask June Lytel.

Classroom
Best: Bartley 209 also known as the "Cheat-o-rama". If you want to pass a test without studying, make sure you take it there.
Worst: Bartley 209. For all those who did study for the test.

Best pick up spot, fourth floor Falvey.

Monastic Life Surveyed

A Closer Look Inside

By SHARON WINTERS

"The basic reason for your coming together is to live in harmony and to have one heart and one mind in your pursuit of God." St. Augustine

At 7 a.m. the members of the Villanova Monastery formally begin their day with an horarium. The priests and brothers gather for lauds prayed in unison followed by a community mass.

Some of the members of the order do not attend the communal prayers for health reasons, according to Father Henry E. Greenlee, O.S.A., the self-avowed eldest resident at 83. "It is a question of stairs," he added. Father Greenlee says mass every day and Sunday for these members of the community.

Altogether, 61 men live in the Monastery. These disperse during the day for varied activities. Some work in administration, others teach on campus and still others serve in the campus ministry. The Monastery also includes some retired members.

After their day's work, the Augustinians meet again for vespers at 5:45 p.m. Prayers are normally said every evening at this time prior to dinner. On Thursdays, however, vespers are different. They consist of a benediction accompanied with the blessed sacrament. The celebration of benediction involves each resident taking a turn in leading the blessing.

"The St. Thomas of Villanova Monastery is a faculty house," Greenlee explained. The Monastery houses priests, faculty members, retired Augustinians, sick members and students, according to Greenlee. The residents include, 59 priests and 2 brothers, he added.

The priest and the brother take the same vows, according to Father Joseph C. Schaubelt, O.S.A., an active member whose duties include being a dormitory counselor at St. Mary's Hall. The three vows are poverty, chastity and obedience. The difference between the two types of Augustinians is that the priest has received the sacrament of holy order and the brother has not, he added.

Monastic garb consists of three main pieces of clothing: a tunic, the long, black robe; a cincture, the lengthy, leather belt and a capuche or hood. This habit has its origins in the peasant dress of the 13th century. Not all of the Augustinians wear this dress on a daily basis. Although it would be worn for religious functions, the habit is not worn for off-campus activities, said Schnaubelt. All-black clothing and the collar serve as the public dress, he continued. The black is symbolic in itself; "it indicates the plainness of life," he said.

Some of the Monastery residents have duties off the campus on a regular basis. "Each morning, including Sundays, five priests go to some of the convents nearby and say mass for the sisters," said Father Greenlee. On weekends about 25 members will say masses in area parishes as assistants, he said. This process is repeated throughout the year, Greenlee explained.

The members of the order also have other duties or special areas of concern called apostolates. Father Bernard Lazor, O.S.A., prior of the Monastery takes special care of the University athletes as his area of concern, said Schnaubelt. Some members have special apostolates to the Knights of Columbus; this is one of Father James Warne's concerns, noted Schnaubelt.

Some of the members serve at retreats. The Ancilla Domini Retreat in Coopertown and the Malvern Meeting House in Malvern are visited by Monastery residents, according to Schnaubelt.

The monastic life is "a strict life in its own way but everybody's life is strict," said Father Greenlee. "We are all seasoned veterans here, as it were," he explained. "We are all here of our own free will," he noted.

Ordinarily, members can leave the campus at will, according to Greenlee. However, if the absence is to be a day or two, the member usually reports to the prior, "in case they have to get in touch with you," he continued. "We are not held down too much," Greenlee added.

The residents have a lot of privileges and are "treated well," said Greenlee. The Monastery has four or five cars that members are free to use, he said. Recently, the Province bought a house at Ocean City, Greenlee said. This is used by some members for their summer vacations, he explained. Members have regular vacations of about three weeks, he cited. "I can have more," Greenlee, a retired Augustinian, revealed.

Greenlee retired from active service at 78. Usually, the retirement age is around 70, although there is no strict rule, he said. Father Greenlee has no set duties. The retired members spend the day as they wish, Greenlee noted.

Ordained in 1923, Father Greenlee first began teaching at Villanova in 1925. The religious life has remained virtually the same since that time, he said. One of the changes in the Monastery has been the hour of morning prayers. At one time these were said at 6 a.m., now they are an hour later. Another difference involves the daily meditations. These are no

Project Shines On

By SHARON MILLS

One of the traditions of spring at Villanova is the annual Sunshine Day, a special event where Villanova students entertain and befriend a few hundred underprivileged or handicapped childen from the area. What many students are not aware of is that this special event is only one branch of the program Project: SUNSHINE.

Part of the Social Action Office of the University, Project: SUNSHINE provides dedicated volunteers to work in homes, hospitals, and agencies on a weekly basis. Since its initial stages, the program has grown, and at present is associated with thirty-five agencies, an increase of 19 over the past few years.

The Social Action Office, Room 121 Tolentine, is staffed by Director Mr. Collymore and Project: SUNSHINE Volunteer Coordinator, Ms. Hansen, who works with students coming in to volunteer their services.

"Once students express a desire to volunteer, we go over the agency list with them," says Ms. Hansen. "Often a particular agency will catch their interest due to past experience or talents."

Some of the most popular agencies are the Devereux, Foundation, Overbrook School for the Blind, and Pennsylvania's two state hospitals; Haverford and Norristown. These two hospitals are also the scene of Project: SUNSHINE'S annual Christmas gift drive, which involves many Villanova faculty and staff members. The faculty will also be participating in the December 8 "Follies," a Project: SUNSHINE production which will involve talented students, as well as a "faculty chorus."

Special project coordinator Santo Marabella is in charge of student recruitment among other things. A senior due to graduate in December, Santo has run Sunshine Day for the past few years, and has also informed many students of this organization.

A very limited commitment of time is asked and in turn for a great amount of personal satisfaction and development that may be attained. Involvement ranges from a one time event to a committed three hours per week. Groups and organizations are also encouraged to participate in the program for their service projects.

Inside The Monastery

longer communal, he said. Now, individual members make arrangements on their own to do this for about one-half hour a day.

Perhaps, the biggest change has been with the building itself. A trowel is encased in glass on the Monastery wall of the entrance hall; it commemorates the placing of the cornerstone of the new Monastery in 1933. The original structure burned down, the new one stands on the same spot.

Greenlee remembers some differences in the educational format of the University. In the 20s, there were no education courses, he said. This means that he is certified to teach on the college level but not in high schools, he noted. Also, no biology courses were required then, he continued. Greenlee reminisced that, when he began his career, no wireless existed.

Today, the residents can have televisions and stereos, within reason, Greenlee said. He has a television, a gift from one of his former parishes.

The money that we make is handed in, because of the vow of poverty, Greenlee cited. In turn, the Monastery helps us, he continued.

One of the ways that the Monastery helps its members is by providing medical care. Twice a week the University physician, Dr. Boyle visits the residents. Also, nurses and aides are on duty on a daily basis, Greenlee cited. "We are all cared for," he said.

Members of the Monastery are free to pursue hobbies and private interests. Some members play golf, tennis or jog, Greenlee said. Residents can go to operas or films, also, he added. No restrictions are placed on these things, he noted.

Greenlee fills his own days since his retirement. "I am always doing something," he said. Some of his personal interests include watching television, working on his family's history and reading. "The library is so close," he explained his hobby of reading. Father Greenlee's favorite books are "spy stories." "I have friends who give me a couple every year," he opined. The stories are "intriguing" and "very good," he feels.

They Are Just Ordinary People

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

While walking to a class in Tolentine on a sunny Tuesday afternoon, one may hear the beat of a drum and the shouting of commands from the direction of Mendel Field. As the field comes into view, he sees about 235 fellow students in crisp uniforms, marching perfectly to a cadence. Their eyes are straight ahead and their bodies are rigid, except for the precise movement of the legs. One may wonder why, on such a gorgeous day, these people would want to march around a field and act in such a serious manner. These thoughts however, are quickly dismissed, as the student rushes off to class, realizing he is ten minutes late.

However, question remains as to who these men and women are. They are members of Villanova's Reserve Officer's Training Corps. (ROTC). The unit is located in John Barry Hall, between Mendel Hall and the Chemical Engineering building. Except for attending a religion course, a fraternity rush meeting, or practicing for the Glee Club, most Villanova students have no reason to step foot into John Barry.

Actually it is like any other building on campus, contrary to William Durland's opinion (Feb. 8, 1981 issue of the Villanovan). Mr. Durland stated, ". . . is it not true that the ROTC does not belong on this campus any more than does an abortion clinic or a death chamber?" True, there is a basement in John Barry, but I have not heard reports of any killings. There are no tanks guarding the doors, no sentries posted to greet the newcomer, nor any mounted guns at the top of the stairs. There are beautiful brass railings along the staircases, various military posters and plaques on the walls and a relaxing "wardroom" containing a stereo, pool table, Coke machine, and television. There are a number of offices and a library on the first floor and classrooms on the second. The only difference in this building is that a man in uniform is frequently seen walking by.

That takes care of John Barry Hall. Now what about those students who are in the unit? The only characteristic that identifies a man in ROTC is the short hair, in keeping with military tradition. There are 235 members, 13 of these are women, in the unit. Many are on a scholarship which pays for the four years' tuition, books and a monthly allowance. In return, the individual "owes" either the United States Navy or Marine Corps four years service upon graduation.

Some students on campus look at the ROT-Cs as fierce and aggressive individuals who just can't wait for a war. In actuality, many of the ROT-Cs go into the military so that our nation will not have to go to war; it might be difficult to defend our country without troops.

A person in ROTC parties hard, enjoys Monday night football, and likes to attend the various campus events. The image of either a war-worshipper or a "goody-goodie" is quickly forgotten, when one realizes that we are all just ordinary college students, trying to get an education so that we can one day support ourselves. The individual in the ROTC unit does not have to worry about, resumes or job interviews. Upon graduation, a rewarding and exciting career awaits the young graduate for the next four years.

Now what about the final point, women? There are women who find that the armed forces provide a challenging and exciting career. Surprisingly enough, the women in Villanova's unit do not have crew cuts, 18-inch necks, or deep, growling voices. They are all personable and friendly, comfortable with the decision they have made for their future.

The average Villanova student can now walk by John Barry Hall without the fear of being shot at from behind a bush. It is hard to forget previous stereotypes, but if you try, you will soon realize the importance of ROTC units. Try talking to a "ROT-C" sometime; you'll realize, about five seconds into the conversation, that he is just another normal college student.

The quickest way to get emergency money.

These days a trip to the college bookstore can reduce your available funds to some small change. Luckily, that's about all you need to make the one phone call that can replenish your depleted funds in a couple of hours. Here's what to do:

1. Call home. Report the situation, and tell the folks they can get emergency cash to you fast by phone.

2. Ask them to call Western Union's toll-free number, 800-325-6000 (in Missouri, 800-342-6700), anytime, day or night. They charge the money and service fee to their MasterCard* or VISA† card. A Western Union Charge Card Money Order, up to $1,000, will be flashed to the Western Union office or agent nearest your emergency.

3. Pick up your money—usually within two hours—at the local Western Union office or agent. There are 8,500 nationally, except in Alaska. Conveniently, about 900 locations are open 24 hours. It's that easy.

Be sure to remind your parents about our toll-free number. It's all they need to back you up at the bookstore.

Giving the People What They Want

By AMY MACLACHLAN

"Rock bands will come and rock bands will go but Rock and Roll will go on forever and ever!" exclaimed Ray Davies of the Kinks during their two show stop in Philadelphia early last week. As a performer, guitarist and lead singer, Ray Davies is without equal. His tall, lanky frame bounces and twists around the stage constantly encouraging the audience with a seemingly infinite resource of energy. He is the most visible member of the Kinks. Brother Dave Davies is a phenomenal guitarist who adds a cool elegance to his art. Drummer Mick Avory and bassist Jim Rodford are both important elements that add up to the whole.

This multi-talented band has lost more than it has won by experimenting and failing, an important facet very visible in the aura that transmits onto the audience. They are a generous band, making each member of the audience feel that they were happy for each second of applause.

They knew success in 1964 with 45 rpm pop hits, You Really Got Me, All Day and All of the Night, Tired of Waiting for You and A Well Respected Man.

The later half of the sixties produced, Face to Face, and Lola to name a few. The early seventies were a period of experimentation and failure. The albums released during this period were filled with theatrics, thematic threads, and experimental music additions that were not as well received as their earlier material. These projects include Preservation, Soap Operas and Schoolboys In Disgrace. When the Kinks moved to Artista Records in 1977, they again changed their basic format. Sleepwalker was the first result of this change. Record sales soared and climbed higher with the 1978 release Misfits. Then came Low Budget, the first studio album made in the U.S.A., once again, concerned with Ray Davies comments on topical issues of the present. The latest two albums are One For the Road, a live recording and their latest, Give the People What They Want, promoted during their present tour.

Down through the years Ray Davies has woven a musical diary from the beginning of the British invasion almost twenty years ago all the way up until the present. The Kinks have produced a video disc titled One for The Road and have lent songs to groups like Van Halen, The Pretenders, The Romantics and many others. This band has certainly paid their dues to the history of Rock and Roll and definitely deserve their place on Hollywood Boulevard.

'An American Werewolf' is a Howling Success

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Thank God for An American Werewolf in London. It has been a long time since a horror film of this quality has come along. An American Werewolf can truly call itself a "horror" film. Unlike such recent trash as Friday the 13th and Terror Train, Werewolf does not exploit teenagers or have the obligatory psychopath making "hamburger helper" out of young nubile girls.

Written and directed by John Landis (Blues Brothers and Animal House), An American Werewolf in London is an updated version of a classic monster story. In fact, Werewolf is so good that in time it too may be a classic. What makes this movie so special is that Landis has added a new dimension to the genre of the monster movie. Werewolf blends comedy and horror to create an intelligent film that at the same time scares the hell out of you.

The story centers around two young sightseeing Americans, David Kessler (David Naughton) and Jack Goodman (Griffin Dunne), who come to London. They are attacked by a werewolf and from there the werewolf legend unravels. This reviewer does not want to give away the plot and reveal too much, but let's just say the boys would have been better off staying home. The special effects and makeup work of Richard Baker are phenomenal as man changes to werewolf right before your eyes. This alone is worth the price of admission.

David Naughton, best known for his Dr. Pepper commercials, is excellent as the witty main character David Kessler, conjuring up memories of a young Dustin Hoffman. Griffin Dunne also does a nice job as Dave's friend Jack Goodman. Naughton and Dunne work well together and there is a certain on-screen chemistry between them. John Woodvine and Jenny Agutter contribute fine performances as well, portraying the doctor and nurse. Agutter is especially appealing as Dave's love interest and is likely to be heard from again. All in all it is a fine cast of characters that you truly end up caring about.

An American Werewolf in London is a film that is among this year's ten best. Whether it has you howling in your seat or checking for a full moon as you leave the theater, Werewolf is a movie you can really sink your teeth into — and one you won't want to miss.

Riotous Rock

By PAUL BERN

Riot's third album, Fire Down Under, is the hottest new addition to the world of Heavy Metal rock and roll. This is their first album on Elektra/Asylum, and was released worldwide in August 1981, although they had gained a large number of fans in Japan, Europe, and England since 1979. The group started out as a trio from New York in 1975: Guy Speranza, the lead vocalist, says, "The whole concept of the band from the start was high energy." The band was not accepted at first because their brazen style was not in vogue at most of the punk/new wave clubs. Even to this day Riot's foothold is still shaky: Capitol refused to release Fire Down Under, and eventually let the band out of its contract. Fire Down Under is high energy rock that conjures up images of Led Zeppelin, Aerosmith and Ted Nugent.

Riot began touring after their second album, Narita was released in Canada. They opened for bands like AC/DC, Tom Petty, and were billed over Molly Hatchet in San Antonio, where Rock City was the top lp of 1979. The group also left their mark in England at the "Monsters of Rock" festival in 1980 with the ilk of Judas Priest, Scorpion, and others.

The album kicks off with Swords and Tequila, an explosive song with a taste of Ted Nugent. Guy Speranza's powerful vocals accentuate the high voltage of the music which puts him with the likes of Robert Plant and Steve Tyler. Fire Down Under and Feel The Same are definitely influenced by the sounds of Aerosmith and Led Zeppelin.

Don't Hold Back demonstrates Riot's non-holds-barred approach, as does Run For Your Life. Altar of the King is a flashback to the early Zeppelin days, complete with mystical lyrics and wailing guitar.

Although heavily influenced by Aerosmith and Led Zeppelin, Riot is still able to create a sound of their own. Outlaw and Don't Bring Me Down, employ twin guitars and a booming percussion original to the band. Fire Down Under marks Riot's breakthrough into Heavy Metal rock and roll. From their backstreet roots in Led Zeppelin and Deep Purple to the creation of their own sound, Riot has earned its place in the rock and roll journals.

Jazz Helps Cut Back School Blues

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

What is all this noise about the 'New Wave'? Sure, punk blew up the established order with energy and glitter pyrotechnics, and reggae is no longer the sleeping giant it once was. But wasn't the whole purpose to get emotion into and industry out of music? And some of this 'New Wave' stuff is so cold, harsh and unrelentingly programmed it's depressing. The new boss is beginning to feel like the old one in a new suit.

Although Lee Oskar, John Klemmer and Stanley Turrentine may be called "established" stars, their latest albums seem far from complacent. Oskar's My Road Our Road is especially enterprising. The title suite takes up the entire first side, and for those who have never considered the harmonica to be a lead instrument, especially in something of this scale, it is a very pleasant surprise. My Road Our Road is a musical journey from winsome mouth-harp melancholy through the romantic bravado of the 38-piece horn section to the sassy brass and hand-clapping, street-wise funk in which the piece concludes. Even though he is no longer jamming with War, Lee Oskar still cuts an exceptional groove.

And grooving is not all this man can do. Oskar may be the most eclectic and innovative mouth-harp genius alive today. Children's Song incorporates a multitude of children's voices into those of his musicians, forming a heavenly choir that his brief harmonica solo sets up well. In one sense, children singing, "La-la-la-lala," is a little too cute, but in another sense it is terribly beautiful. Yes I'm Singing follows Children's Song with an easy beat, a casual horn chart and a certified gold bass line. You wouldn't think Oskar could follow the feeling those little angels inspire, but he knows something about soaring emotions himself.

John Klemmer knows more than a little about emotions, too. Hush may not expand any tenor sax boundaries, but it sure paints a pretty picture of already charted ground. As far as recent releases go, there may not be a better album for settling back with a good smoke, a glass of wine and a fine member of the opposite sex, available today. Even when experimenting with Lou Rawls' R'n'B or pseudo-reggae, Klemmer's playing is as mellow as an October Sunday afternoon.

The rest of the band plays warmly as well, pushing Klemmer's rich, deep tenor through the album seemingly without effort. Lee Ritenour on guitar benefits Klemmer the most, as their tasteful, restrained interplay lends the band an almost gentle, liquid sound. The music is warm and sweet and light, and so complete that even though most of the cuts are instrumentals, the few lyrics there all seem to get in the way. This does not deny they are heartfelt, but Hush works better when the music does the talking.

Stanley Turrentine's Tender Togetherness is more pop (read: commercial) than My Road Our Road or Hush. Although fusing contemporary pop and R'n'B with Turrentine's tenor sax may have sounded like breaking new ground on paper, after considering his work with Max Roach in '59 and the early 70s albums like Pieces of Dreams and Sugar (the former inspiring the moniker of a Philadelphia-based jazz band Pieces of a Dream, and the latter featuring Freddie Hubbard and George Benson), this collaboration with Larry Dunn of Earth, Wind and Fire most often fails to swing beyond conventional ground despite the heady credentials of the two.

The single, Havin' Fun with Mr.

T, and Tamarac, vastly overinflate the rest of the album. Havin' Fun is very infectious, with Turrentine soloing twice, separated by a bass solo which Dunn's mean moog bass replaces quite nicely. Tamarac is more of the same, minus the bass solo and some production effects.

Hermanos, the opener, isn't a bad tune. The guitar and percussion percolates furiously, the Fender Rhodes shadings click, Turrentine plays well, and the band snatches the melody back after the break with a vengeance. But much like the version of After the Love is Gone, reworked here to accommodate Turrentine's tenor, Tender Togetherness sounds great, but like the great things that Earth, Wind and Fire and others have already done.

Tender Togetherness is also the least personal of these three and if you're making music for people to groove to you've got to put feeling into it. Oskar includes some wonderful verse for Song for My Son and Klemmer doesn't sing the lyrics to Hush so much as he earnestly whispers them; they offer urgency and emotion where the Turrentine LP employs synthetic Eurofunk that cooks without bubbling over.

You've got to wonder about music with mechanics where its soul ought to be, and you've got to wonder about the people who prefer to fall back upon clichéd lines and a lot of sparkle while replacing depth of linear meaning with a shallow wall of sound, musical or otherwise.

Chrissie Makes It Hard to Pretend

By PAUL DURAND

The Pretenders and The Bureau played at two sold-out shows at the Tower Theater in Upper Darby.

The Pretenders took to the stage shortly after 9:00 and immediately brought the Tower down with an electrifying version of The Wait, probably the most widely known song from their debut album. The songs from the Pretenders' outstanding debut and their EP have a powerful quality that comes alive on stage, which unfortunately, is unlike much of the new material on Pretenders II. The band seemed to realize this as they chose to play only five brand new songs.

The Pretenders returned to Philadelphia exactly one year after their 1980 tour hit Philly, when they sold out their only show at the Tower. This year it didn't take an invitation from Chrissie Hynde for the crowd to move into the aisles and stand on their seats. The Tower was hot and sweaty by the third song, Message of Love, deservedly one of their biggest hits. It was easy to tell that Chrissie really enjoyed singing all of her lyrics (and Ray Davies') and although they've done it a hundred times the band was having as much fun as the audience.

Chrissie, who's originally from Akron, Ohio, and the English boys were dressed for the occasion. She likes to wear the ruffled shirts and snazzy jackets and so she did. Chrissie apparently doesn't photograph well, because she looks very beautiful on stage as opposed to most photographs, and she was trying to avoid photographers that were in the audience. Pete Fardon looked really sharp in greased hair and leather jacket and with a Japanese flag design on his bass in his hands. James "Honeyman" Scott was dressed to "party on stage" and so he did. Martin Chambers kept busy providing the backbone to the Pretenders music, sending his sticks all over the theater, splashing water all over the stage, and generally having a great time. But Chrissie Hynde remained the main focus of attention; she accepted the roses, and she threw out the tambourines. When things got sticky, she unveiled her Iggy Pop tee-shirt and looked like the punk she was.

The Pretenders played a good long set and still managed to leave the crowd wanting more. The new material from Pretenders II came relativiy early in their set with The Adultress being the most impressive new song. Ray Davies was represented by Stop Your Sobbing, a showcase for Chrissie's fantastic vocal ability and I Go to Sleep, a great Davies' tune which the Pretenders have been doing in concert for a long time, but which had never been committed to vinyl by anyone until the new Pretenders album. The most notable omissions from the show were Kid, The Cuban Slide, and Waste Not Want Not. The highlights of the show included Message of Love, Tattooed Love Boys, Precious and Mystery Achievement, which came in the first encore set. They closed the evening with the brass section of The Bureau joining them onstage to do a version of Higher and Higher as a second encore (after a short portion of Hey Joe as an intro). The Pretenders put on a fantastic concert that night (Thursday), and this reviewer overheard someone as he was leaving the Tower say "that was twice as good as last night (Wednesday)!"

The Bureau played a set of about thirty five minutes, a well mixed assortment of slow ballads and quick dance numbers. Steve Spooner and J.B.'s wild saxophones became the distinctive element in the music of the Bureau. The brass department dominated the show from the opening instrumental tune through the closing song, Only For Sheep, their latest American single.

Chrissie and her band, the Pretenders.

Annenberg Theatre Opens 'Viaduct

By JOHN JORDAN

Aleen Malcolm's Viaduct, playing at the Annenberg School Theatre (University of Pennsylvania) from October 6th to the 18th, is a gripping and ironic play that captures the problems and pressures of an adolescent and its effects on his family. Malcolm's characters come to life slowly but surely as you are introduced to them at the dinner table one night in March, 1959. They argue and laugh about trivial things at first, but as the play progresses their stereotyped images become multi-faceted and you become engrossed in their lives, hoping that everything will somehow turn out O.K. for these likable but fated people. Malcolm exposes how this family is not a close one because of tradition, ignorance and even indifference.

David must deal with his father (George Taylor) who is entrenched in tradition and nostalgia. His father knows only his own problems and cannot comprehend anyone elses. He cannot understand why his son does not seemingly use the advantages he never had. David's mother (played by Jennifer Sternberg) is a kindly, loving mother and his only source of refuge but she cannot support David for long because she, as her husband puts it "knows her place."

David can only turn to his best friend Brian Smith (played by George Falkenberry) who David can speak to a little more freely. But Brian is constantly proving himself to David and again David cannot communicate his feelings. Brian finally cajoles David into joining a gang and through one act of initiation destroys his life and the lives of his parents.

A scene from 'Viaduct' at the Annenberg Theatre.

Dino Narizzano directs masterfully as is seen when the family begins to crumble after that fateful night. He holds you on the edge of your seat throughout.

Viaduct is a powerful play that handles the problems of adolescence with a witty and realistic quality one won't soon forget. It leaves one drained of emotion and hopefully a little thoughtful about one's own life.

Feel the Fire

Hurt Maintains Anti-Hero Status

By ALICE FISHER

Body Heat is a loaded film which has plenty to show and plenty to say. It is reminiscent of those Bogart/Bacall films in which dealing with crime and corruption lurking in the somber, stark and menacing night was where it was at. Body Heat has brought the stereotyped cynic and the glamorous "femme fatale" up to date by adding a genius twist to the plot that keeps the audience guessing and by providing erotic and not unpleasant love scenes to keep the audience warm.

Body Heat is set in Miranda County, Florida, which, usually known in the tourist trade for its delightfully cool breezes, is suffering from a freaky heat-wave. William Hurt plays Ned Racine who is as near to a shyster as any lawyer can be without losing his sincerity. He is at home in the urban jungle of streets, offices, and barrooms. In contrast, Mattie Walker, played by Kathleen Turner is a rich, "well-tended" suburbanite who is hatefully dissatisfied with her marriage and miserably bored with her life. She is the "femme fatale"; street-wise, yet cunningly sophisticated. Both have a sexual drive with which only dogs in heat could compare; hence, when they two meet sparks fly. Soon they realize that Mr. Walker (Richard Crenna) stands in the way of their happiness and the money they want so they arranged a convenient accident.

Body Heat reflects a present mood in society where it seems almost too easy to destroy so that one wonders whom to trust anymore. Violence, pessimism, corruption, and disillusionment are rampant and we are like Caesar looking over his shoulder while Brutus, in front of him, is holding the knife.

Matty Walker (Kathleen Turner) entangles attorney Ned Racine (William Hurt) in a web of passion, deceit and murder.

Besides the excellent performances of both Hurt and Turner and the perfect plot, Body Heat also has a good film structure and style. Lawrence Kasden intensifies the film with ever present images of heat signifying not only the passions of sex, but also the strained restlessness of society which feels insecurity closing in. To Ned, the heat only enhances his fatalistic, hopeless mood, but Mattie revels in the heat and her presence is often accompanied by the luring sounds of the surf or the cool tinkling of wind-chimes. Ned for a time finds a haven in Mattie, but then, like Bogart, he discovers that he can trust her only as far as he can throw her.

William Hurt plays an unusual, non-stereotyped role. Unlike Bogart and others who have played the tough, cynical hero, Ned is an inept and uncertain lawyer. As opposed to the calm, cool, nonblinking image, Ned sweats a lot and as a result so does the audience. Kathleen Turner at the same time, evokes sympathy about her plight while maintaining that glamorous pose of cool sophistication. Even when he finds out that Mattie is a frightening and brutal villain the viewer feels that she has retained her love for Ned and is still truly suffering.

Frosh Netter Paces Team

Week in Sports

Despite some outstanding individual performances at last week's Big East Tournament, the men's tennis team fell just three points short of the team championship at Boston College. Freshman Larry Gallen was the first player in the 16 year existence of Villanova tennis, to win a tournament championship. Not only did he win one, but he captured two titles. Gallen won the second singles match and then teamed up with senior Sean Friel to take the second doubles title. Gallen was the only player in the tourny to capture double championships. Paul Fitzsimmons also captured a first for the Wildcats, winning the fourth singles title.

WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY

The Villanova women's cross country team finished a strong third last Saturday in the Temple Invitational held at Belmont Plateau, in Philadelphia. Despite another impressive showing by Mary Ellen McGowan, Villanova finished behind rivals West Chester and Pennsylvania in the twelve team meet. McGowan, only a freshman, turned in a time of 17:30 over the 2.9 mile course to finish in tenth place. Other runners placing high for Villanova were Eva Marie Berardi and Amelia Cain, who finished thirteenth and fourteenth respectively. The women are off until this Saturday when they compete in the Big Five Championships, also held at the Belmont Plateau.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The women's soccer team dropped only their second game of the season losing to West Chester State, 4-3. Senior forward Nina Wieczorek continues to pace the Cats scoring, netting all three goals in the West Chester loss. While Wieczorek takes care of the offensive chores, goaltender Sue Onnembo boasts of an impressive 1.0 goals against average. The freshman has allowed five goals in 76 shots and has a 4-1 record. The women will travel to Franklin and Marshall on Sunday for a 1:00 match.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

The women netters picked up a pair of victories last week, beating the University of Pittsburgh, 6-3, and Glassboro State, 7-2. After dropping the opening two matches to Pitt, the Cats won six of the remaining seven matches to post the victory. Dawn Fisher got the Cats rolling winning her number three singles match, while Cynthia and Abigal Burke were both double winners.

The women then crushed Glassboro, winning all the singles matches rushing out to a commanding 6-0 lead. Carol Harrison won her number one match, while Fisher was unbeaten, winning 6-0, 6-0.

The Cats have three home matches this week, hosting Scranton today, C.W. Post on Sunday and Rosemont on Monday.

Politics Affect World of Sports

By LARRY GOANOS

International politics are playing an increasingly influential role in the world of sports. It's a fact, plain and simple. The recent American tour by the South African National Rugby Team, the Springboks, has caused the ugly monster to rear its head once again.

South African athletes have long been ostracized by most of the world's nations. South Africa is governed by apartheid policies, a fact about which it makes no pretenses. This includes the existence of separate and unequal educational institutions, health care services, and transportation facilities for blacks and whites, to name just a few of the injustices. A white minority rules the black majority in an oppressive and seemingly intolerable manner, although blacks and whites in South Africa object to the system less than an outsider might expect. Nevertheless, the majority of nations feel that sanctions must be imposed against South Africa.

So where does sport fit in among all of this? It doesn't. That is just the point. The Springboks neither form nor enforce these prejudicial policies. They came to the United States to play rugby, not to sing the praises of apartheid. Any glory brought upon themselves through their athletic achievements should stand as just that, one team's athletic honor brought upon themselves, not as a reflection of their country's internal policies. Their feats are performed on the field of athletic endeavor, not within the confines of the political arena. These are two distinctly different areas, yet world leaders have a knack for intertwining them.

The Springboks 'U.S. tour sparked numerous demonstrations, and even the bombings of U.S. rugby organization offices in Schenectady, N.Y. and Evansville, Ind. N.Y. Governor Hugh Carey had prohibited the Springboks from playing their final two games in New York for fear of violence by the protesters. He was overruled, however, by U.S. District Court Judge Howard G. Munson. In explaining his verdict, Munson declared that the Springboks had to be allowed to play in New York because they were protected under the First Amendment, which guarantees free assembly since it was a political event.

Perhaps the greatest use of sport as a political pawn occurred when President Carter decided that the U.S. would punish the Soviet Union by boycotting the 1980 Moscow Olympics. But who was really penalized by this move? Anita De Frantz, a member of the U.S. Olympic Rowing Team, didn't quite see eye-to-eye with Carter. Bitterly disappointed after countless months of training on icy rivers, her point was simply taken, "Carter said 'we' are going to boycott the Olympics. I don't understand the 'we.' Where was he when I was freezing my butt off?"

Another athlete who has felt the frustration of international politics is one of the world's premiere distance runners, a guy by the name of Sydney Maree. Until his marriage to a U.S. citizen, Maree was excluded from international competition. Sydney Maree is South African.So what if he's black, a member of the oppressed majority; common sense and justice have no place in politics. Maree recently captured the inaugural Fifth Avenue Mile, and afterwards he expressed an interest in staging a similar event in Johannesburg, "If we ever do decide to become a family in South Africa." It's a noble thought but let's not hold our breath.

Barr leads offense with hat trick

Soccer Win Highlights Weekend

By JOE MARUSAK

Brian Barr has done it again. The junior co-captain of Howard Graff's varsity soccer team has been virtually unstoppable this year, and last Saturday was no exception.

It was a perfect day for soccer at Villanova Stadium. The weather forecast indicated a clear, crisp, day, and as a result of Parents Weekend, the fans were out in droves.

The match turned out to be one of the biggest highlights of the whole weekend as center-forward Barr led a determined Villanova squad to a 4-1 victory over the Red and White of Rutgers-Camden University.

Rutgers-Camden took the kickoff, but before they could even set up an offense, Barr had stolen the ball and taken the match's first shot-on-goal.

The first score did not come until the 24th minute, when Barr put a brilliant move on an R-C defender, moved into range, and blasted a perfect shot into the upper left corner of the net. It was his 8th goal of the season.

Barr has really taken charge this year. "Last year," assistant coach Karl Moehlmann explained after the contest, "Brian wasn't in a leadership position. He was playing wing. Now he's at center-forward, where there are more chances."

Although Villanova netted the first goal, the Wildcats by no means controlled the first 25 minutes. Momentum was constantly in flux, as the offensive attack switched from team to team.

In fact, it only took 3 minutes after Barr's goal for R-C to tie up the contest. Junior midfielder Ed Hartley found himself all alone in the Wildcat defensive zone and he simply lofted the ball over a sprawling Pete Jirak.

Both teams offensive drives continued to apply pressure, but it was the Wildcats who were able to capitalize on the numerous scoring opportunities.

With 10:15 left in the half, Barr split the defense and slid the ball to the right of a charging R-C goalie and into the net. Brian injured his right ankle on the play and didn't return to the action until the start of the second half.

In the second half, Rutgers-Camden continued to apply pressure, but they blew all scoring opportunities. On one play, they had a 3 on 1 break but lost control of the ball.

The men's soccer team upended Rutgers-Camden, 4-1 last weekend to raise their record to 5-3.

On the other hand, the Wildcats pounced on their opportunities. In the 69th minute Barr pumped in his third goal of the day, skyrocketing the ball into the left corner of the net.

Sophomore Mike Lombardo capped off the scoring with only 1:12 to play. The 5'7" forward especially impressed Moehlmann. "The way he (Lombardo) controlled the ball and scored that goal . . . What more can you ask for?"

But let's not forget the Wildcat defense. They were up against a good solid offense — an attack which has led Rutgers to seven wins.

Again it was freshman Rob Porter leading the way. "He's one of our greatest talents ever," Moehlmann exulted. "It's just been a difficult year for him because he's a sweeper." The sweeper is the last defender before the goalie, and thus has responsibilities galore. "He's had his weaker halves, such as the one against Temple." But Moehlmann believes it is only a matter of time before Rob adjusts to this onerous position and starts to take full command.

Chris Lynch, the junior fullback from Berwyn, Pa., and sophomore Joe Deluca were also instrumental on defense. Halfbacks Ramon Garcia and John Waraksa did their usual fine work, not only frustrating R-C's offensive line but also penetrating Rutger's defense with some impressive lead passes.

Villanova now goes to 5-3 on the season. Coach Moehlmann has confidence in the team's potential. "All it needs is to get that coolness to win the close game." Much of this lies in Barr's potential. He's only one step away from becoming a national level player, and that's getting the crucial goals — when the going is rough. The goals can come in bunches, Moehlmann reasons, but it's in the tighter games where they really begin to add up.

CORNER KICKS: R-C was 7-2-2 before entering Saturday's match. Victories include a 3-0 win over St. Joe's and a 5-0 wipeout of Jersey City . . . VU goalie Pete Jirak has allowed only two goals total in his last three starts . . . Wildcats entertain Swarthmore Oct. 21 at 3:30 . . . The final four matches (Nov. 4-14), all at home, should decide the Wildcats' fate in the Soccer Seven.

The Cats have a string of home matches upcoming, starting with Swarthmore on Wednesday, Oct. 21

Watercats Claim Victories

The Villanova varsity water polo team, despite a sluggish early season, has shown improvement by winning three out of their last five games. St. Peter's College of New Jersey faced the Watercats on October 7 in the Field House pool. With the help of an enthusiastic crowd, the Watercats held off a late St. Peter's rally to win 12-11. Bill Beck led the scoring with 5 goals, while George Anderson scored 4.

The team traveled to Princeton University last weekend where they defeated NCAA Mid Atlantic Water Polo League rivals RPI (12-4) and the United States Merchant Marine Academy (15-4). However, they also suffered two tough defeats from eastern powerhouses Dartmouth and Army. Sophomore Chris Morris led the scoring for the Cats over the weekend with 16 goals. Also contributing to the potent offense were Bill Beck and Mike Duch. The Watercats are currently in third place in their Mid-Atlantic league.

This year's starting team for the Watercats is a young team. Two juniors George Anderson and Bill Beck lead the team. Sophomores Bill Beck, Chris Morris and Kevin Duch add to the team's offense. Two freshmen also start for the team, Mike Duch and Scott Varum. Rounding out the team are Josh Selekman, Eric Pippen, Brian Burke, Bob Brawley, Joe Bobrowski, Martin McMahon, Mark Lionetti, and Steve St. Louis.

The Watercats, engaged in a rugged competition for a league play-off spot and a berth to the NCAA Eastern Regionals, hope to continue their winning ways. They will travel to St. Francis, New York on October 24-25 to play Princeton, St. Francis, Lehigh, and Queens.

The next home game will be played in the Field House Pool on October 31 against the Naval Academy.

Harriers Held Off By Penn State

Ross Donoghue had to wait a whole year before he could run for Villanova after transferring from St. John's but this fall he is making up for lost time by pacing the Wildcats through a tough cross country season.

Donoghue won the Paul Short Memorial Run (Lehigh Invitational) last Saturday and came back on Sunday to win the Great Philadelphia Road Race.

At Lehigh Donoghue trailed last year's Big East Champion, Jim O'Connell by 40 yards with a mile remaining. In the final mile Donoghue evened with the Syracuse harrier before going away to win in 29:58.

Also scoring for Villanova at Lehigh were Brian O'Keeffe, Ken Lucks, Kevin Dillon and Dermot Anderson. O'Keeffe followed Donoghue to the Great Philadelphia Road Race and placed sixth winning the junior title in 30:26.

Penn State won the day's event at Lehigh with a mere 57 points. Villanova placed fourth behind Navy and George Mason with 136 points.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week is senior cross country runner Ross Donoghue. In the first two meets of the harrier's 1981 season, Donoghue led the Wildcats to the finish; taking a second place at Georgetown and getting the win this past weekend at Lehigh. Last Sunday Donoghue took first place in the Great Philadelphia Road Race. He finished the 10 kilometer distance in 29:58. Donoghue is a transfer from St. John's University.

WHAT COULD THE ARMY POSSIBLY OFFER A BRIGHT PERSON LIKE YOU?

Drop your guard for a minute. Even though you're in college right now, there are many aspects of the Army that you might find very attractive.

Maybe even irresistible. See for yourself.

MED SCHOOL ON US

You read it right.

The Army's Health Professions Scholarship Program provides necessary tuition, books, lab fees, even microscope rental during medical school.

Plus a monthly stipend that works out to about $6,000 a year.

After you're accepted into medical school, you can be accepted into our program. Then you're commissioned and you go through school as a Second Lieutenant in the Army Reserve.

The hitch? Very simple. After you graduate, you give the Army a year as a doctor for every year the Army gave you as a med student, with a minimum obligation of three years' service.

INTERNSHIP, RESIDENCY & CASH BONUSES

Besides scholarships to medical school, the Army also offers AMA-approved first-year post-graduate and residency training programs.

Such training adds no further obligation to the scholarship participant. But any Civilian Graduate Medical Education sponsored by the Army gives you a one-year obligation for every year of sponsorship, with a minimum obligation of two years' service.

But you get a $9,000 annual bonus every year you're paying back medical school or post-graduate training.

So you not only get your medical education paid for, you get extra pay while you're paying it back. Not a bad deal.

A GREAT PLACE TO BE A NURSE

The rich tradition of Army Nursing is one of excellence, dedication, even heroism. And it's a challenge to live up to.

Today, an Army Nurse is the epitome of professionalism, regarded as a critical member of the Army Medical Team.

A BSN degree is required. And the clinical spectrum is almost impossible to match in civilian practice.

And, since you'll be an Army Officer, you'll enjoy more respect and authority than most of your civilian counterparts. You'll also enjoy travel opportunities, officer's pay and officer's privileges.

Army Nursing offers educational opportunities that are second to none. As an Army Nurse, you could be selected for graduate degree programs at civilian universities.

ADVANCED NURSING COURSE, TUITION-FREE

You get tuition, pay and living allowances. You can also take Nurse Practitioner courses and courses in many clinical specialities. All on the Army.

While these programs do not cost you any money, most of them do incur an additional service obligation.

A CHANCE TO PRACTICE LAW

If you're about to get your law degree and be admitted to the bar, you should consider a commission in the Judge Advocate General Corps. Because in the Army you get to practice law right from the start.

While your classmates are still doing other lawyers' research and other lawyers' briefs, you could have your own cases, your own clients, in effect, your own practice.

Plus you'll have the pay, prestige and privileges of being an Officer in the United States Army. With a chance to travel and make the most of what you've worked so hard to become. A real, practicing lawyer. Be an Army Lawyer.

ROTC SCHOLARSHIPS

Though you're too late for a 4-year scholarship, there are 3-, 2-, and even 1-year scholarships available.

They include tuition, books, and lab fees. Plus $100 a month living allowance. Naturally they're very competitive. Because besides helping you towards your degree, an ROTC scholarship helps you towards the gold bars of an Army Officer.

Stop by the ROTC office on campus and ask about details.

UP TO $170 A MONTH

You can combine service in the Army Reserve or National Guard with Army ROTC and get between $7,000 and $14,000 while you're still in school.

It's called the Simultaneous Membership Program. You get $100 a month as an Advanced Army ROTC Cadet and an additional $70 a month (sergeant's pay) as an Army Reservist.

When you graduate, you'll be commissioned as a Second Lieutenant, but not necessarily assigned to active duty. Find out about it.

A BONUS FOR PART-TIME WORK

You can get a $1,500 bonus just for enlisting in some Army Reserve units. Or up to $4,000 in educational benefits.

You also get paid for your Reserve duty. It comes out to about $1,100 a year for one weekend a month and two weeks annual training.

And now we have a special program to help you fit the Army Reserve around your school schedule.

It's worth a look.

A SECOND CHANCE AT COLLEGE

Some may find college to be the right place at the wrong time for a variety of reasons. The Army can help them, too.

A few years in the Army can help them get money for tuition and the maturity to use it wisely.

The Army has a program in which money saved for college is matched two-for-one by the government. Then, if one qualifies, a generous bonus is added to that.

So 2 years of service can get you up to $15,200 for college, 3 and 4 years up to $20,100. In addition, bonuses up to $5,000 are available for 4-year enlistments in selected skills.

Add in the experience and maturity gained, and the Army can send an individual back to college a richer person in more ways than one.

We hope these Army opportunities have intrigued you as well as surprised you. Because there is indeed a lot the Army can offer a bright person like you.

Senate Tables Vote on Football

By ANNEMARIE URBINATO

The University Senate decided against recommending the continuation of football to the Board of Trustees last Friday.

By a 13 to 15 decision, the Senate voted that the motion should be sent back to the Athletic Advisory and Student Life committees since they believed that such a debate would not be serious or reasonable.

After the motion was announced, Father O'Malley, dean of arts and science, made another motion to remand it back to the committees.

O'Malley's motion came at 6:20 p.m. Senate procedure states that new business cannot be introduced after 6:45 p.m.

"I think that the sole purpose of the administration and some faculty members of the Senate was to send it back to a committee in hopes that it would die in that committee," commented Student Government President Bob Rosengarth.

"The contention was that there wasn't enough information, but I feel that we were well prepared for any debate on the subject," he continued. "If anyone tried to get all of the information on an issue before bringing it to the Senate floor, it would never get there because there's always more information. Furthermore, the chair stated that there could be no debate on the motion to remand. However, a motion to remand is debatable, according to parliamentary procedures," he explained.

The Senate devoted most of the meeting, however, debating the issues of student course/teacher evaluations. By a two vote margin, they decided in favor of continuing the practice.

The Ad-Hoc Committee on Course/Teacher Evaluation, however, recommended that results be kept from the library. The committee claimed that they have "proven to be little or no utility" in aiding students for course selection.

Student senators strongly opposed the committee's recommendations. The availability, they said, would supplement the "grapevine approach" to learning about courses and teachers and would also serve as favorable public relations for the University.

The main reason why students hardly utilized them in the past was because the questions that went along with the results were not available, said Rosengarth.

Most faculty and administration senators voted in favor of the recommendation. They agreed during the meeting that it denied a teacher's right to explain the results and that most interpretation could be taken out of context.

The Senate also defeated another recommendation to make the evaluations mandatory criteria for tenure and promotion consideration.

They agreed, however, to pass a recommendation by the rules and review committee to allow for a formal question and answer period before each meeting.

If the recommendation is passed by Father Driscoll and the Board of Trustees, administrators would be required to answer questions concerning university policy either in person or in writing. Five questions will be placed on the agenda of each Senate meeting and will be sent at least five days before each meeting to a specific administrator. The questions will not be debatable.

Fire Starts in St. Mary's

By BOB CONWAY

The fire safety system in St. Mary's Hall failed to work properly during a fire there on Friday, October 16.

According to Ed Meagher of the maintenance staff, the fire started when a boiler began to leak oil.

"We will not know the full answer about the fire until we dismantle the boiler," added Meagher.

Several areas of St. Mary's Hall had no notification of the fire from the alarm system. According to Ken Crowley, the alarms in the priory area of St. Mary's Hall did not function. "The R.A.'s had to come down and tell us there was a fire," said Crowley.

Crowley added that the alarms did not work the previous night, when St. Mary's Hall had a regularly scheduled fire drill.

Residents of the second floor of St. Mary's said that the alarms did not work properly the night of the fire. "I thought that somebody was just banging on the, bells," said Dave Iarlo, a second floor resident.

Anthony Bevilacqua, another second floor resident, also did not think the fire alarms were sounding properly. "At first, I thought it was a fake. Then I noticed the smoke down at the other end of the hallway," he said.

The gymnasium and pool areas were also without fire alarms, according to Susan Tronolone, the co-ordinator for resident management for the west area of campus. "Resident Assistants were aware of this because of the fire drill, so we made sure that all of the residents were safe," said Tronolone.

Tronolone added that she felt the resident assistants did a good job of evacuating the building.

Bob McGowen, a third floor resident, said there was a delay in evacuating residents because of the fire drill the night before. He said that many residents were knocking on doors notifying residents that the bells were not part of another fire drill.

"There was a fire drill the night before, so a lot of people were just standing outside their doors wondering what was going on," said McGowen.

Three fire companies from the area responded to the fire. Both Tronolone and Meagher were pleased with the manner in which the fire companies responded to the fire.

"Due to the size and lay-out of the building, it is standard procedure that all three fire companies respond to the call," said Tronolone. "There were five fire trucks at St. Mary's within seven minutes."

Meagher added that the damage was kept to a minimum because of the response by the local fire departments.

Egyptian-Israeli Conflict Viewed

By SARA KELLY

Fred J. Khouri, a political science professor at Villanova University, is the author of The Arab-Israeli Dilemma, a book used by over 200 colleges and universities and the state department in studying the Middle East. During the Nixon administration, Khouri accompanied then Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to the Middle East as an official representative of the United States Government.

Whenever the leader of a country is assassinated, the world wonders if any political, economic or social changes will follow. With the assassination of President Anwar Sadat, certain questions arise as to whether relations between Israel and Egypt and the United States and Egypt will suffer any great changes.

Fred J. Khouri, political science professor at Villanova University, believes that if Egypt's new President, Hosni Mubarik, intends to stray from the policies started by Sadat he will not make any moves in the immediate future. "At the time of his death, Sadat didn't want to antagonize the Israeli's because in April 1982 Israel is due to return the rest of the Sinai to Egypt. Mubarik won't want to antagonize the Israeli's either, so if he chooses to stray from the policies of Sadat, he won't do it until after Egypt regains the rest of the Sinai," stated Khouri.

Dr. Fred Khouri, political science professor.

According to Khouri, if Mubarik does follow the policies of Sadat, he will find himself opposing the same forces which Sadat opposed. "One of the groups that opposed Sadat was the Islamic Fundamentalists. They want to remove all western influence from Egypt. The closer Egypt got to the United States and Israel, the stronger his opposition grew. The Islamic Fundamentalists are opposed to any agreement with Israel. So if Mubarik wants to gain support in Egypt, he would have to forget the Camp David agreement. If he did this, he would restore Egypt's position in the Middle East and increase his popularity within Egypt, but he would antagonize Israel and the United States.

Khouri feels it is too soon to be sure what exactly Mubarik's positions will be on Sadat's policies. "When Sadat succeeded as President when Nasser died, he said he would follow the policies of Nasser and then when he gained power in Egypt he developed his own policies.

Once Mubarik gains power in Egypt, he may stray from the ideas of Sadat or he may not. When I spoke with Mubarik he seemed very loyal to Sadat, but if he didn't publicly back Sadat, he wouldn't have been vice-president for long. So it's just too soon to tell."

New Course

A new course specializing in stories and novels of FEAR and the SUPERNATURAL is being introduced. Readings in this course will cover a broad spectrum of types, with considerable attention to contemporary versions of terror, ghost tales, and the supernatural. In private readings students will be encouraged to develop special interests. Course number is English 2620-02, the title Tales of Terror and Supernatural. Course is open to all interested students. Please consult Dr. Reino of the English department for further details.

Graduates of 1981

A SPECIAL NOTICE FOR PROSPECTIVE DECEMBER 1981 AND MAY 1982 GRADUATES

Full-time undergraduate students who expect to receive degrees in Dec., 1981 or in May, 1982, should come to the Registrar's Office, Room 202 Tolentine Hall, to complete "Prospective Graduate" cards. These cards are used to tell the engraver how the graduate's name should appear on the diploma, if degree requirements are completed, and the cards are required whether students plan to attend Commencement ceremonies or not.

"Prospective Graduate" cards are available now until Dec. 29 (the last day of fall semester final examinations). December, 1981 graduates' diplomas will be mailed in early spring, 1982. May, 1982 diplomas must be ordered far in advance of the May degree date so that they will be available for the Commencement. For these reasons, it is important that "Prospective Graduate" cards be filled out by the Dec. 22 deadline.

Nursing Career Day

The ninth annual Nursing Career Day will be held on Friday, Oct. 30. The day is split into two programs. The morning program will run from 9-12:30 in the Connelly Cinema. Various speakers from nursing related fields will comprise this segment. Speakers include two midwives, a recent Villanovan graduate, cardiac rehabilitation nurses, and a faculty member who will speak on graduate programs and camp nursing. Of special interest this year is Dr. Joan O'Leary who will speak on interviewing skills and what to look for in a hospital. The afternoon program will run from 1 to 4 p.m. in the Villanovan Room of the Connelly Center; 105 agencies will be present. The day should prove interesting and informative to all nursing majors.

Discount Tickets

Villanova Theatre will offer discounts to students on tickets to 1981-1982 season performances. Ticket prices for students are $4 on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and $5 on Fridays and Saturdays.

Student rush tickets will also be available again this year. Tickets unsold by 7:50 p.m. on nights of performance will go on sale to students for $2 apiece.

A valid 1981-82 Student I.D. will be necessary for all student discounts.

Alpha Phi Omega

All brothers who are helping with Open House should meet in the lobby of Connelly Center at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Freshman Discounts

Freshman may buy two tickets for the price of one for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday performances of A Taste of Honey at Vasey Theatre. Buy one student ticket ($4 on Wed./Thurs., $5 on Fri.) — get another one free with presentation of a valid 1981-82 Freshman I.D.

Drawing Course

A new course in Basic Drawing (AAH 1125) will be offered for the first time next semester. The foundations of drawing for beginners will include work in a variety of media including charcoal, pencil, ink and pastel. For more information call art and history at ext. 4610. The course will meet on Tues. and Thurs. from 1 to 3 p.m.

Win a Halloween Pumpkin filled with candy! Chances will be sold in the Connelly Center on Oct. 27, 29, and 30. Sponsored by the Undergraduate Nursing Senate.

Photography Lecture

Max Kozloff, critic and writer on contemporary art, will speak on contemporary photography and photography criticism Wednesday evening, Oct. 28 at 8 p.m. The lecture will be held in Lawrence Hall on Rosemont's campus. Kozloff will use examples of his own, as well as well-known photographers to illustrate some of the concepts of modern photography. Sponsored by the dept. of art and art history. For more information, call ext. 4610.

Sunshine

This is just to let you know that it's not too late to participate in the faculty administrators, staff chorus (FAS for short!) that we have planned for this benefit show for Project: SUNSHINE. We have a number of people from the development office who have expressed enthusiastic interest in the FAS Chorus; however, they're waiting for the rest of Villanova's talented educators to join them. Rehearsals are every Thursday evening, 6:30-7:30, West Lounge, Dougherty Hall. If necessary to accommodate our FAS, the rehearsal daytimes can be adjusted.

Geographical Society

The Villanova Geographical Society is pleased to announce their next speaker in a continuing lecture series: Dr. Charles Newlin. An associate and senior engineer in the consulting firm, Dames & Moore, he was formerly the head of the civil engineering department at Arizona State University. Dr. Newlin will speak about the public involvement aspects of a major water resource engineering project. The title of his talk is "Public Involvement in Decision Making." Come, meet Dr. Newlin and share refreshments on Tuesday, Oct. 27, 7:30 p.m. Tolentine 305. Everyone is welcome. See you there!

Meditation

Practiced the TM program and interested in learning more about it, or starting a club on campus? Such a group would involve an instructor giving an advanced lecture, checking meditation and other recreational activities. Those interested call the Philadelphia TM Center at 567-3313 and ask for Bill Fetzer.

Greece Trip

For the third time in the past two years, Dr. Sterling F. Delano, of the English department, will lead a tour through ancient and modern Greece during the spring, 1982. In conjunction with the trip, Dr. Delano will be teaching a three-credit course next semester called "Greece: the Ancient and Modern Worlds." It will not be necessary to enroll in the course in order to take the tour. The grip will include, among other things, stays in Athens, Olympia and Delphi, as well as a cruise on the Aegean to three islands. Dr. Delano may be reached at 645-4760 for further information, or ext. 304 St. Thomas Hall.

Auditions

Villanova Theatre will hold auditions on Thursday, Oct. 29, and Friday, Oct. 30 for a Rosemont Studio production of Harold Pinter's Betrayal. Call 645-4760 for appointments and information.

Anti-Nuclear Caravan Stops at V.U.

By LISA FEDERICO

The Nuclear Arms Race was the issue of the "Day of Concern" sponsored by the Villanova Caravan Committee on Wednesday October 21st.

The activities began at 11:30 a.m. with a Teach-In on the nuclear threat by Villanova faculty members, including Professors Bean, Carrier, Crabtree, Logue, Regan and others. Various aspects of the present nuclear situation were discussed.

Points concerning the morality of the use of the current military defense were of special interest to the speakers. These points included references to both Catholic and Christian opinions and views on the use anf existence of nuclear arms.

The speakers called on each person to voice their opinions and concern to the governments and citizens of every nuclear armed country in a attempt to eliminate the Nuclear Arms Race.

Crabtree, professor of religious studies, stated that, "The nuclear situation has gone too far. The probability of a war now exists, and the major powers have the weapons to destroy each other two times over. The government must stop this senseless defense spending and use the money for beneficial social services." This sentiment was a popular one at the Teach-in.

Included in the Teach-In was a film entitled The War Game, which was a documentary on a hypothetical, low-level, nuclear attack. The film was originally commissioned for the B.B.C. but never shown. It was then sent to Canada for airing on television but met with opposition from the Canadian government, similiarly in the U.S. it was restricted by the government and only approved for private showing.

The Villanova Caravan Committee has had a booth set-up in the lobby of Connelly Center all week asking for students' signatures on a petition titled "The Human Manifesto." This petition stated the desire for an end to war and pollution of different types. At the both T-shirts were being sold with a planet Earth emblem imprinted on the front. Committee members, stationed at the booth, said they were getting a positive response and active participation, but could always use more.

At 3:20 p.m. the Caravan for Human Survival arrived. The caravan had started in Miami, Fla. and moved up through the eastern states, stopping at approximately forty college campuses, on its way to the United States building in New York city. The Caravan chose Villanova as the site of its only Philadelphia area college appearance.

The Teach-In resumed at 4:00 p.m. until 6:00 p.m. At 8:00 p.m. the Religious Studies Department sponsored a lecture by Rev. Thomas Berry, President of the Teilhard Society for the Future of Man. Rev. Berry's lecture topic was "The Future of the Biosphere." The direction of the speech was the effect of nuclear weapons on civilization presently and future civilizations.

The "Day of Concern" concluded with a lecture by Dr. Robert K. Musil, a lecturer in American Studies at Temple University. Dr. Musil's topic was "The Case for a Nuclear Freeze."

New Dining Halls Proposed

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Recommendations have been submitted to convert the East, Middle and West Louriges to resident dining areas. "It is a physical impossibility to achieve such a feat," said J. Les Gies, director of food services, "more room is needed for the resident student cafeteria in Dougherty Hall."

Over 800 resident students eat in the Dougherty cafeterias. "The space there just does not meet the needs. Knowing how crowded it is in the cafeteria, we are hoping to expand," said Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., administrative vice president. To relieve this pressure downstairs food service would like to take over the upper level completely, according to Rice. For years, Rice and Gies have been trying to turn the East, West and Middle Lounges to resident dining facilities.

"It is reasonable to have a dining area upstairs where the lounges are located. There are three closely-related unit areas in an ideal location. It would be the most efficient way of expansion without a major investment. So far, planning committees have ignored the food services recommendations and examinations," stated Rice.

According to Edward Murray, assistant to the president, "The request for alternative plans will be considered when the renovation of Dougherty Hall is worked on in

Homecoming Plans Finalized

By DOUGLAS EARL

Octoberfest, a diversified schedule of activities, has been organized to celebrate homecoming replacing an 87-year-old tradition of football being the highlight of the annual event.

Some of the activities in the Octoberfest will be: an awards dinner, undergraduate and alumni dances, a concert featuring Livingston Taylor, an exhibition of German dancers and an academic open-house.

This will be the first year the student body and the alumni have coordinate such a diverse program for Homecoming, according to Robert J. Capone, alumni director for the University.

Speaking of the absence of football in the celebration of Homecoming Capone said, "Certainly the traditional Homecoming as Villanova has known it for 87 years won't take place. The football game has always been the focal point of the fall Homecoming. However the alumni office has attempted to provide an adequate substitute for the game.

"All of the basic ingredients for Homecoming are still present, that is, camaraderie with classmates, peers and friends . . . an opportunity to share and develop friendships," he said.

"I really think this Octoberfest can be an outstanding event. We've worked very hard to make this a success," he noted.

Capone said he could not anticipate the expected response to this year's Homecoming, "because there's no preregistration," but added, "a cocktail party after the game, which was always very well attended, drew in the thousands."

Career Development Center Releases Repor

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

In recent years the Career Development Center (CDC) has been sending questionnaires to members of newly graduated classes in order to learn about the careers and/or academic placement of each class at Villanova. Last April the results of the Class of 1980 poll were tabulated and a report was prepared by the CDC.

More than 60 percent of the graduates in that class responded as requested. This represents 769 replies. Of these, nearly three out of four stated that they were employed full time. Less than one in ten had no definite plans as of March. The rest (17 percent) were in graduate or professional school.

Paul Kenney, acting coordinator of the CDC, stated that "these questionnaires provide comparative information on graduates." The findings are useful to "current undergraduate students, faculty, academic deans, administration, and alumni," according to the survey.

It reports that 609 graduates revealed their annual salaries to yield a median figure of $14,895. Of the 61.1 percent who responded, more than half of the employed wrote that their jobs were directly related to their academic major at Villanova. More than one-third stated that they were "very satisfied" with their new careers.

The median annual salary for the 167 Arts and Science alumni who responded was $11,800. Annual earnings below $10,000 were reported by 32 percent of A&S graduates. At the upper level, 13 percent were paid more than $18,000. Only one in five out of 65 percent who answered considered the job directly related to the academic major. More than 60 percent of the class of 1980 A&S graduates returned the questionnaire.

Commerce and Finance graduates earned a median salary of $14,628, based on 224 graduates who indicated remuneration. One out of four was paid more than $16,000 annually; 7 percent were paid more than $22,000. Nearly one in five received $12,000 or less. Nearly 60 percent out of 85 percent who answered stated that their job was directly related to their undergraduate major. More than three out of four added that they were "satisfied" or "very satisfied" with their current employment. A total of 270 C&F graduates responded, 69.1 percent of the total class size.

Engineering alumni, predictably, had the largest median annual pay, $21,045 for 107 responses. The salary range was comparatively narrow: 23 percent above $22,000; 27 percent below $20,000. Seven out of ten engineers, representing 94 percent of respondents, felt their employment was directly related to their undergraduate curriculum. More than half were "very satisfied" with their work. A total of 116 Engineering graduates responded, 74.8 percent of the total class size.

One hundred eleven graduates of the College of Nursing reported a median salary of $15,351. One out of four was paid $14,000 less, while 36 percent ear above $16,000. Only one in ten "very satisfield" with remuneration in this field. M than 98 percent out of 97 per who responded felt that the N ing major was related directl their jobs. And 96 percent "satisfied" or "very satisfi with their employment.

"The Class of 1980 at Villa seems to have fared well," cluded Kenney.

detail. We will collect all input on how Dougherty Hall can best be used. Everyone will have an opportunity to input their ideas. Murray explained that "specific plans have never been drawn because the unloading of the basement cafeteria to the first floor can't be done without a certain amount of money and without curtailing various activities. More space would be an advantage for the food services, but there is a question of whether the lounges and offices can afford to give up their space," he said.

Plans originally were made for Dougherty activities to move to the Connelly Center. "I am disappointed in the so few number of seats in the eating area of Connelly Center. There is an awful lot of lounge space in the Connelly Center," said Rice. Gies suggested that the offices in the lounges be re-located in the Connelly Center.

"Dougherty Hall belongs to resident student body. T residents need the space dining. Offices in the lounges rarely occupied.

Rice feels it would be a gr improvement to have two levels of resident dining Dougherty Hall. "The Dough food is the same as everywh else, but the place is too crow so it can't be enjoyed. That is not fair," he explained.

If you're ready to begin your technical career, but aren't looking forward to a pencil and paper pushing existence, we want to tell you about a highly unusual profession.

Essentially, we're the people who make it possible for energy producers to evaluate the productivity of well sites. Our equipment measures resistivity, conductivity, acoustic travel time, radioactivity and various other physical characteristics of the well bore.

As a Jr. Field Engineer, you'll undertake extensive training including supervised field work and 12 weeks of classroom instruction before being promoted to Field Engineer.

At this stage, your career adventure really begins. You'll be assigned a logging unit, crew and company car. Your generous base salary will be supplemented by monthly bonuses based on the income your work produces. Your progress will be in your hands on a job that is tough, demanding and long. But if you're interested in accumulating real-world experience fast, there's nothing like it.

We offer full company benefits, relocation assistance and a variety of attractive locations, including the career active Rocky Mountain and Sunbelt areas. Enjoy the kind of personal recognition that comes from a high profile career like this one.

Amtrak Prepares Report to Repair Tunnel

By KIM RUSHTON

Temporary repairs have been ade by Amtrak in the pedestrian unnel at Villanova Station in ompliance with the Pennsylvania ublic Utilities Commission PUC) (determination of June 26, 981, ordering Amtrak to supply he PUC with ideas for permanent olutions to the drainage problem. mtrak engineers are conducting tudies of the drainage system. Original blueprints of the drainage system have been lost, according to Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president of student life.

Neville explained that the original blueprints were lost somehow during the changes of ownership of the railroad from Penn Central to Conrail, and then from Conrail to Amtrak.

The question is very complex as there are drains of both Villanova and Amtrak in the tunnel; there is a lack of clarity of boundry lines, said Neville.

Neville mentioned other complicating factors such as natural springs, which mean the water level may never really be at zero, and could contribute to the flooding problem. Also, the pump that is presently used is in no way sufficient for very heavy rains. Neville alluded to the problem as a puzzle which Amtrack is trying to put together.

According to Neville, Amtrak admits they do not have sufficient crews to consistently keep the drains properly cleaned. Neville praised Amtrak's responses to calls when the tunnel was flooded, but pointed out that this was "after the fact."

Richard Cooper, stuctural engineer for Amtrak, said Amtrak is presently complying with the PUC decision and is to do a drainage study and to prepare a permanent plan for repairs. Cooper mentioned that other schools, such as the University of Pennsylvania, have built their own pedestrian walkways. He expressed the opinion that any solution will have to be a joint effort on the part of Villanova and Amtrak.

Neville stated Amtrak's position to be that it was not until Villanova built on the land that there was any drainage problem.

James Patterson, attorney for Villanova University, said that the railroad has not been able to prove that the problem is attributable to Villanova University.

Scott Armentrout, attorney for Amtrak, said Amtrak's position has not changed, and that the problem of transporting Villanova students from one side of the campus to the other is essentially Villanova's problem. Armentrout stated the tunnel was originally built for railroad passengers.

Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance of Villanova University, has told Neville that most of the water drains in front of Mendel Hall, where the walkway was crowned. Neville pointed out that the walkway was crowned at Villanova's expense.

On Oct. 5, 1981, a meeting took place between Neville, Trucks, Cooper, and Armentrout. Vice President of Maintenance Fr. Rice was also present for part of the meeting. The four inspected the tunnel and discussed the situation. Neville described the meeting as amicable.

Neville expressed optimism about the situation and said he was glad to see some "energy, effort, and money" put into the problem. He expressed hope that with the good will of Villanova and Amtrak, some progress can be made.

James Patterson, attorney for Villanova, said, "No part of the problem is a result of Villanova's drainage. Said Patterson, "We don't care who pays, just fix it."

In conclusion Patterson commented, "Villanova has gone so far as to try and co-operate" despite the fact that the case record shows no responsibility on the part of Villanova.

Senate Ignores Issue

The decision to drop Villanova's football program was one of the biggest the University has ever made. Until last Friday, the University Senate had not considered this decision.

The issue came before the Senate at approximately 6:20 p.m. The Senate decided to send the issue back to the Student Life and Athletic Advisory Committees. This was a shrewed parliamentary move by the 15 senators who did not wish to discuss the football decision.

The motives for ignoring the football issue were two-fold. The administrators on the Senate did not want to vote against the Board of Trustees. The other reason was that it was simply too late to discuss anything else.

This second reason is a poor reflection on the Senate which is supposed to represent all factions of the University. Is it too much to ask that a group which meets six times a year stay past 6:30 p.m. for one meeting?

The Villanovan has commented on the value of the University Senate in the past. We have said that the Senate will never possess any real power unless it begins to assert itself. This instance is just another case in point.

So, until now, the student body and faculty representatives have not had an opportunity to vote on the dropping of football. This says much about the effectiveness of democracy at Villanova.

Advisor's Role Defined

Besides serving as a vehicle for communication at Villanova, the Villanovan was created by the University to "simulate the educational experience of a professional newspaper."

The most important aspect of this educational experience is the responsibility associated with journalism. Over the past year, many people, including the faculty, have assumed that the Villanova advisor has this responsibility: our advisor does not.

The student editors greatly appreciate the opportunity to work with Mrs. Lytel. Her background in professional journalism is of great value, especially to students who have little formal education in this area. Therefore, she serves as a voice of experience.

Even though our advisor serves an important purpose, our advisor is just that — an advisor. The journalistic responsibility rests with the editors and staff of the newspaper.

The advisor can suggest stories and comment on journalistic style. But, the advisor never writes the copy. This is the responsibility of the student editors and reporters.

This is why it is disheartening when faculty members and administrative officials call Mrs. Lytel with complaints, asserting that she is "leading us." Our advisor will offer comments on the paper, but the final decisions are always left to the student editors.

The editors of the Villanovan would appreciate any complaints or suggestions be forwarded directly to us. We take pride in our work, as well as responsibility for it. It is time that the members of the University community recognize this.

Poor Taste Regretted

The Villanovan apologizes for the statement appearing in the "The Best and Worst of Villanova" last week regarding the security guards.

The statement was not intended to cause any ill-feelings, and was not written with any malice.

Even so, the statement was in poor taste, and we regret its appearance.

Letters to the Editor

Response to Memorandum

Dear Reverend Driscoll:

This letter is in response to your "memorandum" to alumni, parents and friends of Villanova University dated Fall, 1981. I had previously written you a letter dated April 24, 1981 and a letter to the Board of Trustees dated June 24, 1981.

My April 24, 1981 letter was in response to the sudden abandonment of the football program at Villanova University. I am a 1954 graduate of the University and, I think, have been loyal to the University ever since. I advised you in that letter that I was more shocked with the way you handled the situation than the situation itself. I felt that the suddenness of the announcement was a great shock to the student body, to the football players, and to the alumni. I was and still am of the opinion that the matter was handled by you in a very irresponsible and unresponsive manner.

Your Fall, 1981 letter suggests that it was not handled in a "capricious, ill-considered or ill-timed" manner. I may remind you to my knowledge the Alumni Association was never approached by you or the Board of Trustees with the proposition that Villanova may abandon the intercollegiate football program. The Alumni Association has been quite generous to the University in the recent past. It would have been judicious, if not courteous, to present the problem to the Alumni Association to solicit alternative solutions other than the sudden abandonment of the program.

You are quite right on Page 2 of the letter in saying that "football is somewhat like the chapel spires." The unilateral action taken by you as President of the Board of Trustees, and the Board of Trustees, has shown a spirit of complete non-cooperation between the you, the Board of Trustees and the University Alumni Association.

The only accounting figures presented by you which I have seen with regard to the football program was the blanket statement in your letter to the effect that the net cost of the University for a three-year period from 1979 through 1981 would have been almost $2,000,000. A blanket statement such as that is not acceptable as a reason for cancelling the football program. The October 9, 1981 edition of The Villanovan carried a front page article stating the yearly cost of the football program was $227,000, which does not equal $2,000,000 over a three-year span.

Please advise me if you wish to attend the Bob Hope Football Fundraising Benefit Program and I will be happy to send you a ticket.

Very truly yours,
Daniel J. Leahy, 1954

'Best And Worst'

Dear Editor:

I must confess to being confused about the intent of your recent "Best and Worst" feature. Was this meant to be humorous?

Recent "Villanovans" have catalogued the problems that this University is having with vandalism. Your suggestion that a soda machine could or should be "abused" (perhaps over the dead body of a security guard) was ill-advised and a disservice to all members of the campus community.

The abuse that vending machines, telephones, campus buildings, and security guards receive everyday is senseless and no laughing matter.

Jim Brown
Athletic Business Manager

Dear Sirs,

Regarding the comment in the "Best and Worst of Villanova" about the Security Guards, I feel that this was in extremely poor taste and displayed what has of late been an increasing lack of responsibility and maturity on the part of the Villanovan's staff.

Ninety percent of the student body is unaware of the importance of the role of the security guards here on campus and the only contact they often have with them is the consistently negative comments expressed in the Villanovan.

I feel that it is the responsibility of the editor and the paper itself to personally apoligize to the Security Department.

Patrick D. Connell

AWACS Issue, Technology Explained

The proposed sale of the AWACs arms package to Saudi Arabia to be decided in the U.S. Senate at the end of this month has some puzzling aspects. At its very best, it is no substitute for developing direct high-level tactical capability for our armed forces in the Persian Gulf and Western Indian Ocean regions. Worst of all, selling the $8.5 billion package for the purpose of improving our chances for working constructively . . . "towards our common goal — a just and lasting peace," in the president's own words, bears no logical scrutiny to any antecedent situations in that explosive area. The Saudi's bullying of Oman into denying us military facilities — their attempts to stymie our development of a strategic petroleum reserve — their resolution against us after the failed Iran rescue mission — the bankrolling of the PLO and the call for a Holy War against the proponents of the Camp David accord, belie the seriousness we ascribe to the Saudi's resolve to defend the region against the Soviets.

Will AWACs Help?

Furthermore, Saudi armed forces were incapable of recapturing the Grand Mosque of Mecca held by religious rebels in 1979, and today are divided into three armies — all watching each other. One must query, can they really be expected to guard their own oil fields with five AWACs against any enemy intent on setting them on fire? Moreover, is there any weaponry suitable for containing the internal subversion now brewing in Saudi Arabia?

Pro and Con Arguments

The arguments about AWACs — both pro and con — are deeply detailed and loaded with algorithms — especially when our state department officials say, in rebuttal to Senator Glenn who opposes giving away vital technology through the sale, that we do not intend to sell the Saudis the "good stuff" and that the computers to be placed in their WACs are off-the-shelf types commercially available. If this is so, one wonders why the Saudis are so anxious to spend a quarter of a billion dollars per copy for "1960 s technology." The exclusion of our Air Force Mode 4-IFF identification system makes it impossible for the Saudi AWACS to operate directly with American naval and air force planes, thus negating their value as mobile warning stations intended to call for over-the-horizon reinforcements should Red stars appear within striking distance of the oil fields.

High Technology

The Boeing E-3A Airborne Warning and Control System Aircraft (AWAC) should not be denigrated as a force multiplier. Given the appropriate operational conditions, it is an effective battle management station to guide friendly fighters to intercept attackers. A super-sophisticated defensive instrument with both extraordinary high and low-level coverage capability, it is equipped with a Pulse-Doppler-type radar, a narrow beam sidelobe system that can separate moving targets from the ground clutter of reflected energy. It is also difficult to jam since its antennae are not sensitive to ordinary electromagnetic interference.

Detection Ability

In addition to flying targets, the AWAC can detect patrol craft down to 40 feet in length in a calm sea, but it cannot pick up smaller ground targets such as artillery or tanks, and is somewhat affected by terrain. On the flat stretches of the Persian Gulf desert region or in the plains of Central Europe its sweep is superb. It leaves some doubt however about its low-level detection ability to flash signals to Hawk missile batteries in rugged mountainous terrain such as found on Arabia's Yemen border or in the deserts bordering Jordan — and Israel.

Hidden Items

It appears to me that hidden in the arms package — obfuscated by the acrimony over the acronym AWACs — are other items that might sharpen the controvery further. These include Sidewinder missiles and conformal fuel tanks intended to enhance the F-15 aircraft supplied to the Saudis since 1978.

A Deadly Weapon

For one, the sale of 1,177 AIM 9-L Sidewinders, Raytheon's most advanced air-to-air weapon, makes the F-15, already the most formidable interceptor in the world, absolutely deadly to any other aircraft in the Middle East. With it aboard, a fighter can fly down stream, and just fire it at the nose of an enemy airplane. It is not necessary to maneuver to the rear of the enemy for a strike. Its infrared heat seeker does the job for the pilot. So effective is this missile, that last August, twelve Navy fighter pilots after our Gulf of Sidra engagement with Libyan-flown MIG's, sent a letter to the Senate asking them not to let any other air force get possession of the Sidewinder.

Other Package Considerations

Another item in the AWAC sale package not mentioned in the press and totally ignored by the public, are the 101 pairs of conformal fuel tanks designed to fit the F-15 fuselage which will extend their operational range without significant degrading of acceleration and performance. These convert the interceptor aircraft to long-range offensive weapons. Add to this fact, the six KC 707 Aerial Refueling Tankers (with an option to buy two more), also included in the package, and abrogate any argument that this arms package is solely for defense. Other elements in the package comprise 22 radar stations and a vast amount of spare parts and support equipment — in themselves not critical but they must be added to the previously ordered $34 billion in arms for Saudi Arabia of which $13 billion has already been delivered. Yes, the proposed arms package sale to Saudi Arabia deserves deep and serious questioning. The present battle of wills between the president and the majority in Congress opposed to the sale, does not serve to illumine an issue which may yet turn out to be a losing one for everyone concerned, Senate confirmation or not!

ROTC on Campus:

First Step To Resolution Taken

I would like to thank those brothers and sisters who took the time to respond to my editorial concerning the military presence on campus. Taking the time to struggle with such an important problem is hopefully the first step towards mutual conflict resolution.

There are a few points brought to the forefront which need a response:

First, Mr. Saldutti brought up the danger of the Russian threat to the security of the "free" world. The nature of the superpower mentality is to dominate their particular sphere of influence. The U.S., as well as the Soviet Union, has been guilty of brutal persecution and blatant violation of human rights. Eastern Europe is the Soviet sphere and the U.S. has South America. The history of armed U.S. intervention into the sovereign affairs of other countries is public knowledge for everyone in the world except Americans of the U.S. I cite only a few examples of Guatemala, Nicaragua, Chile, El Salvador, Philippines, Iran etc.

These governments, popularly elected, were sabotaged by the U.S. through its arms, advisors and even Marines (Dominican Republic 1965 and Nicaragua 1912-1925, 1926-1933). Repressive dictatorships were set up in the name of national security and anti-communism. Amnesty International lists thousands of political prisoners and assassinations. Unfortunately, the world is held captive by the power politics of the two super-powers.

Second, Mr. Saldutti further spoke on the USSR's bad faith in breaking arms limitation promises. The plain fact is that both countries are guilty of this lack of trust (please read Sweden's former Minister of Disarmament, Alva Myrdal, thought on this matter in The Game of Disarmament). Neither political elite has the will to disarm for the armaments are the way to control other countries. The U.S. still has a 5-10 year lead time on every innovative weapon system in the pipeline.

Third, Ms. DiJoseph accurately details the bloody history of Christianity. She asserts that only a hypocrite would not fight for his/her ideals. There are many ways to fight for one's beliefs.

It is sheer cowardice to resort to the genocidal weapons knowing they will indiscriminately kill millions of people and render the planet inhabitable. We can resist evil in many creative ways without resorting to violence. The Danish resisted Hitler's order to transport Jews to the camps by refusing to co-operate with the services needed to complete the task. The Afghan are economically striking the Russians. The use of boycotts, strikes, non-cooperation in a draft or payment of taxes or manufacturing weapons or joining the military as well as fasting, prayer and self-sacrifice seem more human (therefore God-like) ways to fight for ideals. Jesus was an expert in this approach.

Fourth, Ms. Suydam wrote, very compassionately, on the humanness of ROTC cadets. I agree with her. My parents were in the Army and two brothers-in-law are in the Army now. I was a cadet in ROTC for two years during the Vietnam War. My main objections with ROTC are: One: Are they required to take morality of war courses from neutral, non-military professors? The harsh realities of war, (beyond the idyllic ads in the paper and TV) must be confronted before they participate. The book, All Quiet on the Western Front, accurately pinpoints the tragedy of ignorance and national blindness in dealing with the morality of war.

Two, In this world of superpower conflict shouldn't a Christian university be a prophet for peaceful alternatives? Why doesn't Villanova have college researchers investigate a variety of ways to resolve international and personal conflicts non-violently instead of seeking contracts for research on behalf of the Pentagon. If Christians don't stand up for peace: who will?

Purpose of University Cited

At a recent meeting of the University Senate, during the course of a debate over the University's mandated teacher-course evaluations, one of the student senators argued that, since the University existed for the students, the results of the teacher-course evaluation questionnaire should be placed in the library for students to see. I, for one, and I am sure other senators as well, reacted with some misgiving to this statement by a student senator concerning the purpose of this University for if it indeed were true then presumably the administration or the faculty would be wrong in not acceding to the students' collective will each time that collective will was expressed, regardless of what it favored or thought to be in the students' best interst.

Actually, however, I was falsely alarmed because, on further reflection, I came to the correct conclusion that the student really mispoke himself: what he actually wanted to say was that this University (and, presumably, any university) exists for the education of its students. Yet even this statement falls short of the truth since it ignores or overlooks an important and traditional component of a university's raison d'etre, namely, the advancement of knowledge (and the research required for it). We are well reminded of that very important purpose by the recent news stories concerning Nobel Prize awards, some of which have gone, as they frequently do, to research (and teaching) professors in institutions of higher learning.

Moreover, this advancement of Knowledge component of a university's purpose is obviously not intended so much for the benefit of the students who happen to be at a university when such advances are made as it is for the benefit of the wider community beyond the university.

To pursue this line of thought further, even where it concerns its educational purpose (namely, the communication of knowledge to its students) a university's ultimate goal would seem rightly to be to benefit the whole human community (of which the student is now a member and will become later, hopefully, an even more valuable one). Presumably, the ultimate goal of a Catholic university (i.e. one that is not merely nominally so) would have something to do with the glory of God (ad majorem gloriam Dei) and the salvation of souls — at least this is true on the traditional view.

During the course of this debate one of the administration's senators also argued that the teacher-course evaluation instrument should not be regarded as the sole or exclusive measure of good or effective teaching nor even as an absolutely reliable one. I believe his observation reflects a concern of many of Villanova's faculty, namely, that the teacher will be evaluated according to criteria that need not have anything to do with good sound teaching (e.g. grades, personality, looks, sense of humor, respect for students' opinions, and the appearance of a genuine interest in and concern for each student personally).

I might mention in conclusion that the results of the college-wide teacher-course evaluation questionnarie — which, along with a department questionnaire, is to be administered every third semester (one may well wonder whether such a procedure provides a reliable profile of consistently good (or poor) teaching, if indeed such information can be obtained from such a questionnaire — not be placed in the library was defeated. Whether access to such information will insure the students better access to truly good teachers remains a question for each one of us to answer for himself/herself.

Former Villanovan Editor-in-Chief Ron Javers spoke before the Philadelphia Alumni Club at a luncheon on Tuesday, Oct. 20.

Javers, who is now an articles editor for Philadelphia magazine, served as editor in 1967. In 1978, he was injured while serving as a reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle in Guyana.

Javers discussed the role of journalism in society, as well as commenting on his term as editor of the Villanovan.

Journalists, according to Javers, present certain myths about themselves and their profession to society. Javers particularly commented on the objectivity of journalists.

"The best definition of news that I have ever heard was spoken by David Brinkley," said Javers. "Brinkley said that news is 'what I think it is, and from my point of view.' "

All too often, Javers said, journalists and particularly television reporters, present themselves as hard-working news gatherers. In reality, Javers feels that many are in the business for the fame and glamour.

Javers also addressed the myth of reporters investigating their stories. He said that many reporters merely rely on carefully-prepared press releases. "The percentage of real investigative stories appearing in newspapers and television is really very small," said Javers.

Javers continued by commenting on the impact of newspaper editorials. "Papers try to convince the public that their editorial voice has power. Most studies have shown that newspaper editorials are read the least. In fact, 'Dear Abby' is read more than anything else," said Javers.

This week, the Villanovan is presenting some of the professors who, after graduating from Villanova, came back to teach at the undergraduate level. They kindly provided information about themselves and about how Villanova used to be.

Robert Lynch

Following graduation I served three years in the U.S. Navy as the Engineering Officer on a destroyer. After leaving the Navy, I was employed as a structural engineer designing highway bridges for the Interstate Highway System.

I received a master of civil engineering degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1960. In 1962, I joined the civil engineering faculty at Villanova University. The National Science Foundation awarded me a Science Faculty Fellowship in 1966. I was on leave of absence from Villanova from 1966 until 1968 when I returned after receiving my doctorate in philosophy from the University of Notre Dame. While a member of the faculty during this time, I participated in summer programs for engineering educators at the University of Notre Dame, University of Hawaii, University of Houston, Stanford University, the Air Force Academy, Marshall Space Flight Center and the University of Washington and was a consultant on the Environmental Impact Study of the Mid-County Expressway (the Blue Route) and the 21-story Federal Office Building in Philadelphia.

I was appointed to my current position of dean of the college of Engineering in 1975. I am also a registered professional engineer in the states of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Based on my wide experience on other campuses, I believe that Villanova's engineering program has been, is and will continue to be one of the finest in the country.

Joseph Kinney

Dr. Joseph A. Kinney, associate professor of English, has been on the full-time faculty since 1969. During the past 22 years, he has taught a variety of undergraduate and graduate courses and is a specialist in Renaissance Literature, particularly Shakespeare.

I have served on various University and departmental committees, and was an assistant to the dean of graduate studies on a part-time basis for 10 years.

During a sabbatical leave of absence, about 5 years ago, I initiated and administered a state-funded program for elementary and secondary school pupils in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. Since that time, I have been a periodic consultant for selected schools and pupils in the Philadelphia area.

While a student at Villanova, I majored in English, and received my bachelor's degree in 1958 and my master's degree in 1959. I pursued my doctorate at Bryn Mawr College, and was awarded my Ph.D. in English and American Literature in 1967.

I and my wife, Jo have four children (Joe, Cathy, Susan, and Mark) and a grandson (Terry). We live in Philadelphia.

As a professor, I have been impressed by Villanova's academic development and growth since the fifties, and particularly by the improving quality of most of my students — intellectually, morally, socially, and personally.

I am excited about being a member of the Villanova University family, and find that the hours I spend in a classroom on our campus are among the happiest times in my life.

"Welcome Back,

Oliver Ludwig

Oliver Ludwig was born in Philadelpia, attended diocesan schools there, and received his bachelor of science degree in chemistry from Villanova in 1957.

My graduate work was done at Carnegie Institute of Technology (now Carnegie-Mellon University), from which I received a master of science (Physical Chemistry) and doctorate (Quantum Chemistry) in 1960 and 1961, respectively. I spent the next year and a half on a "post doc" at Cambridge University in England, where I had a joint appointment in the Mathematical Laboratory and in the department of theoretical chemistry, and where I discovered a love of both English and American languages.

In 1963 I joined the faculty of Notre Dame University as assistant professor of chemistry and faculty associate of the computing center. After four and one half years (five football seasons) at ND, leaving one third of my body weight on the running trails there, I returned to alma mater.

At Villanova, where I am associate professor of chemistry, I have involved myself in a plethora of extracurricular activities:

Villanova Faculty Club — Founder and Hortator since 1969, Zeta Rho fraternity — faculty moderator (since 1970) and brother (since 1975 — the longest pledge period in history), Co-moderator of Chem Club, Consultant to Bryn Mawr bomb squad and hospital on nitrogen, nitrogen triiodide explosives, Multifarious — but not nefarious — other organizations.

My writing have appeared in The Journal of Chemical Physics, Theoretica Chemica Acta, journals of the British Computer Society and of The Association for Computing Machinery, and in ""Letters to the Editor" columns of "The Villanovan."

I was a student in the College of Nursing during the early 1960s; a resident during my freshman year and a commuter the other three. Although there are major differences that exist between then and now, some things still remain the same.

My graduating class had 35 females, who were the only women on campus with the exception of three in the College of Engineering and one in the College of Arts and Science. There were no female dorms on campus, thus, we were housed on Bryn Mawr Avenue in an estate called The Franciscan House of Studies, more commonly known as "The Convent." We got "bussed" to campus at 8:00 a.m. and brought back at 5:00 p.m.

Living in the "Convent" was a real experience. We had compulsory study hours at our desks from 7:30 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. and lights out at 11:00 p.m. Also, we had to clean our own rooms. Violation meant campusing (no weekend privileges) for at least two weeks.

And, ironically, some of the biggest concerns we had as students were passing chemistry, microbology, anatomy and physiology.

I graduated from Villanova in 1964, vowing never to enter a School of Nursing. I then worked at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania for two years and returned to Villanova to teach. After teaching one year, I returned to U of P to obtain my master of science in nursing. When I returned to Villanova in 1969, I came back with my M.S.N. and my MRS.

I taught medical-surgical nursing between 1969-1972 when I again left Villanova to add a son to our family. Interestingly enough, there were 65 students in the class of 1972 and when I returned to teach again in 1976, there were 175.

In 1978, I became upper division co-ordinator, a position which I held until this year when I became assistant to the dean.

Being on campus now is sort of like "home" — relaxing in some ways but exciting and never stagnant. Some of my professors have daughters who are now my students; some of my university professors and classmates are now my colleagues; and, some of my students are also my colleagues.

I enjoy working with students because I get my "highs" from helping students learn. I am obviously biased concerning their choice of a college but feel that I can understand some of their frustrations, challenges and feelings of accomplishment.

Gaetano Pastore

I began my undergraduate studies in my native city of Salerno, Italy, and completed them at Villanova in 1956.

I continued my studies at Villanova as a teaching graduate assistant, and in 1962 received a master's degree in English.

In September of the same year I began teaching English to both American and foreign students and was asked to offer Italian to a group of eight students. Within two years, student interest in Italian generated the introduction of an intermediate level course.

In 1964, I became a full-time member of the modern language department and was assigned a teaching load consisting of two courses in Italian, two in French, and one in English for foreign students. With a minor in modern languages, I did graduate work in French and in 1967 earned a second master's degree.

As student enrollment in Italian courses kept increasing, I decided to pursue my doctoral studies in Italian. I attended both the University of Pennsylvania and Rutgers University, where I completed my doctoral program in 1979.

I was recently promoted to associate professor. I am now teaching the Italian language and literature to some 120 students and, for the past five years, I have been the moderator of a very active Italian Club. In 1977 I was given an award by the American Institute for Italian Culture for my contribution to the growth of Italian culture in the United States. As a member of the Institute, I enjoy the privilege of presenting an annual award granted by the Institute to a graduating senior who has excelled in the study of Italian at Villanova.

I have recently published a book on Boccaccio's narrative technique.

A recipient of a bachelor of arts in political science in '75, I am assigned as the NROTC freshman class advisor and instructor. As such, I am responsible for the initiation and orientation of the new midshipmen each fall, and for their instruction in two courses, Introduction to Naval Science, and Naval Ships Systems I (Engineering). I also teach Naval Leadership and Management II to seniors in the spring, and am the faculty moderator for the Quarterdeck Society, and NROTC Wildcat Publications.

While an undergraduate student during the early seventies, I was an active member of the NROTC unit, and played for the University's men's lacrosse team. At graduation, I was commissioned an ensign in the Navy and was assigned as an engineering officer aboard USS JOHN KING (DDG 3). While stationed in this guided missile-equipped destroyer, I completed two six-month deployments with the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean Sea, and several Caribbean Sea cruises.

I returned to my Alma Mater in March 1979 and began my teaching duties the following September. During my tour of duty here I have published an article on Naval Strategy in the Journal of South Asian and Middle Eastern Studies, and have earned a master's degree in international politics. As a dedicated Navyman, I will leave Villanova at the close of this semester for further sea duty aboard a cruiser or destroyer of the U.S. fleet.

Bernard Lazor, O.S.A.

I came to Villanova as full-time associate professor in 1971, although my teaching affiliation with the University had its roots since 1958 when I began teaching in the Graduate Department of the Religious Studies Department.

I had just returned from Rome where I had been since 1951, the year of my ordination to the priesthood. For seven years the Augustinian Order prepared me to complete my graduate studies in theology and in my field of specialization, Sacred Scripture. As a result I can write my name — Rev. Bernard A. Lazor, OSA, BA, STL, SSL. The titles are Order of St. Augustine in which I professed my vows in 1944, bachelor of arts from VU in 1948, Licentiate in Sacred Theology from the Gregorian University in Rome (1953) and Licentiate in Sacred Scripture from the Pontifical Biblical Institute in Rome (1956).

Villanova in its tradition equates with Augustinian, as we can see from the name of the University, the College Chapel, the statuary on campus and the names of most of the buildings. As we love a family or a heritage or an ideal — that is what Villanova means to me — a Roman Catholic Heritage in an Augustinian Family with an ideal to perpetuate spiritually and intellectually what is best for the young adult of the world.

To share this heritage, this family and this ideal in as many ways as possible is what the years of association have meant — first, in the classroom by way of Biblical studies, secondly, in the field of sports by the contacts made as chaplain with our athletes and all the personnel involved and finally in the associations with our vast number of alumni with whom I have any number of contacts.

It is a meaningful, loving relationship which grows stronger as the years go by.

Dr. James J. Schuster, P.E., professor of civil engineering, graduated from Villanova in 1957 with a bachelor's of civil engineering and has been a faculty member since 1958. He also received the master's of civil engineering from his alma mater and the doctorate from Purdue University.

After working in industry for one year I joined the faculty as an instructor and progressed to the rank of professor. From 1966 to 1979 I was the director of the Institute for Transportation Studies.

My professional career includes research for the U.S. Department of Transportation, Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, private industry and various other organizations. I also have been a consultant to the Norwegian government in Oslo, BART in San Francisco, PennDOT and the City of Philadelphia. I have been published widely in the National Academy of Sciences — Transportation Research Board, American Society of Civil Engineers, Transportation Engineering and other transportation related journals.

Villanova plays a major part in my family. My wife, Jackie, received her B.S. in 1976. And my two sons, Jim and Peter, are current students majoring in Mechanical Engineering and Accounting, respectively.

I must proudly admit that two Villanovans, Rev. William Farrell, OSA '45 and Dean John J. Gallen '27, played a decisive role in the formation of my moral and professional values. I am a strong believer in the Villanova "community" and what it stands for.

Alvin Clay

Alvin A. Clay graduated from Villanova University in 1951 with a B.S. in Economics.

I was employed in the foreign division of ARCO before returning to Villanova as an instructor in accounting in 1955.

I have been a member of the department of accountancy for 27 years, serving as chairman for nine years, and am presently dean of the College of Commerce and Finance and professor of accounting.

I have served on many University committees including the Senate Budget Committee where I am now chairman.

I have done consulting work and currently serve on the boards of several corporations.

I have been published in both international accounting and the computer field.

I have been the recipient of the Student Government Award and the Lindback Award for teaching.

I am married to the former Anne Touey and am the father of ten children and grandfather of six. Four of my children and my wife are graduates of Villanova and three children are presently enrolled. I live in Springfield, Delaware County.

Welcome Back"

Nicholas Rongione

I graduated from Villanova just in time. During the mid 1960s, the school was still interested primarily in academic excellence. My friends and I even went to class regularly and both fought and frolicked with our professors — among others.

From the docile Main Line I went to New York University to do my graduate work, I had no idea of just how far away, intellectually speaking, ninety short miles could be. There I was, clean-shaven, ideals and goals intact, right in the midst of one of the main battles of the Revolution.

Greenwich Village in the late sixties was terrible — and beautiful at the same time. Going to class was always an adventure. One night it was a panhandler; the next, after Martin J. King had been shot, an emotional hush fell over the city that chilled to the marrow. And there were the classes with the big name professors which, amid the noise and dirt of the city below, usually were stimulating enough to engender an intellectual orgasm. No time for sleep; think about what he said; talk; think; talk; think.

Then, having postponed it as long as I could, I had to go to work. My first position, teaching in an all female college run by a religious order of sisters, was invigorating yet unbearable. I was teaching some very good students, but I had to deal with grownup colleagues and administrators who were impossible. When I couldn't take it any more I left, to do educational research for two years back in a big city, where I always seem to feel most at home.

But then an opportunity arose which I had always wanted to take advantage of — return to Villanova; help us broaden the curriculum for our business students, the Dean had said. I came back, the juices began to flow again, excellent students, good people, new friends. Challenge — accomplish; stimulate — fulfill. I'm not bored yet; so I guess I'll stay.

James Markham

I well remember starting at Villanova College in the fall of 1946. WW II had been over for just a year, and I believe that there was still a feeling of relief at being alive. It seems that we spent a lot of time standing in line for almost everything, from buying books to getting to use a balance in the chemistry laboratory to getting something to eat. Classes went from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday, and to noon on Saturday. For many classes we tried to get there early — to get a seat. There was more than one class where some of us sat on the window sills or radiators, or else just leaned against the back wall.

Living on campus was not quite so bad as the Ardennes Forest or Guadalcanal, but sleeping in bunk beds on the floor or on the stage of the fieldhouse with 250 other guys was hardly posh. I remember a friend whose bed was on stage under a counter weight for a scenery flat.

Being a commuter meant coming by public transportation for most; however, a few of us had access to a car, while many hitchhiked. Without the hospitality of the resident students I really don't know what many of us commuters would have done to get out of the weather. There were a few peak hours when there just did not seem to be any place to sit down. I remember a few of us one day asking Dr. McClain in biology if we could come in his lab to eat lunch.

There was no Connelly Center or Dougherty Hall. The residents ate in the first-floor wing in Tolentine (then Mendel), which now houses the mail room and the civil engineering office, while the commuters, if they could get in, ate in the "Pie Shop" in the cellar of the same wing. The library was in the east wing of Austin Hall, where the Development Office is now located.

In retrospect a lot of this may seem to have been a hardship. However, we felt lucky to be alive and to be in college.

'Growing To Serve The Community'

It's more than just a slogan.

It's a guiding principle for the Helene Fuld Medical Center. We know that communities, medical centers and the individual careers of Nurses are sustained only by a continual commitment to growth.

How do we make good on our commitment?

By continually providing our staff with the modern facilities they need to provide the utmost in quality health care. By creating new care units, such as our Intermediate Care Nursery for newborns and our Psychiatric Unit. By putting together continuing education programs for our Nurses, like our new program in Newborn Critical Care. And by providing each of our Nurses with the challenge, responsibility and upward career path he or she needs for a satisfying career.

If you'd like to learn more about what our commitment to growth can mean for your nursing career, contact our Nurse Recruiter, Ellen Dimitruk, R.N., (609) 396-6575, Ext. 2279

Vasey Offers 'A Taste of Honey'

By ALICE FISHER

Once again Villanova Theatre is offering the delightful opportunity to see a fine production here at Villanova University. A Taste of Honey, written by Shelagh Delany and directed by Brian Morgan, is a bitingly humorous, whimsical and stirring play dealing with the relevant issues of human liberation and civil rights. It is a play concerned with uncertain people coping with an uncertain reality. The heroine of this award-winning play is Jo, a wistful, idealistic smart-aleck. She shares a drab existence with her mother, Helen, whose primary means for survival are men and whisky. It is nearing Christmas, and Jo, evading loneliness after her mother has abandoned her, has a brief affair with a sailor who leaves her pregnant. Jo seeks the helpful friendship of an art student who competes with Helen for a place in her daughter's life. It is a simple, searching story with meaningful dialogue and beautifully detailed characters.

Theresa Berger is Jo and Diana Cribbs is Helen in Villanova Theatre's production of A Taste of Honey, by Shelagh Delaney.

A Taste of Honey is a play about givers and takers. Jo is the kind of girl who is untidy, steals flower bulbs from the park to plant in her windowbox, loves nursery rhymes and who would fall in love with a man who is "as black as coal". She loves this man because what she sees in him is part of her own dream, and in that dream he is an African prince. But Jo is also the kind of girl who, when she gets pregnant by this man, takes in a gay artist to love her and care for her and to be the "mother" of her baby, a responsibility she wants to do without. She is, simply, a girl turning into a woman. The child in her still needs a mother to spoil her and give her willful attention, but the woman in her is still trying to figure out who she is, discovering that perhaps that giving love is equally as nice as taking it. Helen never has been able to give Jo all the love she needs. She finds it easier to give her love to men rather than her own daughter. But one cannot resent her because she was also trapped in youth by the unwanted responsibility of Jo, and the harsh reality of growing old is beginning to take over. Geoffrey is a giver too and he is perfectly willing to give Jo everything he has. However Joe refuses to give back because she got stung doing that once before.

The actors know their characters well. Theresa Burger gives Jo, who is a confused but spirited character, a touch of tenderness and creative insight needed to keep Jo from being a precocious brat. One of the most touching scenes of the play is when the stage goes dark and Miss Berger's singing voice reaches the audience with a stirring, soulful tone and mood.

Diane Cribs does a good job of letting the audience like Helen. Helen has been through more than most people can take in life, but she rolls with the punches. Miss Cribs gives Helen a paternal wisdom along with her funny, street-wise, man-foolish personality. Donald Beck did a simple, honest, and sensitive portrayal of what would seem to be a very difficult role to play. Geoffrey is fun and amusing as well as patient and kind. Mr. Beck was graceful in playing a character who is clumsy in his surroundings, representing a group of people generally out of step with the rest

Return of King Crimson

"Discipline is never an end in itself, only a means to an end." So reads the back of the latest release by the reformed group, King Crimson, under the direction of guitarist Robert Fripp. The discipline displayed on this album represents the versatile foursome's ability to work within totally unconventional rhythms (17/8 and 9/8 for starters) while retaining the powerful barrage of improvisation which distinguished the other projects released under the King Crimson name. The group itself (Adrian Belew, Robert Fripp, Tony Levin, and Bill Bruford) was originally to be titled Discipline. Those who heard their work continued to remark on their similarity in spirit and driving force to that which King Crimson had always exhibited. Rarely does an album come along where one can find no weak or compromising moments, yet Discipline is a finely polished musical where even the "loose ends" have their purpose.

Guitarist Adrian Belew, who has played most recently with David Bowie and the Talking Heads, overcame his initial timidity in the presence of his idols, Fripp and Bruford, in New York City as related in the song on urban violence, Thela Hun Ginjeet. In this song, Belew was outfitted with an expensive four-track recording machine and sent into a rough section of the city. He encountered violence itself in the form of several toughs and a pair of pookies, all of whom directed their hostility at him. All in all, its appearance on vinyl makes Thela Hun Ginjeet a provocative, powerful experience.

One of the most amazing things about this album is the absence of keyboards and synthesizers which are an almost essential component of any progressive group these days. But do not allow this to lead you to assume that the sounds on this album are conventional; indeed both Fripp and Belew are able to create guitars which sound like a herd of raging elephants, a flock of seagulls, or a gentle rain.

Highlights on the album include Elephant Talk in which Belew shouts apparently meaningless verbiage in the attempt to expose much of human communication as "... all just talk ... arguments, debate bolderdash, balleyhoo, only talk!", and The Sheltering Sky in which the Cyclic Persian rhythms of Fripp's guitar are gracefully complemented by the definitively Eastern sound of Belew's lead and firmly, though not aggressively grounded in the intermittent, yet everpresent, bass and percussion of Levin and Bruford.

A fascinating counterpoint is demonstrated in the extremes of Indiscipline and Discipline. The first tune is reminiscent of Jamie Muir on Larks' Tongues in Aspic Part Two in its raging, chaotic energy with Bruford sounding like two drummers and everyone else just getting "franxious." The final track is much more restrained yet hypnotic in an active way. The direction of the patterns is open-ended, towards new patterns which are given birth to through the disciplined activity which serves as the primordial ground for the creation.

King Crimson's Discipline is a musical transference of the attempts to work out the most essential tensions within the task of personal development. The frustrations of modern man require a solution which cannot be expostulated, only pointed at. I most heartily agree with Belew who explodes, "I wish you could be here to see it!"

The renewed King Crimson: Levin, Bruford, Belew, and Fripp.

Brandywine Hops

By CHRIS RADAN

On September 30, Barrere, Clayton, Gradney and Hayward, formerly of Little Feat, played to a packed Brandywine Club audience. To say the place was packed would be an understatement. I made the grievous mistake of taking a side-trip to meet Uncle Jack, and ended up standing for the duration of the concert. When I arrived, it seemed like just about everyone was in front of me. However, my friend and I used our best lobbying skills to obtain a spot closer to the stage.

The instrumental number Barrere broke out with rang through my head for an indeterminable amount of time. The band was in great form, obviously ready to play. On this number in particular, Sam Clayton demonstrated his usual dexterity with congos, maracas and any other percussion-related instrument he could get his hot little hands on. This first instrumental was received with deafening applause and smiles all around. I realized then that this concert was a little like a young kid sitting in front of innumerable unopened presents on Christmas morning. No one knew exactly which old Feat numbers Barrere would do, but there was a definite air of speculation in the club.

Paul Barrere then introduced himself and the band, and certainly didn't seem to be lacking in enthusiasm. Whatever the case, the band then performed a rousing version of Skinny Back, which was much appreciated by the audience. One present opened, many left to go. The band shared the vocals on that one, and the guitars were plenty hot. Paul Barrere sang lead on the old tunes, and was quite adequate. Well, he was adequate if you could ban the memory of Lowell George from your head, which, try as I might, I could not do for the duration of the concert.

But, not to put a damper on things, the band then performed Old Folks Boogie, complete with very baritone blurbs of "When Your Mind Makes a Promise That Your Body Can't Keep" from Sam Clayton. Barrere did an admirable job singing this tune, and the rest of the band is not to be overlooked either. Kenny Gradney was in rare form, looking very preppish with neatly pressed khakis, button down shirt, and clean shave. Nothing could be farther from the truth, though. Gradney is a top rate bassist, and they don't come any better. He may look like a prep, but fear not, you cannot draw any connections between his sounds and those constantly blurted out through the Connelly Center's p.a. system. Some things are still sacred, eh?

The band then did a couple of unnamed numbers, mostly collaborations between Barrere and the new guitarist. One of these collaborations was a feeble attempt at a love song, which would have been better left out of the performance. This song featured the weak and unstable vocals of the new band member, although it did feature some tight guitarwork be-

NEW MOVIE: 'Confessions' Not Worth Hearing

By DEAN BALSAMINI

True Confessions is mute. This 1940's look at Los Angeles is a movie which should have been much better considering the talents involved.

The film centers around two Irish Catholic brothers, Tom Spellacy, a homicide detective for the Los Angeles Police Department and the Reverend Monsignor Desmond Spellacy. Both brothers have more than just acquainted with the dirty-dealings that go on around town. Robert Duvall is excellent (and in fact steals the screen) as Tom Spellacy, the tough cop with the shady past. Charles Durning is appropriately cast as Jack Amsterdam, the influential mobster who involves himself with both brothers. Finally, Robert DeNiro turns in a quiet yet fine performance as Desmond Spellacy, the priest who has his eye set on the archbishopship of L.A.

So, what's wrong with this movie you say? True Confessions is a movie which contains numerous interrelationships and plots. The problem lies in the fact that there is no direction as to which plot to emphasize. For example Tom Spellacy (Duvall) is trying to solve a homicide which eventually ties in both Jack Amsterdan (Durning) and his brother Desmond (DeNiro). It seems Desmond has involved himself with Amsterdam in order to acquire land and money for the church. Tom was once a bag-man for Amsterdam! Well, you get the message. You need a scorecard to deal with all the questions that are raised as the film moves along.

Directed by Ulu Grossbard and based on the novel by John Gregory Dunne, True Confessions would have been better off dealing with only one issue, and completely resolving it. Instead, Grossbard gives us a jumbled story that leaves loose ends untied. Had he dealt with just the moral issues concerning the Church or the personal struggle between Tom and Desmond Spellacy he would have come up with a powerful story.

In closing, Robert Duvall and Robert DeNiro give True Confessions a match made in heaven — as for the rest of the movie — to hell with it.

Robert DeNiro hears confession in "True Confessions."

of the world. Peter, played by David Warner, comes across perfectly as a nasty drunken, macho slob. Mr. Warner attacks the audience with his boisterous,but sinister drunkeness which contrasts well with Geoffrey's creative sincerity. Haywood McLoyd gives Jimmy, the sailor, a character which leaves an indelible imprint on the audience's memory so that despite his small role one understands why Jimmy has such an impact on Jo's life.

Of course fine acting is the result of fine directing. Brian Morgan lets the play speak for itself. The direction, like the acting, is natural and unobtrusive. Mr. Morganmaintains a harsh reality so that the fact that mental fantasy is the only means of escape in Jo's world is glaringly apparent. The music in the background also adds to the atmosphere of the play. With the soulful, moody tones of a three-piece band, one can identify with the going-no-place attitude that cruddy flats and tenament buildings can evoke.

A Taste of Honey deals with the pertinant issues of interracial and inter-sexual relationships. Yet the play was written 20 years ago when these issues were touched with an eight and a half foot pole. Shelagh Delany was 16 when she wrote this play and perhaps it was her youth that gave her the special insight to write this unusual play. The work is not a statement, but a personal understanding of the frustrations people suffer when they are dealing with other seemingly different people. It is a subtle allegory — a representation of a confused society broken down to its fundemental, humanistic parts.

ween said new member and Paul Barrere. Next up was a convincingly delivered Down on the Farm. This number, and All That You Dream, delivered earlier in the show, are sterling examples of hostic tightness. When one attends Feat concert (Barrere), one notices some of the finest individual playing skills to be heard in the music world. One also notices that these skills blend, gel and draw the listener into a musically-induced stupor, which is difficult to escape from until the music's over. Gradney and Clayton are virtual virtuosos, while Barrere handles a hot guitar and Richie Hayward provides the unfailing rhythm necessary to back a band of this caliber.

There was a certain drawback to this concert, other than the absence of Lowell George. That drawback was the absence of Bill Payne. I was constantly reminded of this by two things. One, the same organist who played for the Dregs collaborated on a couple numbers with Barrere, and the inadequacy was obvious. Two, an obese buffoon behind my right shoulder and very close to my right ear bellowed "Where's Bill Payne? We want Bill Payne," throughout the concert. These circumstances notwithstanding, I thoroughly enjoyed the end of the set.

Amid deafening applause, Barrere came out and performed Whiskey Face as an encore, a fitting encore. About one third of the crowd left after this encore, but they came onstage again, and did a tune titled, I'll Be A Fool For You, one of the only numbers in the set where the new guitarist/vocalist managed to suppress the tinny quality of his voice. Instrumentals were, of course, right up to par. By this time, half the original audience had departed. That was their mistake. Barrere came on again after almost five minutes and performed a tight blues tune, complete with wailing guitars and funeral march beat. With the exception of some minor drawbacks, this was a Feat fans' concert, and regardless of the conspicuous absence of aforementioned band members, if you are a Feat fan, you should have been there.

Fans Become Fanatics

By MIKE HEALEY

The American Heritage Dictionary defines the word "fan" as such; noun informal. An ardent admirer. (short for fanatic). Move further down the page and find "fanatic." Noun: A person possessed by an excessive or irrational zeal." How then, you are asking, does all this hocuspocus relate to sports in general and a sports editorial in particular? Well just hold on and I'll attempt to explain.

Editorial

In the United States, sports, next to religion and politics, hold a prevalent position in the lives of the citizens. It is true that many people do not closely follow popular sports, but a major portion of the populace does. Let's face it, professional athletes are popular. More people in America probably know of Muhammed Ali than of President Reagan. On the local level, Mike Schmidt is assuredly more popular than Mayor Green.

The point is, sports is a major diversion in the humdrum lives of many Americans, and most Americans devour any information on athletes that they can get. Many fans have a certain player who they "ardently admire," and that is fine. There's nothing wrong with having a hero.

But nowadays a new breed of sports fan is forming: the over zealous one. The fan who loses control at professional sporting events and who acts violently is becoming more and more commonplace, and this fan type should be stamped out now, before it becomes contagious.

A recent case of irrational zealousness happened in a baseball play-off game between the New York Yankees and the Milwaukee Brewers. In that tightly contested matchup, the third base umpire called a sliding Dave Winfield out in a very close play. The New York fans were disgusted; Winfield was obviously safe. Simply a bad call, even the television replay showed that.

But one "fan," ever the "ardent admirer" took control of the situation. He jumped from the stands, raced out to third base and proceeded to clobber the more-than-slightly-amazed umpire. Fortunately, Craig Nettles and others jumped in on the fan and subdued him. Police escorted the fan from Yankee Stadium and he was charged with, among other things, possession of a deadly weapon.

What caused this fanatic to act in such a manner? Could it be that he wanted to get into the spotlight for a while? Or perhaps he wasn't getting his money's worth. Then again, he could have been drunk. Maybe still, this fan in particular and sports fans in general are tired of reading about all those professional athletes who "earn" a million dollars a year and more. So, the fan took out his frustrations and hostilities on a guy who was just trying to do his job. Not only did this person ruin the enjoyment of the other 50,000 or so spectators, he jeopardized the life of another person!

Surely this problem is not unique to New York, for it is occurring with alarming regularity throughout the country. (Another case in point is Philadelphia Phillies fans hurling .22 caliber bullets at Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates). Let's just hope that there aren't any more clods like the N.Y. "fan" waiting in the wings to injure somebody.

Sports are a great diversion viewed in that perspective: simply as a diversion, nothing more or nothing less. So let's not forget that, O.K., sports fans?

Icecats Skate to the Top

League Opener on Sunday

By JIM FEMIA

Four years ago, the Villanova ice hockey team finished off their 1977-78 season with a record of 7-17-2. In the three years since, 1978-79 to 1980-81, the Cats have a combined record of 55-16-7. To go along with their impressive record, they have captured a league championship and virtually dominated the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference (MACHC) the last two years. What was the big turn around in the Villanova ice hockey program?

According to Head Coach Skip Probst, there are basically three factors that contributed to this sudden about-face. "In 1976, Dr. David Schorr, assistant dean of engineering, began to show an interest in the program. He became our faculty advisor and took care of all the administrative aspects that are so important to a team. He is a man behind the scenes but without him, we would never have a program. It was he who got this program off the ground," Probst said.

Then in 1977, Probst left his head coaching job at West Chester State to become mentor of the Icecats. In his first year, his team finished a lowly 7-17-2 but showed signs of improvement by upsetting Penn State in the preliminary round of the playoffs before losing to Delaware in the finals. But it was in this year that the foundation was built for the ice hockey program.

"All it took was for someone to show an interest in Villanova hockey and put forth the effort to make it work," stated Probst. "It took just a few phone calls and with a name and reputation like Villanova has, most people agreed to play us," he continued. Although 1977 was not much of a success for the Icecats, it did begin the trend for the upcoming years.

Then in 1978, everything turned to gold for Villanova ice hockey. "There was nothing special done over the summer of '78. I talked to a few of the players over the phone explaining what our program was like and it just happened that we got a great crop of freshmen in that year. We already had a handful of very good and experienced veterans returning so I was very optimistic about our season. We finished at 16-6-1 but were upset by Delaware in the preliminary round of the playoffs," concluded Probst.

Each year, as the players became more experienced, the team improved. The Cats were now beginning to get a better brand of hockey player because they were building a reputation for themselves. 1980 was a banner year for the Cats, who finished 17-4-3 before bowing to Penn State in the MACHC finals, two games to one.

Then in 1981, for the first time in their 27-year history, the Villanova ice hockey team won a league championship. They finished the season at 22-6-3 and dominated the All-Star teams placing six players on the 10 man roster. All six players will be returning this season.

But why? Why would a top-notch player come to Villanova to play hockey? According to Probst, "There are seven or eight players on this year's team who could play Division II hockey up north." Probst explains, "All of our players were more concerned with their education than their hockey future. They are all good players but they also realize they are not National Hockey League material. They wanted to continue their hockey careers, and at the same time, get an excellent education. There are a lot of outstanding hockey players who tried to play at maybe a Division I or II level and could not cut it. Their hockey careers are now over. The players that came to Villanova, their careers are not."

Building a strong reputation is probably the most important aspect in improving a program. "Now that we have a strong reputation, we pull in more and more quality players each year. In 1978, two Massachusettes boys came here from the same high school. Since then, we have had four other players from that same high school who were going to come to Villanova to play hockey. We managed to get two of them. Word gets around that we play a good brand of hockey and with the type of education Villanova has to offer, it makes the student-athlete consider coming here," he said.

Ice Hockey Coach Skip Probst

Will Villanova hockey ever jump from the club level to the varsity level? There are a lot of things to be considered here. Primarily, the major drawback is the financial aspect. Hockey is an expensive sport. Ice time costs may range from $110 to $150 per hour. Multiply this cost by four hours of practice a week, 25 weeks per season, and the cost becomes quite phenomenal. Equipment would then have to be supplied, team insurance costs and travel expense would all be included if the program moved to the varsity level.

Probst comments, "I would love to see the program move up but I do not see it in the near future. To meet the NCAA requirements, a varsity team must compete in approximately 12 games with other varsity teams throughout the year. There are only a few varsity programs in this area which would mean we would have to travel to the New England area to meet the requirement. I feel the cost would be too much."

Probst concluded, "There is one thing that I am the most proud of and that is that no player, playing in his senior year has ever not graduated. A lot of players are engineering majors but not one has ever failed to graduate. That is something that stands out in my mind."

Villanova hockey has come a long way. From the days six years ago when the Icecats knocked heads with the Philadelphia Fire Department, to nowadays, when the Cats are the defending MACHC champions. It has been a long road. Twenty-seven years to be exact. But the program continues to improve and someday, maybe you will see the Cats battling with some of the best from "up north."

The Icecats begin their defense of the Hannigan Cup on Sunday when they travel to West Chester. The Cats home opener is next Saturday, Oct. 31, when they lock up with long time arch rival Penn State. Villanova's home rink is the Skatium, located on Darby Road in Havertown, Pa. Game time is noon.

The Week In Sports

Women Take Runner-Up Honors

The women's cross country team placed a predictable second last Saturday in the Big Five Championships at the Belmont Plateau in Philadelphia. The University of Pennsylvania captured the title with 23 points while the Wildcats totaled 32 points.

Villanova was led by freshman Mary Ellen McGowen, fourth overall, who continued her exceptional running with a time of 17:16.0 for the hilly 2.9 mile course. Other strong performances were turned in by seniors Amelia Cain (17:47), Carol Gilsinger (17:27) and junior Ben Reilly (17:40).

The Cats entered the championship meet with hopes of upsetting the highly touted Quaker squad; however, their inability to place in the first three positions prevented them from successfully defending their title.

Junior Bev Reilly commented on why the Cats may have been edged by University of Pennsylvania: "I think we may have neglected the importance of this meet, simply looking upon it as a training meet for the upcoming Eastern Championships." A strong performance by Villanova in the Easterns may assure them a ticket to the National Championships in Idaho on Nov. 21.

Hopefully with the return of injured five fibes and the continued strong running of McGowen, the Wildcats may prove to be a formidable obstacle in the upcoming Eastern Championships to be held at Holy Cross on November 7.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

After starting slowly and getting off to just a 5-5 record midway through the fall season, Villanova's women's tennis team moved into the fast lane this week, posting four wins and upping their record to 9-5. The Wildcats, led by juniors Carol Harrison and Dawn Fisher and sophomore Trish Stairiker, recorded 9-0 victories over Kutztown and Concordia, a 7-2 win over Glassboro, and a forfeit from Scranton. With these victories the Cats assured themselves of another winning season.

Coach Langran said that the key to this season's success has been, "The fine play by all performers." Dr. Langren said he is very pleased with the team, and at the beginning of the season, would have been satisfied with a 500 record. He further noted that, "Another reason for the team's success was that the girls were able to pull together and win the close matches which could have gone either way."

MEN'S SOCCER

Last Saturday the Villanova Wildcats defeated the Hoyas of Georgetown University, 1-0 in a game marred by the threat of protest.

The protest was to be filed by Villanova Coach Howard Graff because of the dangerous condition of the field. Sophomore half-back John Valickous commented, "The field was a mess, filled with rocks and holes. Someone could have sustained a serious injury." However, the 'Cats disdained the protest and fortunately came through unscathed.

After a scoreless first half, fullback Michael Layfield, scored the game's only goal with a kick from 10 yards out, midway through the second half of play. Goalie, Bill Schamp, along with the rest of the defense, made sure the one goal held up as the Wildcats upped their record to 6-4.

RUGBY

The Villanova rugby team continued its winning ways by defeating the University of Delaware 10-4 on Oct. 10, and the Garey Hall School of Law, 21-8 last Saturday.

Revenge was sweet, as the Ruggers defeated Delaware for the first time in three years. Fly-half Mike Terlizzi opened the scoring with a rare drop kick for three points and Mike Engel hit a penalty kick as the team played its best half of the year. In the second half, co-captain Dave Lavery scored a try to nail down the victory. The entire scrum played well with John Latori and Pat Lyons having outstanding games.

On Saturday, the Garey Law School fell victim to a psyched up Nova squad. The Ruggers exploded for 21 points boosting their record to 3-1-1.

St. Joe's Dethrones Big Five Champs

By JOE BAGLEY

An ailing and injured Villanova cross country team finished second at the Big Five Championship meet, surrendering their long-held crown to St. Joseph's. The race, held on a bright, crisp day last Saturday at the Belmont Plateau, was the first confrontation this season between the fleet feet of Villanova and the Hawk's of St. Joe's. Asked of the contenders before the race, Nova coach Jack Pyrah ventured, "We expect to have a real battle on our hands."

The race cracked to a start and the runners raced as a swarm towards the first uphill. The Cats appeared to be in good shape early on, placing all of the first four runners across the mile mark at 4:44. St. Joe's, though, turned the tide after the first mile and moved right through the V.U. unit, putting a tremendous eight-man pack near the lead. The meet was clinched with the Hawks snapping up third, fourth, fifth, sixth and ninth places, finishing with the lowest score of the day, 27, to Villanova's 42.

The loss of the championship title unfortunately overshadowed an extraordinary effort by Wildcat Ross Donoghue, the winner of the race. In one week alone, Donoghue has won the Lehigh Invitational, the Great Philadelphia Road Race and, now, the Big Five Championship meet, cruising over the course, untouched by any Hawk runner. "I took over about the two-mile mark and worked the flats from there on in," the St. John's transfer said. "It's such a disappointment, losing the title, but St. Joe's ran a good team race and that is how you win in these bigger races," he said. Asked what V.U.'s downfall might have been, Donaghue agreed, as the rest of the squad did, that it was illnesses; "John Hunter (12th) has had bronchitis and tonsilitis and Keven Dillon (30th) had the flu. Marcus O'Sullivan, also, has been out with a bad knee all year. It's been a bad few weeks and an especially bad stroke of luck that they all got sick when they did."

Indeed, with his super crew of runners falling like flies, Coach Charlie Jenkins has one goal particularly in mind. "We have to keep these kids healthy. And it's not easy. If you go out and run five miles and come back, you have to be careful, especially in this kind of weather. It's not like summer. A week-long cold now can affect your running for at least three weeks," he said.

The IC4A Championships are scheduled for November 2. St. Joe's will be there with their newly polished status, and so will a reinvigorated Villanova corps.

CAT NOTES: Villanova surrendered their Big Five title at Belmont Plateau Saturday, losing for the first time since 1975. Ross Donoghue ran the course in 25:12.0 posting the fifth fastest time ever by a Villanovan at Belmont, just ahead of Marty Liquori. O'Keeffe placed second in 25:36.3 which gave him the eleventh fastest Villanova time on the five mile course. Dave Merrick of Pennsylvania holds the overall record of 24:44.4.

Brian O'Keeffe placed second Saturday as Villanova lost their Big Five crown to St. Joe's. Jeff Pann Photo

Spikers Overpower Hawks

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The Villanova women's volleyball team continues to overpower their opponents and the latest victim was rival St. Joseph's. The Wildcats scored a relatively easy victory with the scores of 15-3, 15-9, and 15-6. After this win and last week's 3-0 sweep of LaSalle, the team's record now stands at an impressive 19-5.

Throughout the season, Villanova has been completely dominating their weaker opponents. Coach Bob Covell states, "We really haven't had any tough competition so far. The best team we've played was Syracuse in the Newark Tournament."

Coach Covell feels that one of the team's strongest points in the last few games has been their "serve-receive passing." However, he adds, "One of the main reasons that we're playing so well is that everyone is contributing in the ways they are expected to."

The season is winding down and regionals are not too far away. The women will finish their season with trips to Ursinus, Kutztown, and the LaSalle tournament. According to Covell, the Wildcats will need a strong showing in this tournament in order to receive a bid to regionals. He sees his squad as one of the top teams along with State University of New York, Lafayette, and Catholic University. "To be considered for a bid we'll have to place in the top three or four," explains Covell.

The fact that the Villanova women's volleyball team has never made regionals should be an incentive to the Wildcats. Covell says he is "hopeful" but in order to achieve this goal, he comments, "The team will have to peak. We'll be depending on our seniors to lead us and on our freshmen to play well under pressure." The individuals he is referring to are seniors Lisa Ortlip and Captain Sarah Holyoke and freshmen Christine Gac, Doreen Casey, Cheryl Conrad, and Maura Kelly. The remainder of the squad is sophomores and they will also play an important role if Villanova is to make it's first trip to regionals.

Student Bill of Rights Proposed

By BILL CLARK

The first student Bill of Rights was proposed at Villanova in 1968. Today, 13 years later, students are still fighting for a Bill of Rights, with the possibility of its passage being as bleak as it was in 1968.

The Bill of Rights now sits in a sub-committee of the Student Life Committee of the University Senate. The sub-committee, which consists of Dean of Students, Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., Student Body President Bob Rosengarth, and Dr. Kuhn of the philosophy department, was formed last November to examine a proposal authored by Rosengarth.

Rosengarth conceded that the Bill of Rights, as it now stands, has little chance of passage by the Senate. "The Administration will want to change it," he said, "and the faculty will want to change areas affecting them."

Martin said that any Bill of Rights could not go against the teachings of Villanova. "The mission statement would have to be in the context of anything we develop," he said. The mission statement defines Villanova as an Augustinian Catholic University dedicated to the development of "total person."

Martin claims that several aspects of the proposed Bill of Rights would indeed conflict with the mission statement. For instance, he cites an article stating, "Students have the right to form whatever organizations which they feel are necessary to explore and promote their common interests."

Rosengarth agrees that this section, as well as other sections of the proposed Bill of Rights, will run into difficulty.

Section 1, Article 11, under Academic Affairs of the Bill, states, "Since the composition of the faculty is the prime concern to the student, the student shall have the right to participate in the evaluation procedure of the faculty members at all levels."

Rosengarth defended this right, as well as another stating that students should have the right to choose whichever course they desire. "I don't think any student should have to take a teacher or a course he doesn't want. After all, he is paying for the education, and if demands are low for a teacher or course, the teacher or course should be discontinued." said Rosengarth.

In addition, the Bill of Rights calls for a room search procedure similar to that of state and federal law. The Bill states that, "Resident Assistants shall be permitted to enter a student's dormitory room as long as the Resident Assistant has probable cause to believe that specific regulation of the University is being violated; however, the Resident Assistant may not search the room."

Even though conflicts exist about specific sections of the Bill of Rights, student life administrators are in agreement on its general concept.

"I certainly feel that students have rights that need to be acknowledged," said Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life. "There is merit in listing these rights in one document," he said.

Martin agreed, stating, "It is important that the student understand he has rights, and there are offices which will advocate these rights."

Dr. Joseph Betz, associate professor of Philosophy and a member of two separate committees to formulate a student Bill of Rights in the mid-1970's, also agreed that a student Bill of Rights is necessary. "Whenever someone has authority over someone else, there is the possible abuse of that authority, unless there are guidelines on it," said Betz.

Betz recalled how the Senate had passed a Bill of Rights in 1975, only to have it die because of inaction by Father President Driscoll and the Board of Trustees.

The first committee on which Betz served was formed in 1973. That committee used a document supported by approximately 28 organizations, including the American Association of University Professors and the National Student Association.

"The members of that committee went through that document right by right. People on the committee weren't in favor of things which would have made their jobs more difficult," said Betz.

Betz said that the committee had finally reached a consensus, but the Bill of Rights died in the Senate. "It died because of the enormity of the job," said Betz.

Sections of the Proposed Student Bill of Rights

Sect. 1, Art. 12

"(Since the composition of the faculty is a prime concern to the student), the student shall have the right to participate in the evaluation procedure of faculty members at all levels."

Sect. 3, Art. 6

"Student organizations shall have the right to invite and hear any person or persons of their choosing. It shall be made clear to the public that sponsorship of guest speakers does not necessarily imply approval or endorsement of the views expressed, either by the sponsoring group or the institution; and the University shall never use control of campus facilities as a device of censorship."

Sect. 5, Art. 1

"No official or instrumentality of the University shall operate or conduct themselves in such a manner as to deny those rights, political liberties, and civil liberties which the student is guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States and the Charter of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

Greek Housing Considered

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

The Inter-Fraternal Council Housing Commission (IFC) at Villanova University was formed this October to investigate sorority and fraternity housing possibilities.

In an inter-office communication from Gary Bonas, assistant dean of student activities, to Susan Tronolone, chairperson of the commission, the "purpose of this commission is to research and study all possibilities of Greek housing, both on and off campus. And to formulate priorotized strategies, both long and short ranged, which can be implemented in order to facilitate such housing."

The major plan for the 1982-83 academic year is the utilization of present on-campus dormitory and housing facilities. Entire wings in both the male and female dorms will be dedicated soley to individual sorority and fraternity members; meaning that members of one sorority could reside on the same wing with members of a different sorority.

The commission plans to survey all Greek organizations to tabulate the total number of members who desire to reside on-campus. Once this number is determined, the committee will finalize its plans.

"With this proposal we hope to develop a feeling of community brotherhood and sisterhood," stated Tronolone. Her only apprehension about this plan was that "members would lose their senses of individuality and this would possibly hamper personal developments."

In speaking of long range plans, Tronolone explained, "We can't even look at the possibility of off-campus housing for at least five years." The reasons for this time delay are: the University wants to observe the results of the on-campus living, Radnor Township zoning laws prohibits three or more unrelated persons living together, and funding is not readily available for the local Greek chapters whereas national chapters can quickly receive funding through alumni support.

Tronolone has proposed the utilization of the University-owned Morris Estate consisting of several houses located on the west end of the Villanova campus. Some of the houses are presently occupied by seminarian students while others remain empty.

Tronolone explained the lottery system will be changed when the on-campus Greek housing is enacted. "Each organization will have to decide for themselves which members will live on-campus." Through this system any off-campus resident will be permitted to move back on-campus, with permission from his organization.

Although Tronolone and Bonas highly support this project and feel the need to increase the enthusiasm in resident life," Tronolone believes that this proposal will place even a greater strain on the housing that would be available to non-Greek residents.

A complete housing proposal will be presented to the Resident's Life staff and the Board of Trustees by January 1982.

Charges Against Student Dropped

By SHARON WINTERS

The charge of receiving stolen goods against Stewart Granger, Villanova basketball player, was dropped at a hearing in District Court 1-9 on Oct. 22.

The case was dismissed by Judge Malone, who presided at the hearing in Broomall. "There was insufficient evidence for me to refer the case to the district attorney," he said.

"As we expected, the charges were dropped and he (Granger) was completely exonerated," said Marty Marbach, assistant basketball coach. The charges being dropped indicates his complete innocence, Marbach added.

At the time of the arrest, the Pontiac that was in Granger's possession was towed to the Radnor Police Station. When the charges were dropped, Granger was informed that he could have the car, according to Chief of Police Maurice L. Hennessey. However, he added, a $33 towing bill had to be paid before the car could be removed from the lot.

Student Hurt in Incident

By BILL CLARK

(The name of the student in the story is fictitious.)

Steve came back from a party a week ago Saturday. The dormitory was quiet. It was about 1:30 a.m.

Steve got into bed, only to be awakened a half hour later by some students who were drunk. These students were acting wildly. Two doors were damaged. Glass window panes were broken.

The noise died down finally. It was now about 3:00 a.m. Steve then got up to go to the bathroom. He left his room and was jumped. He was then covered with paint; oil-base paint.

"The student involved was intoxicated," said Susan Tronolone, coordinator for resident life for the west campus. He was painting his bureau in the middle of the night.

After a struggle between the two students, they went into the shower, hoping to wash the paint off themselves.

"He started calling me every name in the book," Steve recalls. "He started making threats. I only hope that he was drunk, because if he wasn't, he is definitely a sick person."

The next thing Steve realized, the other student jumped in the shower stall with him, trying to wrestle. Steve was bitten twice in the fight that ensued, once on his chest. By this time, Tronolone had called the security van to take him to Bryn Mawr Hospital.

She had also called the infirmary, trying to find out how to take the paint off Steve. She found out that oil-base paint can suffocate a person. If enough of your body is covered, it can kill you.

"Eighty percent of his body was covered with paint," recalls Tronolone. "His hair, face, and entire body was covered."

Steve was only wearing gym shorts when he left his room.

On direction from the infirmary, they mixed a solution of Cascade and water, but the paint would not come off. Several students from the dor-

An unusual collection of unique photographs will be shown Nov. 11-24, in the Connelly Center Art Gallery from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

The exhibit, which comes to the United Nations from the Centre Pompidou, Beaubourg in Paris, and a previous showing in the Council of Europe, deals with the 30-year history of Fourth World children and their families. They exist in all countries and are those who have been left out of the progress of the societies of which they form a part. The exhibit has considerable dramatic and emotional impact, and recalls the work of the famous photographers of the "thirties" who dramatized the plight of black share-croppers in the South and of poor white families in Appalachia.

The main goal of the photo exhibit is to open people's eyes to what many ignore or forget — that a part of society remains excluded, rejected, and often ignored because of their poverty.

A full-time worker with the International Fourth World Movement will be present daily at the exhibit to answer questions.

The official opening will take place on Sun., Nov. 15 at 2 p.m. with a reception at the Art Gallery of the Connelly Center.

There will be slide presentations and discussions on Tues., Nov. 17 at 8:30 a.m., 11:30 a.m., 3 p.m. All are welcome.

Geographical Society

On Wed., Nov. 11 at 3:30 p.m., the Villanova Geographical Society will present the third talk of their fall lecture series. The lecture will feature Dr. John Edwards of Villanova's chemistry department who will speak on the topic of "Orienteering." Dr. Edwards' talk will be in Tolentine 309. Refreshments will be provided by the Geographical Society.

Twirling

Are you interested in twirling a flag at Villanova Basketball Games? If so, there will be a meeting at 6:30 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 9 at Alumni Gym.

Mr. Villanova

Come and see who's the cutest guy on campus! Cheer for your favorite contestant in the RSA's Mr. Villanova Contest. Judging will take place on Wed., Nov. 11, at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Center. Watch as they display their talents and model in formal wear and bathing suits. See you there! Admission is 50c.

Run for Hunger

Run a few miles or sponsor a runner! The run will be held on Mon., Nov. 16, at 3 p.m. in front of Falvey Library. For more information and sponsor sheets, stop in Campus Ministry, basement of St. Rita's Hall.

Florida Res.

There will be a meeting on Tues., Nov. 10 at 7 p.m. in the Radnor Room of the Connelly Center to discuss the trip home for Thanksgiving and to compile an address list. If you need a ride or rider, please come. Also, if you need any flight info., we might be able to help: But remember, carpooling is a lot cheaper than flying! The F.R.O. is unofficially affiliated with the South Florida Alumni Club. They are most anxious to help us in any way they can including JOBS . . . Come to the meeting to find out more. If you can't make it, please call Lori at 688-6707 so we can have your name in the address list.

DKE

The second annual D.K.E. slave auction to benefit Cerebral Palsy will be held on Wed., Nov. 18, in the Day Hop cafeteria. Brothers will be auctioned off to the highest bidder, and there will be a 50c admission charge at the door. So bring your friends and buy a D.K.E. for a day!

Overcome Shyness

A six session group entitled "How to feel more comfortable with others" will begin next week at the Counseling Center, 106 Corr Hall. Come in or call in order to sign up.

Meditation

Practice the TM program and interested in learning more about it, or starting a club on campus? Such a group would involve an instructor giving an advanced lecture, checking meditation and other recreational activities. Those interested call the Philadelphia TM Center at 567-3313 and ask for Bill Fetzer or contact Ann Marie at 527-6909.

Omicron Delta Epsilon

Next Tues., Nov. 10, will be the last day applications will be accepted for Fall inductions into O.D.E. Please hand in your applications to Dr. Thanawala in Room 3. Bartley Hall.

Alpha Phi Omega

Alpha Phi Omega Service Fraternity at Villanova University is sponsoring the Red Cross Blood Drive on Wed., Thurs., and Fri., Nov. 11, 12 and 13. The donations will be taken in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Times are: Wed. and Fri. from 10:30-3:30 and Thurs. from 10-3. Registration will take place in the Connelly Center on Nov. 5, 6, 9, 10 and 11.

Belle-Air

The Belle-Air staff is again scheduling yearbook pictures of your club or organization. We ask that you submit the time or times when you are available for pictures. The yearbook staff will then contact you about specific dates and locations for pictures.

Please put the information in the Belle-Air mail box in 108 Dougherty Hall before Nov. 16. This date is important if you want your picture in the yearbook.

If a yearbook picture has already been taken, or if your organization has already made an appointment, remember to provide a copy and a list of officers and/or members.

Film Series

MON ONCLE D'AMERIQUE is the next in the fall series of Cultural Films. Directed by Alain Resnais it is the witty and brilliant film that won the Special Prize of the Jury at the Cannes Film Festival. MON ONCLE D'AMERIQUE is a complex totally captivating, contemporary comedy about two men and a woman, each from different generations and regions of France. In spite of their differences all share one special dream: the proverbial French uncle who, fortune made, will return to solve all their problems.

Following the film there will be a discussion directed by Judith Switzer, professor of film and media at Bucks County College, on Documenting the Social Condition. The discussion will be following the Sunday evening film only. It will begin at 7:15 p.m. Monday evening the film will be shown again in the Cinema beginning at 7:30 p.m. Admission for both evenings is $1.50 for students and Villanova Associates and $3.00 for the general public.

Following the line of films in the Free Hitchcock Mini-Series, the film FAMILY PLOT will be shown on Tuesday afternoon at 3:00 p.m. and again on Wednesday evening at 7:30 p.m.

Petition Drive

Student Government will sponsor a petition drive to reinstate football at Villanova University. The drive will begin on Monday the 9th of November through the 10th and 11th. The drive will take place in both the Connelly Center and Dougherty Hall between 10:30 to 3:30. Get psyched!!! Your support is essential. Thank You.

Cars Collide at Lancaster, Ithan

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

A three-car collision involving several Villanova students took place at Lancaster Avenue and S. Ithan Avenue, Villanova, the night of Oct. 23. There were no serious injuries.

According to the Radnor Township police report on the incident, Villanova student Tom Piraino of Broomall said that the window of his 1976 Mercury four door was dirty, and he thought he had a green light as he was turning onto the intersection from Ithan Avenue, after leaving the parking lot across from the fieldhouse.

The driver of the second car, Matthew John Lynch, of Havertown, who was driving a 1975 Chevrolet, told police that he was going east in the second lane of the avenue, having a green light, when the car driven by Piraino went through the red light. Lynch said he hit Piraino's car, which spun around into the first lane, and was then hit by the third car involved in the accident, driven by Luke Imperatore of Franklin Lakes, N.J.

Imperatore was driving a '78 Oldsmobile east in the first lane of the avenue, having a green light, he told police. Imperatore said he saw Piraino's car go through the red light, get hit by Lynch's car in the second lane, and then spin back into the path of Imperatore's car in the first lane, where they collided.

The police report said that the roads were wet, but that there were no adverse conditions that night.

"I was leaving the Fieldhouse from the lot across from it," said Piraino, further explaining what happened. "I made a right hand turn on Ithan Avenue and I stopped at the traffic light. The car in front was going to make a left-hand turn. I glanced at the light — only seeing the green from Lancaster because the shield was missing."

"At that time, the red light was obstructed from my view by the front roof support of my car, so I looked to the left, saw no cars coming and slowly proceeded into the intersection. I heard my passenger (also a Villanova student) scream, turned to my left and saw two cars heading directly for mine. An observer told me those cars were doing 55 miles per hour. That's all I remember." The speed limit on Lancaster Avenue is 35 m.p.h. and 25 m.p.h. on Ithan Avenue.

Piraino continued, "One car struck me broadside, swung my car around and then the other one hit me."

"I was very sure the light was green when I turned. If there had been a cover on the light, I would have turned my head and seen if had been red."

Prison Confrontation Studied

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

The Graterford State Correctional Institution in Montgomery County was recently the site of an unsuccessful escape attempt. This event was followed by a hostage takeover thought to be perpetrated by individuals involved in the thwarted jailbreak.

Dr. McKenna Peter DiPasca Photo

Joseph "Jo-Jo" "Mohammed" Bowen, age 35, is thought to be the inmate who masterminded the bungled escape and subsequent takeover. He had been convicted for three murders and other crimes.

Dr. James J. McKenna, Jr. is a professor of sociology at Villanova. He is also the director of the University's Criminal Justice Program. For more than 15 years he has served as an unpaid consultant to Graterford.

McKenna had prophesied that "overcrowded" conditions at Graterford would eventually lead to a "strain on internal security" there. He pointed out that when built in 1929, the prison could accommodate about 2,000 inmates. It now holds 2,045, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer. McKenna also observed that there are fewer workable cells than there have previously been. He noted, too, that the American Correctional Association has determined that a prisoner needs 60 to 80 square feet of living space while confined. An inmate is allotted considerably less room than this at Graterford.

Seizing the hostages "was not a protest," continued McKenna. After this act, the captors "didn't know what to negotiate . . . they don't want extra-legal punitiveness." After the ordeal, a man serving three life imprisonment sentences may face charges of "prison breach" or "kidnapping" and be sent elsewhere.

Tension, conflict, and stress will increase under crowded conditions. It becomes difficult, explained McKenna, to "maintain security, safety, and a hospitable atmosphere, that is, one where inmates are fed and clothed properly."

There is "a sense of hopelessness," McKenna concluded, among the perpetrators of an incident such as this. In this case, fortunately, the siege ended with no lives lost.

Middle States Evaluates VU

By DOUGLAS EARL

The American Association of University Professors, (AAUP) met Oct. 29 to discuss the Middle States Association's (MSA) evaluation of Villanova that occurred last year.

Attending the meeting were Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant to the vice president for academic affairs, Fr. John P. O'Malley, dean of the college of Arts and Sciences, and Dr. Miriam G. Vosburgh, associate professor of sociology.

The Middle States Association evaluated Villanova in a variety of areas. The major segments included in the study were undergraduate programs for the college of Arts and Sciences (A&S), the faculty, student life, University College, and university relations.

Aiding the Middle States Association's evaluation was a comprehensive internal analysis that was done in 1977 by the Commission on University Structure and Programs, (CUSP) which was chaired by Dr. Cherry.

Cherry was asked how Villanova has reacted to the MSA evaluation. He responded by saying, "I'd say in general, either because things were already in progress (the CUSP) study) or because of impetus given to that process by the Middle States evaluation, a number of very positive changes have taken place in the last two years."

Cherry addressed what he felt to be specific aspects of the report. He said that "two study groups of Villanova have acted in concert with the consulting team from the University of Pennsylvania" to act on the MSA's recommendation of enrollment and residential planning.

The Pe w Foundation was credited by Cherry as helping in areas such as energy conservation and preventive maintenance.

Commenting on the loss of the football program Cherry said, "They (MSA) asked us to look at football and the financial implications of football. Needless to say that was done. The President and the Board of Trustees made a brave and I think correct decision."

Cherry felt that the MSA's criticism of low requirements for tenure and high requirements for promotions of faculty members were unwarranted.

He said Villanova has a very clear set of uniformed procedures regarding faculty tenure and promotions although each department does have some discretion concerning this.

Abortion Film Examines Issue

By DIANA MARIE MURRAY

"What ever Happened to the Human Race," a film sponsored by the Philadelphia Alumni Club, was shown last Tuesday night at the Connelly Center Cinema. The film dealt with abortion, not as a religious issue, but as a moral one.

C. Everett Koop, M.D., former chief of surgery at Philadelphia Children's Hospital and now a nominee for surgeon general, narrated the film in part.

According to the film, the abortion issue has become humanistic; no longer are only animals kept in cages to be experimented with, but also the human baby, treated like a machine, is an outgrowth of animal experimentation.

The film stressed that ethics no longer come from the Bible, but from sociological law. The abortion issue was in the hands of the courts, not in the hands of the legislators, who represent the majority of people according to the film.

The film-makers believed life begins at conception. Only 18 days after conception, a heartbeat develops and blood cells are produced. At four months, the fetus is eight to 10 inches long and weighs (that time onward, physically complete, just grows.

There are four ways to abort a baby, explained the film. There is dilatation and curettage, or D & C, where the cervix is stretched open and the walls of the uterus are scraped; the baby is chopped to pieces, it said. Suction abortion is a method of drawing out the baby and its umbilical cord into a jar. Both these procedures occur between the sixth and eighth weeks of pregnancy. "Salting out" may occur up to 16 weeks of development. A long needle, filled with a concentrated salt solution, is injected into the amniotic sac. The baby will swallow this solution, which poison it, and dies within an hour. A day later, the pregnant woman delivers a dead baby. A hysterectomy may be performed at any time. This procedure is like a Caesarean section, except the baby is delivered, only to be smothered to death, according to the film.

Since the Supreme Court legalized abortion in 1973, six million babies have been aborted, according to the film. The film-makers ask: What is to stop us from killing unwanted adults, those who are unhealthy and bothersome, now that we abort unwanted babies so easily?

Alumni Receive Awards

Villanova University's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences awarded five graduates the coveted alumni medallion for their outstanding contributions to their professions during Homecoming festivities Friday, October 23.

The recipients of the award were Dr. Michael J. Daly, of Villanova, PA; Francis J. Thornton, of Murrysville, PA; Rev. Francis J. Cerullo, O.S.A., of Lawrence, MA; Major General George B. Crist, USMC, of Falls Church, VA; and Robert E. Mulcahy, III, of Mendham, NJ.

Daly, a 1943 Villanova graduate, is the chairman of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at the Temple University School of Medicine where he received his Doctorate of Medicine degree in 1947 and his Master of Science degree in 1954.

Thornton, who received his bachelor's degree from Villanova in 1962 and his Master of Arts degree in Theatre in 1964, is director of the theatre/media department at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh.

Cerullo, a 1969 Villanova graduate, is currently chairman of the Council for the Aging in Lawrence, MA. He is a former associate pastor of St. Rita's Church in Philadelphia where he established numerous community programs and services for the young and elderly residents of South Philadelphia.

Crist, of Villanova's class of 1952, is deputy chief of staff for Marine reserve affairs.

Mulcahy, a member of Villanova's class of 1958, is commissioner and chief executive officer of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, known popularly as the Meadowlands Sports Complex.

CDC Sponsors Nursing Career Day

By LISA M. FEDERICO

Career planning was the purpose of the Ninth Annual Nursing Career Day, sponsored by the Career Development Center on Friday, October 30th.

Rita Wittmer, of the Career Development Center

The morning program started in the Connelly Center Cinema at 9:15 with a series of lectures and discussions by guest speakers. Six speakers were invited from different fields of the nursing profession. These included two professors of nursing, a school nurse, a nurse midwife, and representatives of cardiac rehabilitation nursing and surgical intensive care nursing. Each elaborated upon the specialized responsibilities and requirements of their professions, and discussed career opportunities and development in their fields.

From 1:00 to 4:00 an employer forum was held in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. More than 100 health care organizations sent representatives to meet the nursing students and discuss employment opportunities. Although designed for senior students to meet a variety of potential employers, the forum also attracted underclassmen interested in planning ahead for careers as well as summer jobs.

Discussing the success of the day, Wittmer said, "The hospitals were impressed with the students and the students were impressed with with the options offered."

"The morning speakers were very good — they presented students with options the students had not thought of, such as cardiac rehabilitation, nurse-midwifery, and school nursing," Wittmer said.

Explaining plans for future Nursing Career Days, Wittmer said, "We'd like to incorporate graduate schools as well as health care agencies because more nurses are going to graduate school now."

"Feedback was provided from health-care recruiters and reports were all favorable," concluded Wittmer.

"The hospitals were impressed with the students."

The program was organized by Ann Mercincavage, Student Chairperson of the Nursing Career Day, and Rita Wittmer from the Career Development Center. Both the morning and the afternoon sessions were well attended, as expected by the Center in view of previous attendance of the Nursing Career Day.

Hope Visit Set

By BILL CLARK

Plans for Bob Hope's appearance at the Academy of Music have been finalized by the Committee to Restore Football.

Tickets for the event, which will be held on Dec. 4, will cost $100, $50, and $20 to the general public, but student tickets will cost $12.

Doug Murray, president of the General Alumni Association, said that Hope will be accompanied by a 15-piece orchestra. Al Meltzer will be the master of ceremonies for the evening.

Murray said there will be a cocktail party before the event at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel for all $100 ticket-holders, and a dance afterwards for all $100 and $50 ticket-holders.

Congressman Jack Kemp, originally scheduled to attend Murray said, but was forced to cancel because of the schedule difficulties.

Murray added that 60% of tickets for the Academy of Music had already been sold.

"I am hopeful that the Trustees and their wives will be in attendance," said Murray. "They will all be offered complimentary tickets to come and see the enthusiasm for Villanova football.

He added that plans are being discussed for a similar event in the spring. The Committee is considering the possibility of inviting such celebrities as Luciano Pavarotti, John Denver, or Neil Diamond.

College Costs Force Changes

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Steadily rising tuition costs at most American colleges will not cause a drastic reduction in the number of college students in the 1980's, but may cause some problems economically and sociologically, according to two Villanova University professors.

The current 13 percent inflation rate will force a tuition increase at Villanova next year, according to college administrators, and Dr. Edward J. Mathis, associate professor of economics at the University, predicts steady increases in tuition bills for most American college students in the coming years.

Mathis sees this trend as a potential problem for colleges. "Tuition will go up, but revenue goes down, because fewer students will be attending the schools," said Mathis. "If, in fact, the increase in tuition draws people from full-time study to part-time study, this will cause some effects in unemployment figures, assuming jobs don't grow as rapidly."

Mathis said that the blue-collar job market rather than the white-collar market will be most affected. He explained that there is an over-abundance of white-collar jobs now, but that less qualified blue-collar workers will get "frozen out" of the job market if people with some college experience, who cannot afford to complete their education, turn to blue-collar jobs. "Employers would generally rather have a better educated person if there is one for the job," said Mathis.

Dr. Brian Jones, a sociology professor at Villanova, and an expert in industrial sociology, agreed with Mathis, saying, "Trends for the future indicate that the market for white-collar jobs will expand. But, if there is a significant decline in people going to look for white-collar jobs, the blue-collar market will be affected."

Jones does not see increasing tuition costs at colleges as a serious deterrent to lower or middle class families sending children to college, unless financial aid to these families is significantly reduced by President Reagan's proposed federal budget cuts, which have yet to be approved by Congress. "They may lead to an expanse of state schools and a decline for private institutions," he said.

Jones sees these possible aid cuts as having an effect on society from a sociological standpoint, as well as an economical one. "Colleges may be forced to pick more affluent students, which will tend to perpetuate patterns of inequality. Over the past 20 years, there has been a significant equalization, although it is not complete, of black and white incomes. Since blacks are poorer than whites, on the average, and since the colleges and aid cuts should impact them more than whites, there should be a slowdown in educational equalization opportunities."

"The way the administration talks, middle class people will be the only ones hurt, but blacks in the middle class will still be poorer than whites in that class," said Jones.

Jones and Mathis agree that many small colleges will probably be out of business by the end of the decade. Mathis feels that declining enrollment in high schools will bring lower enrollment in colleges. "If you add to that higher tuition and reduced financial aid, you make a serious problem a drastic one," he said.

"Two-year colleges shouldn't be affected," said Jones, explaining that students in these colleges will be able to afford the lower tuition costs. He said that these students are mainly studying for technical careers and will have little trouble finding jobs in today's technically-oriented society.

"Technically and community-oriented schools are doing rather well," concurred Mathis. He feels many people benefit from the lower costs of two-year schools by attending them before transferring to more expensive, but prestigious, four-year colleges.

Both experts agreed that larger colleges, such as Villanova, and the students who attend these colleges will not be too adversely affected by increasing tuition bills, regardless of possible financial aid reductions.

"Villanova students are rich," said Jones, explaining that he has done many studies on students at the University in determining this. "There is not going to be a significant difference in the income of students — it has been rising over 20 years."

"Villanova students are rich. There is not going to be a significant difference in the income of students — it has been rising over 20 years."

Incident

mitory had gone to the local all-night market and bought terpentine. That couldn't remove the paint either.

They finally got Steve to Bryn Mawr Hospital, and the paint was removed by acetone. Steve has recovered now, but was forced to miss two days of classes.

Tronolone estimates that the damages from that night will amount to at least $1500. "The rest of the hallway was covered with toilet paper, shaving cream, and baby powder. All the hall-marks of pranks," said Tronolone.

Steve lived in the same dormitory last year. He claims that this sort of thing is not new.

"I heard rumors that these things were going on last year," said Tronolone. "My impression was that the whole trend started then, with everyone pulling jokes.

"The R.A. this year viewed the whole situation as harmless," she said. "Nothing was brought to his attention that this was anything more than clean fun. He didn't detect any animosity or peer pressure."

"It is a very serious offense, even though it was not intentional," said Tronolone. "It was definitely far from harmless."

Student Rights

"They just weren't willing to do it."

Then, in 1975, another committee was formed to draft a Bill of Rights. Betz said that the committee was much more successful because they agreed to accept the original Bill of Rights in its totality.

Betz credits the success of the Committee to Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., then vice-president for student life. "Father Deegan said we could do it, as long as we made it clear that anything which would oppose the mission statement of the University would be superseded by the mission statement," said Betz.

After the Bill of Rights was approved by the Senate, it went to Father President Driscoll.

In a letter dated Oct. 13, 1976, Driscoll responded to Senate chairman Dr. Angelo Armenti. In the letter, Driscoll said he could take no action on the Bill of Rights.

"The only way that I can implement the Joint Statement is to indicate to the community my general acceptance and endorsement of the guidelines set forth in the document, and to request that policy statement be prepared as soon as possible covering each of the major areas in student life," said Driscoll.

"In this connection, I note that the Senate is empowered legislate in matters of policy. Hence, the procedural guidelines contained in the document are excluded from my endorsement even though the procedures ultimately adopted by the University will be developed, as is now practice, in consultation with the appropriate student, faculty and administrative groups," continued the latter.

Commenting on the Board's refusal to accept a student Bill of Rights, Betz said, "That's when the problem seems to be. When I heard that Bob Rosengarth was engaging in this again, my guess was that it would fail too.

"I suggested that the best thing to do was to work on the President and the Board. It is not to the student's advantage to run through the Senate again," said Betz.

Neville, however, is much more optimistic about the approval of a Bill of Rights for students. "If the document is well-written and researched, I would hope it would be supported by the President and the Board of Trustees," he said.

"I would lobby strongly to the President to support such a document. It is my role to represent the student position to the University," said Neville.

At Kearfott our engineers progress as fast as their ideas.

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS Thursday, November 19

Stellar and inertial guidance systems. Doppler navigation. Microwave radar landing systems. Crypto-secure, multi-access communication equipment. These integral aerospace/defense realities began as Kearfott ideas. Our rarified engineering environment has been producing ground-breaking applications—and fast-moving careers—for over 30 years.

Once you've selected your area of concentration from among our diverse opportunities, you can progress rapidly through associate assignments with senior engineers to project and program management. Our technology and career potential are second to none in the industry.

If your degree is in EE, ME, Computer Science or Physics, and you'd like to find out more about a career at Kearfott, see your Placement Office for our company profile and to sign up for a one-on-one interview. U.S. citizenship required.

Salvadoran Speaks on Conflict

By Alicia M. SUYDAM

A native from El Salvador spoke about his country and its internal conflict Monday in the Connelly Center.

Dr. Ricardo Brachamontes, director of education in the El Salvador teachers' college and also a teacher at the Catholic university, opened his lecture with the statement, "It is a surprise for me to find here in the United States so many people in solidarity with our cause." Brachamontes referred to the cause of people of El Salvador against the "imperialistic" government and army.

Brachamontes gave a history of the organization called the Committee in Solidarity in El Salvador (CISIES). This committee was formed in 1970 as an attempt to unify various groups of people who would demonstrate, strike and attempt to carry dialogues with the government. One group, the Association of Teachers and Educators of which Brachamontes is involved, is a strong movement of teachers' unions. The movement sets demands for better conditions, health care, insurance and salary increases. Their demands were "either repressed or answered in a demogogic way," according to Brachamontes.

In 1975, The Association of Teachers and Educators joined with a number of [illegible] workers and peasants. Members began supporting peasant land takeovers and workers' strikes. By 1979, 33 members had been assassinated and since 1979, 290 teachers have been killed. "One woman, on her second day of teaching (after joining the coalition) was machine-gunned right in her classroom in front of the students," states Brachamontes.

Brachamontes and his associates tried to change the form of education from the elementary school level up to the university level. They wanted to steer away from the dominant culture of the United States and orient their students to a more liberating form of education; one in which the students could directly understand and be involved in.

Since Brachamontes joined the coalition and began reforms of the educational system, he received threatening phone calls and was subjected to military searches. He finally had to escape from the country one night, hiding in the catholic university where he taught.

"The repression has increased since 1979 because the people have decided not to give up until they obtain a truly authentic triumph," explained Brachamontes. He also explained that the repression is worse in the rural areas because there are less people around and it is not as easy to directly trace any tortures or killings to the government and army. The capital, San Salvador, is surrounded by military police, but because of the presence of international reporters, the violence is very limited here and in other cities.

"The United States government should recognize that it has no right to go into El Salvador and establish a military base. We are not an economic gain and we do not want to see another star added to the United States' flag," said Brachamonte.

Pre-Registration Changed

By MELINDA MUSIAL

This semester, the new student record system (SRS) was installed at Villanova. The spring 1982 pre-registration master schedule is the first to be produced under SRS.

According to David Smith, registrar, "This new system will eventually allow information regarding classes and course selections to be made all at once."

Presently, the new system is in the rough stages of development. Within the next few years the system will become more individualized.

The changes that have occured in registering this year will continue. For example, student numbers will no longer be used. The student's social security number will be used for registration and as a means of identification for University purposes.

The coding scheme for courses has also changed. A numeric code will replace the alpha department code. Smith pointed out that although the alpha code is printed for convenience the numeric code is essential to enter information into the SRS.

A third change involves the pre-registration form itself. Any changes involved in address are to be filled in and returned to the registrar.

Most graduates are headed for a good career. Only a few will influence the world.

While most graduates in the areas of Electronic Engineering, Computer Science, and Mathematics are deciding on a career direction, a select few are finding more than a career.

They are the graduates who will work in a challenging environment where matters affecting our national security are a part of our everyday activity.

They are the graduates who choose a career with the National Security Agency.

From the very outset they will influence the growth and direction of their fields of specialization.

You too, can experience the very same opportunity and challenge in any of these NSA career fields.

Electronic Engineering: There are opportunities in a variety of research and development projects ranging from individual equipments to very complex interactive systems involving large numbers of microprocessors, mini-computers and computer graphics. Professional growth is enhanced through interaction with highly experienced NSA professionals and through contacts in the industrial and academic worlds. Facilities for engineering analysis and design automation are among the best available.

Computer Science: At NSA you'll discover one of the largest computer installations in the world with almost every major vendor of computer equipment represented. NSA careers provide mixtures of such disciplines as systems analysis and design, scientific applications programming, data base management systems, operating systems, computer networking/security, and graphics.

Mathematics: You'll work on diverse agency problems applying a variety of mathematical disciplines. Specific assignments might include solving communications-related problems, performing long-range mathematical research or evaluating new techniques for communications security.

The Rewards at NSA.

NSA offers a salary and benefit program that's truly competitive with private industry. There are assignments for those who wish to travel and abundant good living in the Baltimore-Washington area for those who wish to stay close to home.

Countless cultural, historical, recreational and educational opportunities are just minutes away from NSAs convenient suburban location.

To find out more about NSA career opportunities, schedule an interview through your college placement office. Student Rights Are Still Vague

Everyone knows about rights. People scream for rights in the street. Others put their thoughts on paper. Lawyers plead for their clients rights. Some, quietly give up their rights, because they do not know what they are.

College students, unfortunately, do not know what rights they have, unless the college they attend has a document of some sort to clarify the matter. Villanova is a place where college students have no expressed rights.

Lack of knowledge does not create a whole person who will be able to understand the workings of the society beyond school.

College students are in a state of becoming, adulthood a fresh, new-found role. Studies are one part of the attempt to become a responsible, whole citizen. Another concerns such projects as internships and seminars. These serve to broaden the students' ability to deal with the external world, a world which they will some day run.

These academic pursuits, including even the "real-life" practice of a career, are sterile in themselves. They do not give rise to a whole person. They give rise to an academic whiz kid. Add in a few student activities, and the person becomes a social whiz, still incomplete.

The governing agencies of the University understand that a human being must be much more equipped to handle the after-college world. Their moral and religious guidings are to be understood by the enlightened as a portion of the way to build a person who will formulate ideals, not mere facts.

Student Government, also, understands that students require more than vague descriptions of their wholeness. The body wishes to write an expressed set of rights for students at this University.

Somehow, two enlightened organizations, Student Government and the Board of Trustees, must try to resolve their differences in words. A student Bill of Rights, is after all, not a radical document. Modelled after the United States Constitution's Bill of Rights, the Villanova document will serve to give students the rights they, as United States citizens, are entitled to upon reaching the adult age of 18.

Lack of Space, as Always

The Villanovan "Op-Ed" and "Letters" sections are intended to provide an outlet for Villanova-community members to express their thoughts and opinions.

Unfortunately, while space permits the inclusion of varied ideas, it does not always allow for the publication of all portions of a particular opinion. In brief, the newspaper has a limited amount of space per issue.

Space is one of the problems for any publication. Although someone may create beautiful prose, the newspaper, often, must attempt to select the most meaningful portions; space demands this.

Every writer, be that person a reporter or editorialist,must first create for an ideal of clarity. All writers labor, perhaps for hours, to explain, point-by-point, their story. All such efforts are worthy of praise and publication.

However, not all the sincere, laboriously selected words can be printed. The finite nature of each edition impresses its limits decisively. Some words, sentences and paragraphs will not fit, no matter how cajoled and entreated. This appears unjust to any writer.

The Villanovan operates under the confines of space. By this very nature, it must try to publish as much as possible, on as many issues as possible, within a certain page limit. Sometimes, the space runs out before the ideas do.

Senate Procedure Explained

Dear Editor:

There seems to be some misunderstanding of the procedure adopted by the Senate concerning the introduction of New Business and the length of Senate debate as found in the first page article of the Oct. 23, 1981 issue of the Villanovan: "Senate Tables Vote on Football." The rule adopted by the Senate is:

"New Agenda items may not be introduced in the Senate after 6:30 p.m.; no Senate debate will take place beyond 7:00 p.m. These rules may be overturned by a majority of those present and voting."

On p. 6, the commentary "Senate Ignores Issue" states that a motive for ignoring the football issue was "that it was simply too late to discuss anything else." Senate debate may proceed past 7 p.m. should a majority of those Senators present wish to do so.

Sincerely,
Warren O. Richardson
Chairman
Villanova University Senate

Thanks Extended to V.U.

To Villanova:

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all those students who helped me in my quest to swim the English Channel this September-October. Unfortunately, due to inclement weather and high seas, the chance to get away from the Dover Coast never materialized.

Last April, Ed Geisz's defending Big East champion swim team arranged a 24-hour marathon swim to help defray the cost of the attempt. The response from the student body supporting the marathon was tremendous. I was genuinely touched by the concern of my fellow students to see my dream become reality.

I thank the team, especially Danny, Red, Happy, Dan Morgan, Mike Bruce and Snake who helped in attaining pledges and collecting. Also, Lauri, Nancy, Tina and Patty and the TGE sorority for their part.

I want to express my gratitude particularly to the Villanova students for sponsoring my attempt and hope they will remain with me in prayers and spirit when I try in August 1982. Most of all, I thank Gianna for her inspiration who the swim was little more than a thought and throughout my training period.

Serious Objection Raised

To the Editor:

I would like to take serious objection to one item in your feature "The Best and Worst of Villanova," in the 10/16 issue of the Villanovan. It struck me as outrageously immoral in suggestion and irreligious in tone.

Good Counsel was listed as the worst female dormitory because "Immaculate Conception is the motto there," and St. Rita's was listed as the best "because there is no better place to consummate the desires of youth." This sort of rating is coarsely immoral because it ranks the dormitories on the availability of loose sex.

This section also borders on the sacriligeous and blasphemous in viciously misusing the expression "Immaculate Conception."

I hope that the Villanovan will apologize to the students of Villanova, male as well as female for mischaracterizing certain dorms as houses of free sex, and for a degrading allusion to Mary whom Catholics and other Christians reverence as the Mother of God.

Sincerely,
Dan O'Connor

Alumni Pres. Expresses Concerns

Dear Fellow Alumni and Alumnae:

First, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome the class of '81 into Villanova University's General Alumni Association; and, in the process, I would like to alert each member of the class of '81 to the fact that our Association has forty-two alumni clubs throughout the country. I am sure that there is a club close to the majority of you, and I hope you will take the time to join your local club and become acquainted with the Villanova alumni in your area.

Heartbreak Year

The year '81 has thus far been a year of heartbreak for many Villanovans. In March we were delivered the sad news that Villanova's great Track and Field Coach, Jumbo Elliott, had passed away. In mid-April we received the shocking news that our eighty-seven year old football program was to be discontinued immediately. We could not help but reflect for a moment upon a great day in Villanova athletics, September 27, 1980, the dedication of the Jumbo Elliott Track saw scores of former olympians and Villanova track greats return to the campus to honor their former coach and friend. Simultaneously out on the new astro-turf the Villanova Wildcat football team sporting less scholarships than its opponent, Boston College, came through with a rousing 20-9 victory over the Eagles from Chestnut Hill, MA. It was a day that will, most definitely, be remembered by the capacity crowd — alumni and friends that filled Villanova stadium. The alumni responded nobly to the news that football was to be discontinued by contributing large sums of money to organizations intended to help restore football and by writing letters to the members of the Board of Trustees — sharing with the Board members their feelings concerning the elimination of football. Hundreds of our alumni responded with letters (probably a first in Villanova history) and it is important to report two items:

1. The letters favored football on a twelve to one ratio.
2. Almost fifty percent of the people that wrote letters have been active financial supporters of our University.

Concern Expressed

The past President of the Alumni Association, the Alumni Association's current President, the President of the Wildcat Club, the President of the University's Varsity Club and an overwhelming number of Alumni Club Presidents along with many other alumni leaders were concerned and today remain concerned at the apparent lack of interest in the alumni on the part of the University's Administration.

Fund Source

Putting football completely aside, it appears that we are viewed as a source of funds with no license or privilege to offer input on points of major concern to the University. We do not, as a group, feel that because we are graduates of Villanova — graduates that care about the direction and character of the school — graduates that have strongly recommended Villanova to thousands of young people — perhaps, we should be considered a viable, interested and important part of the Villanova community.

Structure Study

It has been suggested that perhaps our structure as an Alumni Association should be studied with alternative methods of operation reviewed. We simply feel that as a group we should be held in higher regard by our Board of Trustees and University Administrators than is currently the case.

Sincere Thanks

I would like to take this opportunity, on behalf of all our alumni, to extend our sincere thanks to past President and Board of Trustees member, Tom Burke, for his year of dedicated service as President of the General Alumni Association.

Saturday Masses Needed

Changes in Church Rites Discussed

The Roman Catholic Church has modernized many of its rites and regulations over the years. For example, today we have face to face confessions; guitar music; lay people distributing communion and serving as lectors; vernacular instead of Latin and the changing of fasting regulations during Lent. We also have priests saying "Body of Christ" without the added Latin phrasing; priests can spread their arms out full length; the words "Thee" and "Thou" have been eliminated from almost all of the vocabulary of Mass; new liturgies for children and overall renewed liturgy and tradition by the Vatican Council. These changes have adapted the church and common worship to our changing culture along with uniting the Catholic community. Changes in the Eucharistic prayers, the presentation of communion and underlying attitudes presented about the Holy Bible have added more variation and aided the Catholic church in common worship.

Common Worship A Gift

I believe common worship is a gift we have been given by God. The reason why many of us join in common worship is because we need other people (companionship) to pray, participate, and communicate and we need a sense of duty to our Lord. Common worship in the Catholic Church is much deeper than personal needs, feelings, and individual gratification. It is the sum total of a desire from the heart and understanding that worship has been humanized by the examples Christ (who is both human and God) has given us. In order to worship correctly we must come to understand that Christ wanted to share the human circumstance by explaining good morals, attitudes, actions, consciousness, and dying on the cross for our sins. Christ familiarized prayer by praying out loud — not merely by teaching a text — and he used the word "ABBA" which means Father (second person singular) when addressing our Lord. By using the word "ABBA" Christ humanized man's relationship with God.

Sum Of Teaching

The Lord's Prayer is the sum total of Christ's teaching on prayer. This prayer brings us a realization that God is truly our Father. Christ told us "When you pray — pray as I do." This tells us to worship God as our true Father and not to feel alienated from God. The Lord's Prayer and our memory of Christ show an everlasting love for our true Father. In the gospel of Luke (Parable 18) we are told to "pray always." This is the best way to live in a positive manner because if one lives with a desire from the heart then one will feel fulfilled.

Christ was such a positive force that his teachings were carried on after his death by the apostles on whom he had such an effect ("Do this in memory of me"). The Eucharist (communion) translated to the disciples what words could not. The "meal" is a unifying experience where we can share Christ's love through table fellowship.

The present state of worship in Catholicism has been affected by those who were baptised Catholics and choose not to worship as adults. Catholics who feel their church is obligational, that worship must move them, or worship is boring to them are missing out on the examples Christ has given us. Why are people like this? . . . I believe it is because of misunderstanding and ignorance of the fact that worship is a gift and not an extracurricular activity or merely an obligation. Non-practicing Catholics must not believe that Christ, God, and the Holy Spirit are that important in their lives if they do not want to worship Him. Their participation in the Christian community is nill when it comes to worship. Unfortunately, I know many people who are like this. These people are striving for their own personal interests and trying to get personal satisfaction by means other than religion. They are often depressed and have negative attitudes about life. If they lived with a desire from the heart and an understanding of worship perhaps they would feel better about themselves.

Worth And Value

To people who profess the Faith, worship gives worth and value to life. I feel this way as do other people in my own Christian community. We benefit through the life of Christ. Being baptized a Catholic carries certain responsibilities. In order to pass through death into eternal life with understanding we must have no fear of the devil or death if we truly believe in the Father and that Christ's life is accepted as human. If we overcome the fear of death and the devil, then we understand what Christ was all about. Our worship is a service to God as well as a service of God, yet a service done by the people and for the people as well as for God. The personal presence of God that we feel when we gather together in prayer is a gift from God.

Major Suggestion

I have one major suggestion for bettering Christian worship in the Philadelphia Archdiocese. I am calling on Cardinal Krol to allow Saturday night Mass in the Philadelphia diocese. This would be a change that would also allow the Philadelphia Catholic community adapt to the fast changing culture we have in the United States. This change would help the community as the changes already mentioned. I believe that rigid uniformity encourages some people to sacrifice their profession of faith.

Change Asked

Another reason I am asking for this change is because I, personally, am restricted by my job on Sundays. I sometimes work 12 to 14 hour days starting at 6 a.m. The "Caring Community" should take into consideration those who are unable to attend Mass on Sunday. I wonder why most Catholic communities have Saturday night Mass and the Philadelphia diocese does not? Do we really have to be that rigid? Doesn't Cardinal Krol think of people like me? I may be in a minority, but everyone should have equality in participation of worship.

Modern Dilemma

Our culture is changing fast and Sunday is a work day for many Catholics. The old belief that Sunday is a day of rest is fading away. Cardinal Krol must realize that many good Catholics want to participate in their parish without a feeling of being left out of the community and incompleteness because we have missed Sunday Mass. I would like to be a part of the common worship and have a sense of presence of Christ during Mass. If this Philadelphia diocese is a "caring community" then it should understand this dilemma.

Letters to the Editor

Response to ROTC Op-Ed

Dear Editor

After reading Mr. Stephen Oldham's letter in the Oct. 23 issue, I was inspired to interject some of my thoughts into this month-old editorial exchange.

Differences Cited

Mr. Oldham examined some of the similarities between the the Soviet Union and the United States. He neglected, however, to mention some of the differences. For instance, the USSR is the only superpower who has made world domination its national goal.

Obviously, this goal is incompatible with our national existence. Another difference between us is the way in which our armed forces are constructed. The Russian military is geared for the offensive, while ours is set up primarily for the defensive. Why is this?

Why would the Soviets take all the trouble to put together such a force if they never intend to use it the way it is designed?

Soviet Labor Camps

Mr. Oldham refers to thousands of political prisoners in the jails of repressive governments supported by the U.S. But how does that compare to the millions in Soviet labor camps and jails who are there for "political" reasons? Many of the Soviet inmates committed "crimes" that were far less violent than those imprisoned in, for instance, Central America. Many of the political prisoners in Central America are guerilla fighters; people who kill indiscriminantly in the "name of freedom." (It's also interesting that many of these guerilla groups are supported by the USSR, isn't it?) Don't misunderstand me. I do not condone the excesses of some of those regimes, but they are a better alternative than chaotic fighting which will take more lives, and in which the Soviets will win anyway.

Genocide A Fact

I agree with Mr. Oldham's belief that it is wrong to kill mass numbers of people. But consider that the Soviets would not let morality stop them from killing large numbers of innocent Americans. Nor are their "civilians" all innocent people. The Soviets have a mandatory draft and reserve service for citizens between eighteen and nearly middle age. I'm not employing this as a justification to kill millions, but rather to point out the fact that the Russians would not hesitate to attempt genocide on us in a war. (They are actively carrying out a genocide right now, against the H'mong tribes-people of Laos, a country that is officially independent.)

Core Requirements Noted

Mr. Oldham has stated his two objections to the NROTC program on campus. He says we should take special courses. Frankly, I have trouble following his reasoning. He probably just forgot that we have the same core requirements that anyone else has here at Villanova. We take the same religious studies and philosophy courses that everyone else takes. If we should, as he suggests, be required to take a special set of war morality courses, then perhaps the civilians here should be required to take a set of courses in political science and the military. What good does it do there are only two hund students who have had proper posure to both sides of argument in University cla Perhaps we would each see need for the other.

Join To Deter

Anne Suydam correctly poin out that many of us have joi the Navy in the hope that our c tributions will deter a war. T majority of us come from str Christian backgrounds, and defending Christian values principles. Some of these inc the right to worship God accord to our faiths, and the right to l our lives as God directs us These values and freedoms unknown in the Soviet Union.

ROTC A Value

To conclude, I return to original question that was r (about the suitability of having NROTC unit on campus). Augustinian fathers who run University have not sought to us out of Villanova. I'm quite that they know more about ethics of having an NROTC on campus than any of us have contributed to this edito exchange. Who are we to con dict them? Having ROTC on campus demonstrates the v that we, as Americans, place our Judeo-Christian heritage submit to the reader that Cath schools are exactly where NROTC unit belongs. After what better place is there fo midshipman to have instilled him the morals and ethics Christianity?

Dinner Causes Outrage

Dear Editor:

I would like the students and faculty of Villanova to be made aware of the recent outrage occurring during Parent's Weekend. A local restaurant, the Conestoga Mill, was doing a fantastic rip-off job on the parents and students.

The Conestoga Mill had prepared a special menu for the parents and their sons and daughters. The menu was a shortened version of the regular menu. When asked about this, the maitre d' said it was to make it easier for the workers in the kitchen. This is understandable, in preparing for a large crowd, they could get an abundance of the items on the special menu.

I see no problem with this. I do, however, see a problem with the price discrepancy. The menu prepared for the parents and students had higher prices listed, as opposed to the prices for the same meal on the regular menu. I am able to quote one discrepa noted: the lowest priced meal, Moussaka, was listed as $8.25 the regular menu, in the spe menu, it was listed as $8.95.

The $.70 difference may se trivial to some, but I find it rageous that a local restaur would stoop so low as to take vantage of Parent's Weekend make an additional profit!

Security Apology Criticized

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to a letter of apology printed to the security guards last week. This letter was addressed to the statement made about the Villanova security guards and the unfairness and immaturity of the statements. First of all, since when are Villanova security guards the only people with feelings? Week after week, the WKWC column criticizes events going on around campus. But, to borrow their phrase, "Who Cares?": Life is too short to be serious 24 hours a day, so what's the harm in poking a little fun at the administration, right?

Wrong! Instead of overlooking the comment along with the rest, the Villanovan staff published a formal apology to the security guards, probably because they were asked to by the administration. All I want to know is why? Is it because they thought the comment was brutal and without feeling?

Well, I'd like to talk about something brutal that occurred on this campus last year. My brother, a junior here at V.U., was attacked by five non-Villanova students last December because he asked them to stop smashing the glass on the front doors of Sullivan. Angered by my brother's interference, these young men proceeded to smash bottles over his head and kick his nose and jaw. The worst part is that this happened no more than 100 feet from the security guard house near Bartley Hall! The fight was in plain view of the guards, but they probably thought it was just a drunken battle, so they did nothing. Thank God for some students who jumped in to help.

After a few minutes, someone ran over to the guard house and pounded on the glass and asked them to stop the truck that the three men were leaving in. But the guards did nothing. Then, my brother's roommate told the guards to call a van for the hospital, but the guards told him to be quiet and don't tell them their job. After a lot of arguing and a lot of bleeding, a van pulled up and t him to the hospital.

My unanswered questi What were those men d parked in the lower lot in the place? Even V.U. students h trouble parking there. What if brother was beaten to death, or came comatose because guards wouldn't call a van? A why didn't they lower those ex sive gates to stop that truck!

All questions, no answ Granted a security force is ma tory on a college campus. But time, before the administrati so quick to criticize the V novas staff, they should tak long look at why there are s ments made at all.

and BOB HERMAN

Often many individuals unfairly sterotype athletes as being "dumb jocks." This is especially true when one thinks of football players, but two former Villanova athletes are proof that this is a misconception.

Rick Wells and John Babinecz, both mainstays in the Villanova football defense in the late 1960's and early 1970's are both physicians today. Wells currently practices medicine in the Washington, D.C., area and Babinecz in the Dallas, Texas, area.

Rick Wells came to Villanova in 1967 from a prep school in the Washington D.C. area. As a freshman, Wells played on the freshmen team, but as a sophomore he made the varsity squad. Only 5 feet 9 inches and 190 pounds, Wells' motivation compensated for his size disadvantage. In 1968 Wells became the starting middle linebacker for Coach Lou Ferry's Wildcats. Commenting on his desire, Wells said, "Most people consider an ideal middle linebacker to be 6 feet 3 inches and 215 pounds. But at that point that was the weakest position on the team and I thought if I worked and concentrated hard enough, I could make the team."

John Babinecz, a star football player and track runner at Central Catholic High School in Pittsburgh, was recruited nationwide by more than 100 colleges; he chose Villanova because he wanted to get a good education while playing a high grade of football. Commenting on why he chose Villanova, Babinecz said, "They were one of the few schools that just played everything out on the table with me. There was nothing offered under the table; I was offered a regular scholarship like everybody else and I appreciated that. I felt comfortable there."

In his career at Villanova, Babinecz was one of the best linebackers ever to play at the University. To make it possible for both Wells and Babinecz to play, Coach Lou Ferry designed a defense which incorporated two middle linebackers. Wells became the linebacker on the "weak side" and Babinecz became the "strong side" linebacker. Babinecz demonstrated the speed, tackling ability and football instincts to become a good professional linebacker.

When Babinecz graduated from Villanova he was drafted in the second round by the Dallas Cowboys. He played on Dallas' special teams and also as a backup, but injuries sidelined him at crucial times during his two seasons with the Cowboys.

Dallas waived him in 1974 and he was claimed by the Houston Oilers. After more nagging injuries with the Oilers he was released and went to the Chicago Bears in 1975 where he started one game and played on the special teams. After that, Babinecz went to the Philadelphia Eagles and was cut and then went to the Atlanta Falcons for a few weeks.

Finally, Babinecz went to Canada where he performed better than he did in the NFL.

While playing in Canada, Babinecz began to take more premed courses at Southern Methodist University. In the off-season he was accepted into Southwestern medical school. Because Babinecz was such an asset to his team in Canada, the team wanted to fly him back and forth between Texas and Canada on the weekends for games, but he was already concentrating on medical school and in September he retired from football to pursue his medical career.

While playing with one another Wells and Babinecz developed a deep respect for each other. Commenting on is relationship with Babinecz, Wells said, John was highly touted when he came to Villanova. He was a year behind me. By the time he got to Villanova he was one of the most highly publicized high school athletes to come to the University. John lived up to everyone's expectations. As a linebacker I wondered where he would fit into the system. I was one year ahead and had just started as the middle linebacker. I was concerned about where I would fit in because he was such an outstanding athlete, but Coach Ferry designed ths defense for two middle linebackers. We had a friendly competitive attitude and I think we became very close through the next two years. We had a deep mutual respect for each other's talents; I think we learned from each other. I really cherished my relationship with John during my three years that I played with him."

Wells went through Villanova in the College of Commerce and Finance (C & F). After graduating he decided to go back to college and take the courses required to pursue a medical career. Wells feels that playing football helped prepare him for his future endeavors, "Through the encouragement of my wife and parents I went back. I found if I really applied myself and kept my eyes on that one goal that it soon would become mine and it did. That was probably the most valuable experience that I gained from playing sports."

Babinecz's interest in medicine stems from an interest in children, but he admits that Wells' action had some influence on his own life, "I really admired him when he went back and took so many courses. It really made me think hard when I saw Rick just turn everything off to get into medical school. It made me think about what was important to me in my own life."

Currently Rick Wells is in his fifth year of his residency at a hospital in the Washington D.C. area. His wife, Dr. Mary Dugan is in the second year of her residency at the National Children's Hospital, also in Washington D.C. The Wells' devote any free time outside of the hospital to their young son, John Richard Wells III.

Presently, John Babinecz is in his residency in the Dallas area in pediatrics. His wife, Valerie, who he met at Villanova in front of Corr Hall is a part-time registered nurse. John and Valerie center their free time around their two children: Kelly, who is five and Andrew, who is 20 months.

Alumni Director, Robert Capone, the former linebacker coach of Wells and Babinecz said, "It's just amazing that two men, both football players and both linebackers on the same teams are now doctors. I think that says something about Villanova's football teams."

Optimism Abounds In Homecoming Evaluation

By JANE ASHTON

When I started college, I was told that it would be entirely different from anything I had ever experienced. And when I was informed of that, I wasn't surprised. I certainly expected the classes to be more challenging, the social life less restricted and most things generally different. I thought I had it all figured out, but then I hit Homecoming Weekend. Now we're talking about a national institution, right up there with mom and apple pie. It's kind of like planning to eat salad all the time in the Pit, because you figure they could never screw up salad. What do I know? I'm only a freshman and still learning.

Let me tell you — it was a weekend to remember. There were German dancers (missed them), a Jonathon Edwards concert (missed unfortunately), a dance (missed that) and a golf tournament (somehow missed that one, too). My friends and I went down to the stadium for the soccer game; there were about forty people sitting in the stands and no one on the field, so I asked someone when the game started. I found out it was halftime.

Right after that we headed over to Mendel Field for the Alumni Oktoberfest. (Did you notice how many events were 'of, by and for' the alumni?) Actually, I was at the 'fest to see my roommate march in the color guard. The band was pretty good, and we had fun placing bets on which twirler would drop her baton. We heard a wonderful speech from Mr. Joe Alumni, saw the Homecoming Court (thrills) and were not surprised one bit by the appearance of an airplane with appropriate "Bring back football" sign.

Judging by the large numbers of alumni walking around campus all weekend (most of whom seemed to be biologically connected to a m or shotglass), somebody must ha enjoyed the festivities. Homeco ing seemed to mean something the alumni. For those attendi the University, however, the ter 'Homecoming' had a certa meaning that rose from the dep of the Pit to the heights of t chapel spires: "Hey mom, F coming home!"

The following article is the first of the weekly columns which will be sponsored both by the Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP) and the Villanova University Registered Nurses Association (VURNA). On an alternating basis, each of these organizations will provide the Villanovan with a column of this type. The column is an attempt on the part of these members to make the Villanova community aware of common health problems and aware of the fact about them.

In no time at all, you can take a painless test that could help you avoid an increased risk of heart disease, stroke and kidney disease. What is this quick, easy test which you don't have to study for? A blood pressure test that measures the force of the blood against the walls of your arteries. This force is generated by the heart as it pumps blood to all parts of your body.

High blood pressure is the result of arteries narrowing. Predisposing factors include overweight, nervous tension, heredity, kidney and endocrine disease, diabetes, and high salt intake. Narrow arteries make it harder for blood to pass through causing your heart to work harder and a rise in blood pressure. Blood pressure normally rises and falls depending on your activity, but if it rises and stays high, it is referred to as hypertension.

Now there is good news and bad news. The bad news is you can have high blood pressure and not even know it! This silent killer usually has no warning signs. The only way to diagnose hypertension is to have your blood pressure checked.

The good news is that the Junior students from the College of Nursing will take your blood pressure for free! Remember, the range of normal values includes pressures below 140/90. A pressure above 140/90 is considered high and should be screened by a physician. Hypertension can be treated and controlled. So, do yourself a favor and let a Junior Nursing student check your pressure!

Ministry Becomes Aware Of Hunger

By CAROL ALKONS

For the past two months, a group of volunteers has been operating through Campus Ministry with the goal of planning a series of events to help the Villanova community become more aware of hunger in the world. Through their efforts, many activities, ranging from films and lectures to a "Run for Hunger" have been scheduled to take place the week of November 15-22 as part of Hunger Awareness Week (HAW).

"We are hoping to make this week mainly a conciousness raising week as opposed to a week where everyone just gets together for hunger. It's an annual reminder — we've got to be aware of the whole hunger hunger issue," said Perry Hazeltine, co-chairman of HAW. "We feel that it is appropriate in a university environment to bring this issue to the forefront, and that students are appropriate people to reach since this (awareness) may affect their roles and decisions in the future."

Half of this year's proceeds will be sent to Somalia, East Africa, through Oxfam America, "a project-oriented organization which sends people to start programs that the native people can eventually adopt," explained Pat Canavan, who is also co-chairman of HAW. The remaining funds will be sent to the Augustinian mission in Peru, a mission that was begun by Villanova University Augustinians. Last year, over $4000 was raised during HAW.

The Hunger Awareness group hopes to raise money, but that is not their whole purpose, as can be seen by the various activities they have planned: A lecture by Professor Miriam Vosburgh, of Villanova's Sociology Department, who will speak at Mass on the study of human populations; and guest speaker Fr. Jim Nieckarz, a Maryknoll missionary who will be representing the "Fourth World Movement." "He'll be bringing a good perspective because, as students, we're an action oriented society, and he'll be sharing some of his experiences," explained Canavan.

Besides the guest speakers, a letter writing campaign will be initiated after Masses and at a HAW coffeehouse. The letters will focus on the problem of funds, intended as "food aid" and sent to Africa but which are used for other purposes. The letters will be sent to a local legislator, who, the Hunger Awareness committee expects, will interpret the letters as an indication of what people in his district are feeling.

"Hunger Awareness is raising conciousness as to what the feeling of hunger is. We don't have to think we're powerless, but that we can influence people within our own sphere. We can help out by educating ourselves and others about the hunger in the world," summed up Canavan. "Our citizenship is a valid gift, and we have a responsibility to use it."

One of the events that the Hunger Awareness group feels is most important is the showing of the film, "Hunger in America," in the Connelly Center cinema Monday November 16; it will be shown each class hour all day long. The HAW committee invites all in the general campus community to attend, and especially urges professors to bring their classes to the screening since the film relays "a dramatic message" about hunger in the U.S. and is worthy of discussion. "The movie hopefully will help us become more sensitive to the problem. At the present time, approximately 25 million Americans suffer from malnutrition," said Canavan.

Hazeltine commented that more people are getting involved this year, and indeed the committee has prepared a variety of events to invite the Villanova community to participate: all week long an internationally acclaimed Fourth World Movement photo exhibit will be displayed in the Connelly Center art gallery; another "Run for Hunger" will be launched; a day for fasting will be held; hand-made third world crafts will be sold; and a Peace and Justice day will be held during which the issue of defense spending vs. social welfare spending will be discussed.

Stating that the issue of hunger is a "very complicated issue," Hazeltine elaborated: "The amount of power and money that a government has is much larger than what all these charitable organization have; and though it is important to give to charities for specific development in the third world, the only real solution to hunger in the third world is going to come though political and economic change. As individuals, if we're going to have an impact on the problem of World Hunger, it is going to be through our citizenship and through our values in the working world."

Fowles' Classic Reworked in Film

By GREG ANTON

The beauty of the landscape of Southern England provides an appropriate backdrop for the movie version of John Fowles' novel, The French Lieutenant's Woman. The breathtaking beauty of the tranquil, serene, and rustic Undercliff and the harshness of the often tumultuous, violent, and raging sea below depict a dualism, a dualism which is present throughout the movie. The relationship between the two main characters, Sarah and Charles, unfolds in the steeply sloping coastal wood outside the town of Lyme, known as the Undercliff. The Undercliff, in its natural pacifity and serenity, represents the lack of passion of the age. Yet, it is here where Sarah and Charles unleash their passions and discover their love. In order to do so, they must overcome their conflicts, which wage within and gnaw at their stability. The two main characters are passionate spirits trapped in a passionless age.

The French Lieutenant's Woman is the story of Sarah Woodruff, a turbulent and passionate woman, and her zealous quest for love. Sarah, played by Meryl Streep, is shunned and rejected by the nineteenth century, Victorian society. Her fall from grace occurs when the community learns of her affair with a visiting French lieutenant. Sarah, considered a prostitute by the community, is, rather, an educated woman who simply possesses qualities uncharacteristic of her time. Excluded from the societal mainstream, Sarah becomes withdrawn, hopeless, and melancholic. She feels a truly loving relationship is now unattainable and insists upon punishing herself for this.

"From the moment their eyes meet, they recognize a strong, mutual attraction which both puzzles and intriques them."

The story transforms into a love story as Charles Smithson enters Sarah's life. Charles first encounters Sarah while he is taking a stroll with his fiancee. From the moment their eyes meet, they recognize a strong, mutual attraction which both puzzles and intrigues them. Charles, portrayed by Jeremy Irons, meets up with Sarah several other times and becomes fascinated and confused by this peculiar and enigmatic lady. He tries to befriend her, but is met with coldness and indifference. Through his persistence, Charles eventually does win the confidence and friendship of Sarah. Soon, he realizes he is deeply in love with her. Sarah, also realizing his love, seizes her chance to fulfill her yearning for love. What evolves is a complex and unusual love story.

Throughout the movie, there is another story intertwined. It is the story of the relationship that develops between two actors who are playing the roles of Sarah and Charles. Streep and Irons portray these contemporary actors, Anna and Mike, who are making the movie, The French Lieutenant's Woman. These actors develop the same relationship as Sarah and Charles do. So, The French Lieutenant's Woman is a movie within a movie. Harold Pinter, who wrote the screenplay, imposes this duality to preserve a modern point of view.

Streep's role as Sarah does not allow her to exhibit her raw, forceful, and electrifying acting ability. Instead, she beautifully depicts the introspective and troubled Sarah. Her performance superbly captures and expresses all the diverse emotions of Sarah. Irons is equally as good. Starring in his first major motion picture, Irons gives a commanding performance and exhibits a powerful Fogelberg in Concert: It's Only Rock 'n' Roll?

By RICH FLINCHBAUGH

It was 8:00 p.m. on Wednesday, October 21, and those fans in the Spectrum who expected the next three hours to be a mellow Fogelberg solo were in for a surprise. The stage was ornamented with as many lights and amps as a Stones concert, although the fifteen acoustic guitars lined up in the background indicated something different.

Both the young female admirers and the mature couples in the audience waited patiently for the performer who arrived about a half hour late. But the waiting was well worth it, as Fogelberg, dressed in a white jacket and jeans, started the show with electric guitar, performing the title track of his best known album, Phoenix. He, along with six other musicians, were full of energy and continued using it in another of Fogelberg's faster songs, Wishing on a Moon.

Switching electric guitar for acoustic, Fogelberg slowed things down a bit as the stage turned a shade of purple and he played the title song from his new album, Innocent Age. This beautiful performance was an indication of the other side to the show, and assured the more quiet fans that they would not be forgotten.

After temporarily returning to the talent of his electric guitar, Fogelberg walked over to the piano on the left of stage. There he was instantly applauded as fans realized he was beginning to play one of their favorites, Heart Hotel. Following this was another quickly recognized tune as it was the hit from his new album, Hard To Say. The fans loved it.

The lights went back on and Fogelberg, on guitar, began another of the songs on his new album, Restless Moments. Though not one of the more familiar tunes, Fogelberg played tremendously as the spotlight shone on him, and the audience clapped to the beat. It was then it became obvious that Fogelberg was being appreciated, not only for his talent as a songwriter, but as an excellent musician.

As soon as the song was over the band ran off stage, leaving Fogelberg, who sat down at the piano and quietly said, "We'll play a few of the pretty ones." Keeping his promise, he performed Beggar's Game. Adding to his list of talents, Fogelberg revealed his excellent voice during this song and those following as he walked over to his stool in the spotlight. There he wiped the sweat from his face and stated that he was a Minnesota Vikings fan. After playing a tune called The Crow Fogelberg indicated that he was going to play a tune for someone special to him and requested the audience to remain silent for the song. Doing so, they were overcome with an inexplicable mood as he sang Leader of the Band, a beautiful work dedicated to his father. The audience felt a chill of recognition as they heard his line, "and father, I don't think I said I loved you near enough," and they acknowledged this with a short ap-

Punk Festival Starts New Wave

By PAUL DURAND

The first Annual Philadelphia Punk Festival was very successfully held on October 3rd at the Philadelphia Elks Center (16th and Fitzwater). No, it wasn't an Electric Factory concert. In fact, one of its biggest attributes was that the entire event was organized and run by a Philly band rather than some company's employees. The people who organized the show were there to see it; the event was run by those who enjoy and play the music. Its success proved that bands can make it on their own, and that Philadelphia won't have to depend on any club alone, or any concert promoter, to have a healthy "scene".

The Festival was originally scheduled to feature five groups, but one of them, Physical Push, withdrew due to external pressures dealing with the established club scene. There was an unfair attempt to stop the event from happening because of a fear of competition from such shows in the future. Indeed, if it became a success, it might spur more efforts by the punk community to become independent. But is was held as planned, and it was a success; it isn't that easy to stop the punks!

The festival sold out, and the crowd was reported to be of over six hundred punks. Four great punk bands from the Philly area played for an admission charge of only three dollars; even the price alone couldn't be beat! And another super feature was that punks of all ages were admitted, avoiding the usual exclusion of those under 21 from seing good shows in Philadelphia. The crowd's age actually ranged from approx. 8 to 45!

Autistic Behavior began the evening at 9:40 p.m. and the crowd went wild with the very first note. The front section of the floor, (of course there were no seats), was populated with approximately 40-50 people energetically ramming into one another, (slam-dancing). Watching the audience from afar would help one realize the true meaning of "fun". Through the entire night, the length of the songs averaged one to two minutes, and probably about 500 words were crammed into each song.

Decontrol took the stage about an hour later and played about 20 minutes, finishing with at least one guitar in pieces, and a drum kit spread all over the stage. Anarchy and destruction rule! And Informed Sources staged a well publicized debut at the festival, not knocking out the audience, but not boring them either! A few of the songs were slightly familiar to the crowd from local radio airplay, (believe it or not).

Sadistic Exploits, dare said the premiere Philly punk band, began a great 45 minute set at nearly o'clock. They played with a st in drummer and nevertheless b the crowd away with the likes their smash hit Kamikaze, their first encore, Death Co screen presence. His inexperience never emerges. Irons creates a powerful, dynamic, and encompassing Charles, and in so doing, masterfully accentuates Streep's aloof character. Both are successfully able to shift to their contemporary roles and convey very realistic and believable characters.

The French Lieutenant's Woman is indeed a love story, but it is much more than that. It is the story of two passionate people in a society where passions are suppressed. The French Lieutenant's Woman explores and reveals the intoxicating power passion has over reason and emotion. The movie shows how this power can affect people's lives and how it can create an uncontrollable obsession.

NOW PLAYING AT A THEATRE NEAR YOU

Yeasy Announces 'Blood Wedding'

Blood Wedding, by Federico Garcia Lorca, will be the next production at Villanova Theatre. Irene Baird will be director for this production, which will run November 11-14 and November 18-21.

Blood Wedding is a classic drama of passion and revenge, set against the stark landscape of Spain's primitive hill country. A new bride forsakes her husband on their wedding night to flee on horseback with a forbidden love from her past. The bridegroom follows in close pursuit, determined to avenge his loss.

Garcia Lorca, one of the finest poetic dramatists of the 20th century, writes in language that stuns with the force and beauty of its imagery. Blood Wedding, says director Baird, is "a play deeply rooted in Spanish tradition." As the story of the doomed lovers unfolds, a 22-member cast will re-create in full detail the daily life of a small Spanish town. Set and lighting will be designed by Lou-Winston. The production will be enhanced by an original score for classical guitar by Carl Mastropaolo and David Rodini. Costumes will be designed by Norma Colantoni.

Blood Wedding will run Wednesday, November 11, through Saturday, November 14, and Wednesday, November 18, through Saturday, November 21. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre on the Villanova campus, Lancaster and Ithan Avenues, Villanova, Pa.. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts and group rates available. Free parking is located directly across from the theatre on Lancaster Avenue. The campus is within walking distance from the Villanova station of the Paoli Local and Red Arrow lines. For tickets and information, call the box office at 645-7474.

plaud. Fogelberg had his audience entranced as he played two of his more mellow love songs, Captured Angel and one of his most loved songs, Longer. Receiving much applause he left for a fifteen minute intermission.

As the band returned for the second half of the show, the steel guitar was introduced on stage to the many existing instruments. It was then that Fogelberg showed yet another face to his music: Bluegrass. Both Down the Road and Stewball were greatly loved for their fun rhythm that made the crowd feel like square dancing in the aisles. After these two tunes, Fogelberg found it a good time to introduce the band.

While playing a Latin-sounding song, Fogelberg, again, revealed his talent on electric guitar and the talent in his band through the rhythm guitar and flute solos. Then, starting the next line of songs was Lost in the Sun, a great sounding tune. And this group of songs was ended with one of the more faster and more fun tunes, Part of the Plan. Having received the approval of his audience, Fogelberg left the stage.

But, giving him an amazing standing ovation, the audience would not leave until he returned, and so, he did. This time he sang Face the Fire and left once more. But still, having been stirred with this song, the audience would not let him leave, and he returned for his second encore with There's a Place in the World for a Gambler. The only way to explain the atmosphere created as all the audience stood and sang along to the choruses is touching. After extending the last of these lines, Let It Shine, to a seeming infinity, Fogelberg wished his audience the best and showed his realization of a fantastic show by embracing the members of the band, and leaving the stage together. They were outstanding! The show was truly a great one, and not soon to be forgotten.

Fogelberg had given the audience something great to remember: A quality show, in which the talents of a performer were revealed through his ability to creatively write and compose, to perform excellently both vocally and instrumentally, and to give a diverse selection of music in one night. That more than satisfied his audience.

Crimson Court Sieges The Tower

By MICHAEL JONES

A sparsely furnished stage, illuminated by an overpowering Crimson glow, gazed unwinkingly at the nervous huddled mass. A profound sense of suspenseful expectation flowed through the fishbowl of humanity who sat in that old fire-trap, the infamous Tower Theatre in Upper Darby. And then, with no apparent external stimulation, the mood changed abruptly as four distinct individuals glided purposefully onto the stage as though one entity. Each positioned himself at his instrument and, with no preliminary tuning or warm-up, the project known as King Crimson flexed its musical muscles in a cohesive, purposeful demonstration of the theme of their new album, Discipline.

This, the first series of performances since 1974 by any collection of musicians using the King Crimson name, was conspicuously bereft of the extravagant electronic impedimenta which clutter a stage, dwarfing the performers of just about any high-powered band in the rock medium. Yet the absence of elaborate synthesisers and mammoth speaker columns did not appear to inconvenience Fripp & Co. in the least. Indeed they seemed to thrive on their independence from such needless, energy-inefficient hardware, turning a supposed insufficiency into a positive expression of their collective musical confidence.

Robert Fripp

Undoubtedly there will be those cynical individuals who will deride the unconventional nature of King Crimson's music as incomprehensible extremism. Yet Crimson wants to demonstrate that the musical world is not defined by Journey and Foreigner. With the steady decline of actual "progressive" art rock and the alarming rise in the kind of incoherent destructiveness of the dinosaurs of punk and new wave, King Crimson stands in lonely company. Though there are in many groups with greater musical ability and many h flying rock "personalitie Fripp's band is cemented by total commitment of each mem to the creation of consistently novative musical language. Th is virtually no one else today is doing what King Crimson doing within the sphere of temporary music.

Music is the path of discipline which these perform have chosen to transfer the c pelling need for personal devel ment. Today's society of anxi ridden punk rockers stands mute testimony to the necessity turn these destructive, violent bursts in a positive directi "Discipline is never an end in self, only a means to an end." Bruce Lee so aptly phrased t "It is only a finger pointing at moon. Take not the finger for moon, for its purpose is only to dicate the moon's brilliance."

'Mommie Dearest' A Disappointment

By LINDA BOND

Projecting a lack of vigor and unity, the highly publicized movie Mommie Dearest leaves one a bit disappointed. Faye Dunaway portrays Joan Crawford as a woman of unstable personality who abuses her children through frequent emotional manipulation and less frequent physical punishment. Crawford's character reveals to the audience insecurity imbedded in the root of her self concept which creates an all consuming need to compete — and win. Perceiving the world through the eyes of a competitor, Crawford is at constant odds with friends, family, and herself. Mommie Dearest focuses on the relationship between the actress and her adopted daughter Christina, casting Joan Crawford as the epitome of a neurotic-sometimes psychotic — brittle and demanding celebrity.

The movie fails from its start. Missing is a strong sense of direction, and viewers may flounder looking for continuity. Only the finest thread holds the opening scene together, and at times, these scenes seem juxtaposed together in a haphazard style with little regard for transition. The transition failure turns the movie into a rocky jaunt through Crawford's adult life, leaving the audience alternately very bored, then very interested, then very bored again.

A tiny, ongoing pulse in Mommie Dearest may be found in the costuming and sets which bring life into the film. However, again, the superficial cannot disguise another basic weakness of this movie to develop more deeply the characters' drives. Not only does development stop but the causes of the initial development aren't defined well. Why is Joan Crawford so insecure? At the age of seven, why does Christina respond with adult savvy to her mother's manipulation? Character maturation does not occur in Mommie Dearest and viewers are left with shallow, flat, unsatisfying images of these people. Obviously intended as a psychological film, it does not qualify because it lives on only one level — the apparent.

Clearly this movie will not be memorable based upon artistic merit and impact. But in evaluation of its purely entertainment value, or in other words, taking into consideration its ability to keep one's attention suspended for two hours, Mommie Dearest is not a complete waste of money. Nevertheless, the discriminating moviegoer will no doubt spend his money more wisely.

Still Feels Like The First Time

By PETE DiPASCA

After a two year battle to overcome what lead singer Lou Gramm labeled "artistic stagnation," Foreigner has returned to their spot atop the rock music world. The band certainly demonstrated they've got something to prove again when they performed for two nights at the Spectrum two weeks ago.

Foreigner consists of group founder and guitarist Mick Jones; co-founder and vocalist Lou Gramm; bassist Rick Wills; and drummer Dennis Elliot. On their current tour, however, Foreigner is traveling as a seven-piece band. Three musicians who worked on the last album have been brought along to make Foreigner's in-concert sound better than ever.

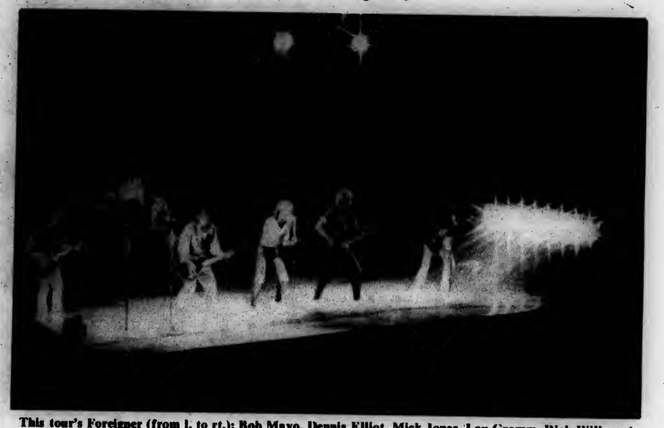
The group was first conceived in early 1977 when three Englishmen (Jones, Elliot, and ex-guitarist Ian McDonald) teamed up with three Americans (Gramm, ex-bassist Ed Gagliardi, and ex-keyboardist Al Greenwood). The band quickly established themselves as a major rock act when their debut album, Foreigner, was released. After being together for over five years, Foreigner has sold close to seventeen million albums, and today they remain as one of few bands that have successfully bridged the gap between hard rock and commercial pop music.

Opening for Foreigner was Billy Squier, a singer-songwriter from Boston whose latest work, Don't Say No, turned out to be one of this summer's biggest selling albums. Like Foreigner, Squier incorporates pop overtones into his hard rock-based music. His crowd-pleasing, hour long set included the hit singles In the Dark and The Stroke.

Foreigner's performance was like a "greatest hits" package. Five songs came from their first album, including Long, Long Way From Home, Cold As Ice, and Starrider. The band displayed their diverse musical abilities in going from songs like the fast-paced Dirty White Boy to their ballad Waiting for a Girl Like You. Other highlights included a fifteen foot inflatable juke box which appeared on stage during Juke Box Hero and a ten minute version of their song Head-knocker.

"This one's gonna blow the lid off. We've got something to prove again."
— Lou Gramm

Foreigner decided that for their latest album, entitled 4, the band would deviate from what had become known as the "Foreigner Sound" and present songs like Waiting for a Girl Like You, the upbeat Luanne, and Urgent, a propulsive piece of heavy metal funk. Mick Jones pointed out that the new album "came out of a desire to get back the fire, the excitement that made the band in the first place." As evidenced by the band's latest performance, it certainly feels like the first time.



This tour's Foreigner (from l. to rt.): Bob Mayo, Dennis Elliot, Mick Jones, Lou Gramm, Rick Wills and Mark Rivera.

Delightful Chinese Food

By AMY MacLACHLAN

Chinese Delight, located at 735 Lancaster Ave. in Devon, is the restaurant for people who hate Chinese food. Even the most finicky diner will be delighted after a visit to this delicious oriental eating establishment. The decorations are refreshingly American, from the usual tacky pagoda and dragon decor found in most of the areas lower quality Chinese restaurants. Patrons immediately feel the oriental atmosphere however, as they are surrounded by the eastern politeness and the indescribably delicious cuisine. The only negative comment to be made is in regard to prices for a choice of seafood, steak, pork or vegetable dish, prices range from $5.00 to $20.00 for the Peking Duck.

An average party of two can expect to spend about $18.00 for a delicious dinner. Chinese Delight also offers take-out and is open from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

Popdan Plans Return to Channel

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Last year as the Villanova Men's swim team ended its season, one member was just embarking upon his hardest period of training. Tom Popdan was preparing to swim the English Channel. To attempt this task, a person must be in exceptional physical shape, along with being very committed to his goal. With this in mind, a very dedicated Popdan, began to eat, sleep and think English Channel.

Intensive swimming began at a local swim club, an average day consisting of 8,000 to 17,000 yards. By June the yardage had increased and the actual ocean swims began. Along with this came the "ice-baths," which were used in order to adapt to the cold water of the English Channel. Popdan believed that this would be one of the toughest obstacles that he would encounter. The intensity of the water temperature could cause the swimmer to experience hypothermia, a condition which could lower the body temperature to 78 degrees. As added insulation against the cold, Popdan set out to gain 33 pounds. Every meal was a chore and usually was regurgitated while swimming.

On July 13, Popdan swam the Atlantic City Marathon, becoming the first Villanova swimmer ever to swim a marathon. He entered the swim with great enthusiasm and complete confidence. Dan Ahern, a fellow teammate, was there and quickly agreed that Tom was ready. "You could see the fire in his eyes. There was no doubt in my mind that he would accomplish both the Atlantic City and English Channel swims." He overcame the challenges of the ocean, including 100 jellyfish bites per mile, boats that came into his path, and water so rough that the course increased from 23.5 miles to 27 miles long. Although he finished with a slightly injured shoulder, he placed 12th of 21 world class swimmers who participated. When asked about the swim, Tom responded, "I was very pleased with my performance. It enhanced my confidence and excitement for the Channel swim."

August brought another obstacle, the hurricanes had hit the shore. Tom believed that this would be good practice for the conditions he would encounter later.

As the summer came to an end, he had worked up to six hours of swimming per day, accumulating 780 miles of swimming. The Channel training was constantly on his mind. "I was totally obsessed with the idea. Life was a challenge every day and I had a lot of fun."

When Tom finally arrived at Dover Harbor, England, he was well prepared both mentally and physically. Even the once feared cold water was comfortable for him. Although the first few days were sunny, unsettled weather was to make the Channel its home. The winds and the waves began to grow fiercer each day. A five day schedule for the swim was constructed. On any of these days he would be given a chance at the Channel.

But each night at six o'clock, the pilot discouraged the swim for the following day. Force winds reached 40 mph and swells climbed to 16 ft. Although he continued to train, the pilot finally informed him that he would not be permitted to make the swim, and the Association for the Channel Swim gave the final word.

Popdan had to decide whether he would remain until the October 6th date or whether he would return home. After coming this far, he decided to wait until October. Following the decision he moved to Folkstone, where he could train inside the Channel. Unfortunately, the conditions continued to worsen. By October 6th, the winds were gusting at 75 mph. Finally, Popdan had to accept the decision to cancel the swim. "Sure I was disappointed. The hope was there and then it vanished."

Tom Popdan

This "Crazy American" as he had been called in England, is just as much obsessed with the idea as he ever was. "I can still do it, I have to and I will," he said. In fact, as you read this article, Tom Popdan will have begun to prepare for next August's swim date.

Aside from his training, the 1981 graduate has become very involved with helping charity organizations to raise the money needed to continuing their programs. Right now the Pennsylvania Blind Center is his main source of interest, but he is looking into other possibilities. "I want to be involved with other people who are dedicated to helping these unfortunate people. Had I swum the Channel, I would have dedicated it to the blind children."

Cats Face Toughest Test

By JOE MARUSAK

Harry Perretta faces what amounts to his toughest schedule ever, but he feels his women's varsity basketball squad is ready to meet the challenge.

According to the head coach, "Our schedule, overall, is the most difficult this team has had. Before Christmas, we play four of last year's top twenty teams." Those Perretta is referring to include Eastern Carolina, Maryland, Penn State and Cheyney State. It's a formidable line-up.

Yet, Perretta remains optimistic. His 1981-82 roster is chock-full of standout performers. Heading the list is 6-4 Lisa Ortlip, a probable 1st or 2nd team All-American. The senior center from Norristown, Pa. can do it all — shoot (14.9 ppg. in 1980), rebound (8.1 rpg. last season), and block shots. Ortlip, who gained All-American honorable mention in her junior season, is the Wildcats' all-time leading scorer and all-time leading rebounder (1120 and 740 respectively).

Ortlip is not all. Stephanie Vanderalice, the team's leading rebounder a year ago (8.3 per game), also returns to solidify the frontcourt. The 5-11 senior is joined at forward by Rosemarie Burke, a 5-10 junior from Media, Pa., and by Abington, Pa. native Lu-Ann Krothe.

The Cats are even stronger at the guard position, where Nancy Bernhardt and Kathie Beisel lead the attack. Bernhardt is a 5-9 sophomore who averaged 13 ppg. last season. She was recognized as one of the top 50 freshmen in the country a year ago. Beisel, who was third in team scoring with a 10.7 average, is a 5-9 native of Philly.

Villanova has yet another plus on its side: depth. Backing up Ortlip at center is sophomore Sue Castellan, who filled in well last season (2.7 ppg.).

A valuable addition at the forward slot is 5-11 sophomore Noreen Kemether, a possible starter this year. Kemether is a transfer from Old Dominion, the powerhouse that produced Nancy Liebermann a couple of years back.

The guard position is also set, as Coach Perretta can count on three sophomores — Andrea Burton, Mimi Coleman and Dana Hurley — for more strength.

And that's not all. "This year we recruited two fine players from the Philly area," Perretta emphasized. He is referring to All-Public League Sandra Williams, and All-Catholic League Kathy Razlor. Williams netted 17 ppg. at South Philadelphia High last season, and Razlor poured in 14.2, pacing St. Hubert's to a sharp 24-2 record.

As long as the depth is there, Villanova has a good shot at the top twenty. "The fact that we've increased our depth at forward and center should definitely help," commented Perretta.

The major obstacle comes at the start of the season, and that could present problems. Reasoned the head coach, "In past years, we usually started off 4-0 or 5-0. The competition at the beginning was not as strong as at the end. This year we have no time to make mistakes. Right away there's that challenge.

Perretta is confident that his squad can overcome the initial barrier. Only two letter-winners have been lost to graduation.

But can the 'Cats match last year's feats? Villanova racked up a school record 22 wins, and were ranked ninth in the East by Eastern Basketball Magazine. If the Blue and White can top those impressive marks this year, it should definitely gain the national recognition it deserves.

REBOUNDS: Villanova opens its season on Tuesday, Dec. 1, when it hosts West Chester at 7:30 p.m. The team has been invited to three tournaments: The Dial Classic at Montclair, N.J. (Dec. 5-6), the Dec. 28-29 Big East Tournament at Jamica, N.Y.; and the Providence Tournament Jan. 8-9, at the Providence, R.I. Civic Center ... The Wildcats will be seeking revenge on Dec. 16 when they play Penn State at the Field House. Last year the Nittany Lions edged VU, 66-62, in the EAIAW Region IB Tournament.

Booters Post Two Victories

Week In Sports

The men's soccer team upped their record to 9-5 last week with a pair of victories over Trenton State and Shippensburg. Dave Coskey Photo

SOCCER

The Villanova men's soccer team has posted two wins in its last three games to improve its record to 9-5 on the season.

An enthusiastic Homecoming Day crowd was treated to a 1-0 victory by the Cats over Trenton State College, as junior Mike Layfield blasted home the game's only goal.

Three days later the Cats continued their winning ways with a sparkling 3-0 shutout of Eastern College. Layfield, a transfer from Bloomsburg State and the Cats leading scorer, netted two goals in that match.

The Nova winning streak came to a screeching halt in the next contest as Shippensburg State managed to blank the Cats, 2-0. This loss also snapped the Villanova defense's shutout string at four games. Led by senior goalie Bill Strong, the defense had played [illegible] prior to posting the four consecutive shutouts.

LACROSSE

The Villanova men's lacrosse team scored an impressive 10-5 victory over powerful Kutztown State on Sunday at Villanova. The victory, the Wildcats second straight, ended the fall season on a good note for the Laxmen. The regular season, which starts in the spring, looks very promising for the talented Villanova team.

Villanova jumped on top early on an unassisted goal by John Galloway. After three consecutive Kutztown scores, Paul Campanelli netted the next Cat goal to bring them within one.

The go-ahead goal came from senior Kevin McHugh, making the score 5-4. The Cats then reeled off four more unanswered goals to make the score 9-4. Both Galloway and Cortez netted two goals apiece.

Villanova received outstanding goaltending for the second straight week from Drew Cunningham and Enrique "Chico" Kerveda.

FIELD HOCKEY

The Villanova field hockey team won one game, lost one, and tied one in the final week of their season.

The Wildcats defeated Montclair St., 3-0, on Homecoming weekend. Junior Regina Graham scored two goals, freshman Gina Roman had one, and goalie Rebecca Natale picked up the shutout. The team then tied Widener with two goals from Sue Lora, and then lost to Rider.

Graham and Lora were the team's leading scorers with six goals each. Roman scored three, Sue Comly and Danine DiBernardi had two, and Robin Garczynski and Amy Hutchinson had one apiece. Even though the team's final record was 3-8-3, next year should be very promising for the Wildcats as 6 of the 7 leading scorers will be returning.

CREW

Villanova's varsity eight oared crew was among nearly 1500 competitors in 385 boats competing in the annual Thomas Eakins Head of the Schulykill Regatta on Saturday. Some of the East Coast's fastest crews competed in the 2.75 mile race. In order to accommodate the large number of entrees, crews started at ten second intervals and raced against the clock.

Led by senior John Traynor, the Villanova eight rowed in the Championship Eights event. The United States Naval Academy won the event for the second year in a row. Other crews in the event were among the best in the East including Penn, Harvard, Yale, Vesper Boat Club and New York Athletic Association.

VOLLEYBALL

The regularly scheduled season has ended, but it is only a brief respite for the Villanova women's volleyball team as they await the extension of post-season tournament bids. The bids will be extended this Saturday, November, 8.

The Wildcats closed out the season with a second place finish in the LaSalle Tournament last weekend, and in the process, upped their record to 27-8.

All that remains now, however, is the agonizing wait for the tournament bid. Considering the impressive record, Coach Bob Covell's Wildcats should be heading to Townson State University to continue their already successful season.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

The Villanova women's tennis team won their second PAIAW Division IIA Tennis Championship on Saturday by defeating St. Joseph's.

Leading the team to the 9-6 victory were juniors Carol Harrison and Dawn Fisher, and sophomore Tricia Stairiker. Abigale and Cynthia Burke were also victorious in their doubles match.

The Wildcats finished their season with a 15-5 record.

WATER POLO

The Villanova varsity water polo team traveled to St. Francis College in Brooklyn, New York, for their last tournament of the regular season. The Watercats took on arch-rival Princeton and two other powers in Queens College and St. Francis College.

The Watercats now are eligible to go to the Mid-Atlantic League Championship at Fordham on November 6-8. This is the first time in three years that they have been eligible and Coach Al Fazio was optimistic about their chances. If they do well, the Eastern Regional Championships are next.

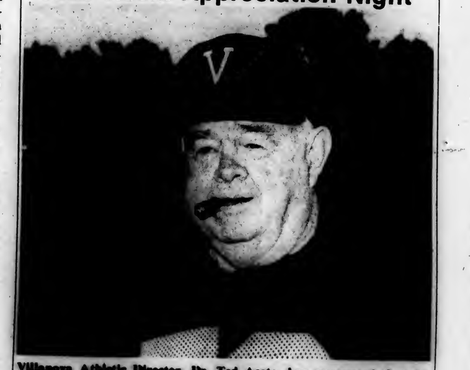
Jake Nevin Appreciation Night



Villanova Athletic Director, Dr. Ted Aceto, has announced that the Wildcats' exhibition basketball game against internationally respected Cibona of Yugoslavia, on Tuesday, November 17, 7 p.m., has been designated "Jake Nevin Appreciation Night" in honor of the Wildcats' longtime trainer, John "Jake" Nevin. Entering his 52nd season at Villanova, Jake has become over the years perhaps the best known and most loved figure involved in Villanova athletics. Coming to Villanova in 1929 as assistant trainer, Jake has been head trainer since 1946. A special ceremony honoring Jake will take place during halftime of the Nov. 17 contest. Tickets for the Villanova-Cibona contest are $3 for adults, $1 for students, and can be still be purchased at the ticket office located in the Villanova Field House.

Cats Run Behind Big East Rivals

By NICHOLAS CAVUTO

Villanova's men's cross country team, still struggling through illnesses, took third place in the Big East Championships and fell to seventh in the IC4A meet on Monday.

Two weekends ago in Boston the Wildcats finished behind Providence, who placed six runners in the top ten positions, and Georgetown whose Olympian, John Gregorek won the race, setting a meet record with a time of 22:39 over the five mile course.

Villanova was led by senior sensation Ross Donoghue, who placed sixth with a time of 23:05, a personal best. Brian O'Keeffe and John Hunter also ran strong, taking fourteenth and fifteenth places respectively. The Wildcats' scoring was rounded out by Kevin Dillon (25th) and Dermot Anderson (26th).

And in New York's Van Cortland Park it was Providence on top again. Donoghue again finished first for the Cats taking ninth place. The Cats were upset by St. Joe's and also topped by other traditionally strong area teams; Penn State and Bucknell.

The Wildcats have been plagued by injuries and illnesses all season. The Big East race was th first in which John Hunter, Kev Dillon and Marcus O'Sulliv competed together. "Hopefully, w will be getting a little mo healthy with each passing week noted Coach Jack Pyrah, "w really aren't in the best of sha because of the injuries that ha plagued us."

The NCAA District II Cham pionships will be held on Novem ber 7th on the course at Lehig University and in order for th Cats to run in the national cham pionships they will have to b among the top four teams in th district.

Donoghue is Nova's Hot Harrier

By RAY ENGLER

Fans always acknowledge a good performance by a team by saying they're "hot." For example, the Dodgers, in crushing the Yankees, were "hot"; The Eagles, prior to running into a Dallas roadblock, were "hot"; and the San Francisco 49ers are presently the "hottest" team in pro football.

Here at Villanova, we also have someone who's "hot". It is senior cross-country runner Ross Donoghue. He has been the Wildcats' top finisher in every cross-country meet this year; his times improving with each race.

Opening the harrier season on October 3 with a second-place finish to U.S. Olympian John Gregorek of Georgetown ("My toughest opponent this season", according to Donoghue) by 9 seconds over 5.2 miles, Ross won his next three races. The first, the Lehigh Invitational on October 10, was a 10,000 meter run, which Donoghue paced with a personal record time of 29 minutes 58.0 seconds. The next day, Donoghue ran in the "Great Philadelphia Race," of which he was the defending champion. He and his teammate, sophomore Brian O'Keeffe, won their respective divisions, Ross the Senior Division, O'Keeffe the Junior. The following week, at the Big Five cross-country championships, Donoghue became the 5th-fastest Villanovan to run the Belmont Plateau course in Philadelphia. His 25 minutes 12.0 seconds time was only 27.6 seconds off the 5 mile course's record time, set in 1974. Donoghue was also Villanova's first finisher at the Big East Championship meet in Boston. He ran the 5 miles of that course in a personal-best time of 23 minutes 5.6 seconds. And in last Monday's IC4A championships in New York City, Ross was Villanova's 1st scorer, finishing 9th in 24 minutes 26 seconds.

Donoghue, a marketing major, hails from Oswego, N.Y., about 30 miles north of Syracuse. He attended St. John's University for 3 years, but opted to transfer out when the head track coach, as well as the assistant coach, both left for greener pastures. Fearing a downgrading in the Redmen's track program, as well as knowing of Villanova's tradition of excellence in track, he transferred here prior to the 1980-81 school year. Due to the NCAA rule on student-athletes who transfer (that they may not compete in their sport for one year from the date of transfer in any NCAA-sanctioned meet), Ross was unable to run for the Wildcats before this season. Staying in shape was a slight problem due to a lack of competitive meets in which to enter, but he was able to work out with the team last year in practices, as well as competing as an "unattached" runner in some major meets.

Donoghue attributes his success thus far to, "Don (Paige) kicking my tail" and "Always suggesting it (running in the morning and "5 miles 5 to 7 times a week")". He says it has helped him to "P.B. (personal best) by a minute a week." He feels that the pressure of replacing Sydney Maree and, to some extent, Amos Korir from last year's team is, for the most pa non-existent: "The only time I fe pressure is when I question m condition . . . that's when I feel the most."

"I feel I'm at or near my pe (as far as cross-country is co cerned this year) . . . I enjoy cros country, 'cause there's n pressure. It's more of a warm for me (for indoor and outdo track)."

Donoghue is using cros country as training for his maj events, the mile (P.B. :3 minute 58 seconds) and the 1500 meter (P.B. :3 minutes 39 seconds "Ross is really a miler, not a distance man," says Wildca Cross-Country Coach Jack Pyra "he'll run a lot of halves (hal miles), miles, 1500 meter whatever we need . . . He shou have a good indoor season . . . He shown he can run good times . . as a miler, he's got some big shoe to fill." According to Pyrah, Ro is "tough, a hard worker . . . Hi aim is to make the Olympic tea in '84."

After graduation, Donoghu plans to either remain in this are and train with the track team o return to his hometown of Oswego

Women's Football Gains Popularity

By JOHN JORDAN

The lights are on in the Villanova football stadium. The action is fast paced, aggressive and competitive. You hear shouts, curses and taunts among the players. The game is football but with a twist. It is Women's Intramural Football, which was non-existent two years ago, but now provides fun and plenty of competition for nearly one hundred girls.

The season began with 23 teams in the hunt for the championship. The person responsible for holding this league together is Pam Zurkowski. Zurkowski has to cope with the daily problems of running the league smoothly and fairly.

"The league has undergone a lot of rule changes this year," stated Pam, "so arguments are bound to happen, but most of the girls agree that they liked this year over last year."

The reasons for this preference is because the league decided to change from one hand touch to flag football. The girls like the flag system because it allows for more action. The league's other rule changes include an increase in field size, and the time for each game has been extended and each team is allowed only two varsity athletes. The biggest problem the league has encountering is the number of forfeits which has caused eight of the 23 teams to drop out.

"There have been a lot of rough edges during the season, but that is bound to happen," Zurkowski said. "I don't like to see forfeits because most of the girls want to play and it's discouraging when the other team doesn't show.

Ed Geisz is also a very important part to the league. Geisz has the difficult job of making sure things run easily during the games and giving advice to Zurkowski on league decisions. But he gives the credit to Pam.

"Pam is a great organizer and the league would not be possible without her," insisted Geisz.

The league is divided into three divisions: Groucho, Harpo and Chico, and all three are having close races. The Harpo league seems to have the cream of the crop though. The "Beavers," 5-0-0, are almost assured of a playoff spot but they are closely followed by "The Supremes," 4-1-0, and the "Mighty Mates of '84," 3-1-0. All three teams look extremely good and all three of them could make the play-offs because of the wild card system.

The Groucho league has four teams in the hunt for play-off berths. "Holbert's Hoons," 4-0-1, seem to have the upper hand as they chase for their second straight championship. "The Football Team" are second with a 3-0-1 record. Roxie's Rollers and "The Untouchables" have an outside chance at the play-offs.

The "So we Drink a Little," seems to have sewn up the Chico divisional crown with a 5-0-0 record. The "Inmates" and the surprise freshman team "Moriority" are tied with a 3-1-0 record and have an excellent shot at the play-offs.

The play-offs will begin next week, with two teams from each division gaining a play-off position and two wild cards.

"The girls seemed to have a lot of fun this year," stated Pam, "but the best is still to come."

"I think the new rule changes created more interest because we got a lot more teams to join this year and attendance has really increased," Zurkowski said.

University Shuts Down

Loss of Water Presents Hazard

By DAVID POMA and BOB HERMAN

Emergency repairs on a 42-inch water main in North Wayne forced the cancellation of all classes, reorganization of meals, and the closing down of all offices at Villanova University on Tuesday morning.

Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, received word from Father President Driscoll's office and immediately cancelled classes. To spread the news around the campus, Gallen said, "I called just about everyone I could talk to." The administration, according to Gallen, had to act quickly to avoid any difficult problems.

For example, Gallen commented that, "Les Gies did a marvelous job with the moving and serving of food." Meals were served in St. Mary's Hall and the Law School, since the water shortage affected neither building.

Eugene Ruane, director of public relations, received word from Gallen that Philadelphia Suburban Water Company was working on the pipe and that this was causing severe loss of pressure, and in some buildings a complete lack of water.

"Father Gallen told me that the water problem meant that classes had to be suspended," said Ruane. "I wondered why we didn't know about it."

Ruane then called the water company and spoke to Mr. Jerry Sacchetti, vice-president for public relations. "He told me that it was a planned repair of a broken metering device. I asked why we weren't told ahead of time, since almost 10,000 students would be affected by the cancellation of classes," said Ruane.

Ruane also questioned why no police or fire companies were notified in case of a fire.

Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., dean of students, also wondered why the water company did not notify local authorities. "We could have developed a plan of action and minimized the effect. We could have arranged a time other than in the middle of the week," said Martin.

When he learned of the problem, Martin met with Gies to arrange a plan for serving food. Martin said, "I thought if we acted quickly, we might have a fighting chance." Martin added that no meals could be served in Dougherty Hall, because the lack of water posed a serious fire hazard.

Dinner for resident students started at 3:30 p.m., one hour earlier than usual, and was served in St. Mary's Hall and the Law School. Times were staggered at 30-minute intervals. Martin explained, "It's advantageous to stagger the students, otherwise they would all come over at once and have to stand in line."

The Villanova maintenance department heard of the problem at about 9:00 a.m. Tuesday. Director of Maintenance Thomas Trucks, who was also not notified by the water company, commented, "It's only partially true that it was a scheduled repair. This morning it started to leak very badly."

Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life, contacted Martin and explained the water difficulties. Martin added, "We were concerned mainly with the bathroom situation."

Classes were cancelled, according to Martin, so that people would leave campus, and this would reduce the strain on the water system.

The maintenance department spoke with Sacchetti at the water company. Assistant Director of Maintenance Ed Meagher added, "He asked us what normal pressure was. When we told him what we were actually getting, he said it wasn't enough."

Sacchetti insisted that Villanova always had the necessary 40 pounds of pressure, but Trucks commented, "We were actually getting 10 to 12 pounds for most of the day."

He added that there was no doubt that the repair was an emergency. "Usually, when there's a scheduled repair to be made, we try to arrange it with the water company so that the repair work is done on a vacation or during the summer, so that not as many people here are affected."

In addition to the problem of low water pressure, another problem on campus developed. It became increasingly difficult to complete a telephone call, but Mrs. Jeanne O'Neill of the Dean of Students office explained, "the phone system is water-cooled, so there must be a problem there also."

Driscall was in Philadelphia at the time classes were cancelled. He said, "Normally, if the President were here, he would make the decision. Father Gallen and Ed Fenner in personnel made the decisions respectively to cancel classes and to allow the staff to go home."

Driscoll agreed with their decisions, saying, "We might as well send everyone home for a half of a day. You can't keep people around without water and toilets. Closing up was the humane thing to do."

Cancellations Caused

By BOB HERMAN and DAVID POMA

A forty-two inch water-main on Fletcher Road in north Wayne developed a leak, causing a serious drop in water pressure at Villanova University and surrounding areas on Tuesday morning.

Jerry Sacchetti, vice-president for public relations at the Philadelphia Suburban Water Company said, "The metering device is what is leaking, it is not a leak on a water-main. We do not want anyone to have the impression that it is. We shut down the water-main in order to replace a meter device that we have on that main. It was scheduled — it was not something that was just done — it was scheduled to be done today."

Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance at Villanova University said, however, "It is only partially true that it was a scheduled repair. This morning it started to leak very badly."

An unidentified spokesman at the scene said that the water company planned at least three weeks ago to repair a crack at the site on Fletcher Road.

Vice-President for Public Relations for Villanova University, Eugene Ruane questioned the Philadelphia Suburban Water Company's actions saying, "If it was planned, they should have notified us; they must have known about it. Think about the hazards that the problem presents."

Ruane was referring to the fact that that water company did not notify the Lower Merion or Radnor Township police or fire autorities.

Commenting about the possible hazards, Sacchetti said, "They were not notified because we did not feel that there would be any disruption of service whereby it would be necessary to notify them. If we thought that there would be, we certainly would have."

Deputy fire Marshal for Lower Merion Township William Weber disagrees, saying that, "if there was a large fire, it would have been questionable" if the fire department could have responded properly.

Sacchetti explained that 40 to 45 pounds of water pressure is normal for Villanova.

However, Meagher said, "We never told him that the pressure was 40 pounds. He asked us if we were getting enough water and we said no."

Trucks said, "We're actually getting pressure which is around 10 to 12 pounds, not 40 pounds. Flushing a toilet, especially on a higher floor of a building, takes at least 20 to 25 pounds of water pressure."

Dean of Students, Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A. agreed with Trucks and Ruane saying, "If we would have been informed about the water company's actions we could have developed a plan of action and minimized the effect. We could have negotiated a time other than in the middle of the week. We could have tried to do it on a weekend when the campus would not have been as affected as it was today."

Pi Sigma Alpha

There will be a general meeting of Pi Sigma Alpha on Tuesday, Nov. 17 at 12:50 in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center.

Italian Club

The Italian Club wishes to thank those who participated in Wednesday's lecture. Also, a very happy birthday to the president of the Italian Club, Al Firth.

A.C.S.

Do you live in Sugartown, Bryn Mawr Courts or at home? Do you want to become more involved at Villanova? Well, if you answered yes to these questions we have the organization for you. We are the Association of Commuting Students. We are an on-campus organization composed of off campus residents and those that live at home. The A.C.S. offers many opportunities for involvement. We sponsor contests, coffee houses, day trips, weekend trips and various other activities. We also assist fellow organizations with specific functions. If you would like to become a member attend our next general meeting which will be held on Thursday, Nov. 19, at 12:45 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema or better yet, stop by our office, Rm. 215 Dougherty between the hours of 11:30 and 1:30 p.m. Why not stop by? We could provide the jumper cables you have been looking for.

Photo Exhibit

An unusual collection of unique photographs will be shown Nov. 11-24, in the Connelly Center Art Gallery from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

The exhibit, which comes to the United Nations from the Centre Pompidou, Beaubourg in Paris, and a previous showing in the Council of Europe, deals with the 30-year history of Fourth World children and their families. They exist in all countries and are those who have been left out of the progress of the societies of which they form a part. The exhibit has considerable dramatic and emotional impact, and recalls the work of the famous photographers of the "thirties" who dramatized the plight of black share-croppers in the South and of poor white families in Appalachia.

The main goal of the photo exhibit is to open people's eyes to what many ignore or forget — that a part of society remains excluded, rejected, and often ignored because of their poverty.

A full-time worker with the International Fourth World Movement will be present daily at the exhibit to answer questions.

The official opening will take place on Sun., Nov. 15 at 2 p.m. with a reception at the Art Gallery of the Connelly Center.

There will be slide presentations and discussions on Tues., Nov. 17 at 8:30 a.m., 11:30 a.m., 3 p.m. All are welcome.

Run for Hunger

Run a few miles or sponsor a runner! The run will be held on Mon., Nov. 16, at 3 p.m. in front of Falvey Library. For more information and sponsor sheets, stop in Campus Ministry, basement of St. Rita's Hall.

Big Bro./Big Sisters

This Sunday, Nov. 15, is our third outing. We will be going rollerskating at Radnor Rink. Everyone is asked to meet at 1:30 down at the rink. The cost will be $2.75 without skates and $1.75 with skates.

Meditation

Practice the TM program and interested in learning more about it, or starting a club on campus? Such a group would involve an instructor giving an advanced lecture, checking meditation and other recreational activities. Those interested call the Philadelphia TM Center at 567-3313 and ask for Bill Fetzer or contact Ann Marie at 527-6909.

Accounting Soc.

Last meeting of the semester will feature a representative from Wharton Business School on Thursday, Nov. 19 at 12:45 in Bartley 110. Show up!

Seniors

ATTENTION SENIORS: Keep in mind that there are only 150 days until graduation celebration, Dec. 4, 8-2 p.m. at the Covered Wagon. There will be LIVE MUSIC — sponsored by Villanova University in conjunction with the Blue Key Society.

Help On Tap

CALL US AND TALK . . . Just talk about anything you want. We're H.O.T. Villanova's own PEER counseling group. Sunday-Thursday: 6-10 p.m. Phone: 645-7232 . . . take good care of each other.

Gamma Phi

There will be a brief general meeting of the Gamma Phi Honor Society on Tuesday, Nov. 17 at 12:45 in B 209. All members are asked to be present.

Bike Club

The Bike Club will hold a ten mile ride this Sunday, Nov. 15. We will leave at 2 p.m. from the rear of the Connelly Center. All Villanova students and faculty are invited to come along. This will probably be our last ride of the semester, so if you've got a bike, make some use of it for about an hour on Sunday afternoon!

Clubs & Organs.

The Belle-Air staff is again scheduling yearbook pictures of your club or organization. We ask that you submit the time or times when you are available for pictures. The yearbook staff will then contact you about specific dates and locations for pictures.

Please put the information in the Belle-Air mail box in 108 Dougherty Hall before Nov. 16. This date is important if you want your picture in the yearbook.

If a yearbook picture has already been taken, or if your organization has already made an appointment, remember to provide a copy and a list of officers and/or members.

Who's Who

All Who's Who finalists should sign-up now for a yearbook picture in the Dean of Student's Office. Please sign up by Nov. 13 so that you can meet our present deadline. Pictures will be taken on Tues., Nov. 17.

Blue Book

There are openings for two students to serve on a committee to design the Blue Book for 1982-1983. Any student interested should submit a brief resume to the Office of Student Activities, located on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

Christmas Ornament

Help us celebrate the Christmas season! Please submit your homemade ornaments which will be displayed on the Commons Lounge Christmas tree in the Connelly Center. All entries will be accepted between Nov. 30 and Dec. 4 in the Connelly Center administrative offices. Judging will take place on Dec. 7. First prize will be dinner for two at JT's restaurant and other prizes will be awarded. All ornaments may be picked up after Christmas break.

Fall Concert

Would you like a chance to enjoy an evening of great choral music? If the answer is yes, come to the Villanova Singers fall concert. The singers will be performing with the Mollay College Glee Club at 8 p.m. on Sat., Nov. 14 in the St. Mary Chapel. Admission, as always, is FREE! We are looking forward to seeing you there!

Small Bus. Devel. Center

The Small Business Development Center (SBDC) group yearbook picture will be Monday, Nov. 16 at 3 p.m. in front of Bartley Hall (facing Lancaster Ave.). All members are urged to participate in this group picture.

Cultural Film Series

Cabaret will be shown on Monday, Nov. 16 at 7:30. It is the winner of eight Academy Awards including: Best Actress, Liza Minnelli; Best Supporting Actor, Joel Grey; Best Director, Bob Fosse; and Best Music Scoring.

Cabaret is a film which mirrors the decadence of pre-war Germany and it is next in the series of Cultural Films. Admission is $1.50.

DKE Slave Auction

The second annual D.K.E. slave auction to benefit cerebral palsy will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 18, in the Day Hop cafeteria. Brothers will be auctioned off to the highest bidder, and there will be a 50c admission charge at the door. So bring your friends and buy a D.K.E. for a day!

CPR

Beta Gamma Tau is sponsoring a free CPR class to be held on Sat., Nov. 14 from 12-4 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Receive Heart Saver Certification and start a heart.

Bob Hope Tix-$12.00!!!

Tickets for Bob Hope at the Academy of Music on Tues., Dec. 1 are now available to Villanova students at the low price of $12.00!!! Come see a living legend, and help to restore a dead tradition. For more information, call Bob or Bill at 525-9169 (Room 131).

Basketball Club

There will be a Basketball Club Meeting next Thursday at 12:45. All members please attend, especially you Crakely!

Nursing Students

Are you still wondering what an alternative birthing center is? Although the water main break in Wayne cancelled the Nov. 10 S.N.A.P. meeting, it has been rescheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 17 at 7 p.m. in Bartley 209. Harriet Sharlin from the Bryn Mawr Birth Center will be speaking. Reminders — Belle Air pictures will be taken; Current stationary orders and money are due; and refreshments will be served.

I agreed and told ...ber 1 wouldn't post any more flyers," stated Granto.

For the third trip, Granto made up flyers which "were not posted but were handed out." He also ran another advertisement in the Villanovan. On Nov. 4, he received a notice of disciplinary hearing set for Nov. 6. He spoke with Joe Burke, university judicial officer, and found that an incident report had been filed by Lucyna Gorski, director of student activities. He was charged with being in violation of student code of conduct No. 15 after being contacted by Kilroy during the week of Sept. 21, and that flyers were found on campus on Oct. 26 for the third bus trip.

Student code of conduct No. 15 states: The posting or distributing of advertisements for the promotion of commercial interests is prohibited. Permission for the showing or selling of merchandise must be obtained from the director of student activities.

"Mike was told he was not permitted to advertise the trips. I referred to the flyer I had found and perhaps that is how the misunderstanding occurred. I did not say he just could not post flyers; I said he could not advertise at all. The rationale for this is that if anything happened during the trip, Villanova could be liable by the fact that the flyers were on campus. The fact that the flyers blatantly advertised alcohol complicated the problem," responded Kilroy.

"I went to talk to Miss Kilroy to try to straighten things out. I said that after she told me not to post flyers, I didn't. Then she said that a few days after talking to me she saw my ad in the Villanovan. I thought this was something totally different. She said that when she said no advertising, she meant all types of advertising," said Granto.

"The error in the date of the telephone call in the incident report was due to my own typographical error," commented Gorski. "No individual student is allowed to run trips without being sponsored by a student organization or academic department with the permission of student activities. Our reasoning is to protect the students from being cheated or hurt on these trips which are not under our supervision."

When asked about advertising such trips, Gorski stated "that students activities has control over flyer distribution, although outside advertising may be acceptable in the Villanova if it is not identified with the university."

Granto received a written warning as a result of the hearing.

Parking Fraud Uncovered

By MARY ANNE GRANGER And MELINDA MUSIAL

A number of fraudulent parking ...ickers have recently been found ... some Villanova students' cars by the Security Department.

According to Security Captain Joseph Cunnane, a Villanova student has been making and distributing these illegal stickers to students. "We got the people who used them and we got the person who was making them," said Cunnane. The person distributing the stickers, said Cunnane, "was a student. He wasn't from the outside. There were very few of the stickers being used."

Cunnane declined to say whether the student distributing the stickers had been selling them, but one of the students who bought such a fraudulent sticker told the Villanovan that he had paid $10.00 for his sticker. "I got caught," he said. "I bought a phony parking sticker in September for $10.00, which was a photo of an actual sticker, but the number had been changed."

"They went into my car and took my sticker," said the student. "I don't know if legally they had a right to, but I'm not going to fight them. I had to pay $35.00 and then I bought a real sticker."

Cunnane explained that anybody caught using a fake sticker will have his car towed and that the sticker will be removed from the vehicle.

"I'm just assuming that security got wind that there were phony stickers and made a spot check. They were very close in looks," said the student the Villanovan spoke to. "In fact, last year, I had a phony sticker for the whole year and I got away with it."

According to Cunnane, "Anybody who wants to traffic in those things will suffer the consequences. He will have his car towed and will need a parking sticker."

Cunnane said that the matter has been turned over to the Dean of Student's office and that any disciplinary action taken will be decided on by that office.

"The whole reason is financial," said the student. "The stickers went up to $30.00 this year and I haven't seen any improvements."

Equal Rights Debated

By LISA M. FEDERICO

Common Pleas Court Judge ... Richette was the guest ...aker at the Political Union ...ate on Thursday, November 5. ...chette was invited by the Union ... speak on the topic of the Equal ...hts Amendment. The debate ...menced at 7:30 p.m.

Richette began her speech with ...w statements on her personal ...kground. In the introduction ... explained that, "I will be ...aking from two perspectives; ..., as a lawyer and counsel, as a ...an. As a lawyer I feel that the ...al Rights Amendment is ...ly needed to fill a serious ...m in the whole legal doc...e of personhood, as guaranteed ...e Constitution."

The speaker yielded for ... at approximately 7:45 ... When questioned about her personal confrontations with sexual discrimination, Richette commented that, "I have felt the pressure of discrimination and known that there are not many laws to protect me." The judge was also asked about Pennsylvania's equal rights laws affecting women. She explained, "Pennsylvania is good and positive example of what can happen under the Equal Rights Amendment."

The next speaker was the Conservative Party Chairman, Tim Harrington. Harrington speaking on the E.R.A. referred to it as an unnecessary piece of legislature." He went on to call for employment according to ability rather than a quota system. When questioned on his statements concerning the federal government's role in the E.R.A., he said, "Perhaps the federal government has gone too far with its affirmative action program." This statement brought a reaction from the liberal and moderate observers, and several questions from both sections.

The Moderate Party Chairman mentioned the points against the passage of the amendment. She then went on to say, "It is not women's birthright to be protected and supported; and if the E.R.A. were to be passed, it would mean equality for both men and women."

The Liberal Party Chairman, was the final party representative to make a speech, claiming that, "the E.R.A. was a federal responsibility of necessity, and without it women are legally inferior."

The resolution passed by vote of 26 for passage 3 opposed and 2 abstentions.

Budget Proposal Tuition Based

By SHARON WINTERS

The current University budget proposal for the 1982-83 academic year is $5.4 million out of balance, according to Edward V. Murray, assistant to the president.

Components to the budget to be adjusted for the finalized version include tuition, capital needs and salaries for both academic and nonacademic employees, said Murray.

Tuition could rise approximately 10 to 12 percent, said Murray. However, Murray added that this is not a final figure. "It might have to go higher depending on how successfully we can bring the costs in line," he said.

"Most of the income (for the University) is tuition-related," Murray noted. "We are not alone in this category," he continued. Small schools lack substantial endowments and research programs, Murray explained.

"I don't see any relief at the federal level," commented the assistant to the president. Murray noted that additional state funds did not seem to be available. The University was turned down when it requested government aid to build a new dormitory. The dormitory is not part of the budget proposal since the grant was refused, he said.

The University, through the efforts of the Development Office, constantly seeks unrestricted gifts and grants from corporations and foundations for capital expenditures, Murray explained. "The need for capital improvements in the sciences is pressing," he said.

Capital equipment, ideally, should come from capital funds, Murray explained. The first phase of the Covenant, the University's capital campaign, was completed with the building of the Connelly Center, he said. The next phase of the project is to use capital raised for academic purposes, he indicated.

One of the capital needs might be in the technological needs for a projected undergraduate major:

Political Unrest Continues in N. Ireland

By MICHAEL CANTWELL

Political problems continue to occur in Northern Ireland today. A conflict exists between two political groups: the Irish Nationalists and the Protestant Loyalists.

"The Protestant Loyalists are frustrated because the British government seems to be giving up the commitment to protect them. They (Loyalists) are surrounded by Catholic states which do not seem to support the Loyalists if they would ever become one Ireland."

The Irish Nationalists are Northern Irishmen wanting a united Ireland under an Irish, rather than English, rule.

The Protestant Loyalists belong to the British political system.

"The Protestant Loyalists are frustrated because the British government seems to be giving up the commitment to protect them," commented Dr. Joseph Thompson, political science professor.

"They (Loyalists) are surrounded by Catholic states which do not seem to be supportive, and would not seem to support the Loyalists if they would ever become one Ireland."

According to Thompson, the British government has not found a way to get out of the involvemnt in Northern Ireland. "England felt that they could not let the Protestant Nationalists become united with the Irish Loyalists because chaos would result and England would be blamed; she does not want to pull out too early."

Thompson also feels that England has not stayed for economic reasons because it is costing England two million pounds a year to be there.

Thompson believes that the hunger strikers in Ireland were involved in media manipulation for wide coverage. "They had their hunger strikers send a daughter of one of the men who was going to die to appear on "Good Morning America." The little girl got on, looked into the camera, and said, "Americans have the attitude that Belfast is in flames and that someone is waiting around the corner to shoot you. The situation should be put in proper context. The media do not explain that three times as many people get killed in Philadelphia in one day."

The justice system in Northern Ireland punishes many young men and boys for violent crimes. Thompson explained that jails at the local level punish for crimes such as vandalism and throwing of fire bombs and acid. Mass prison, however, is a maximum security prison, housing men at the average ages of twenty-two to twenty-three years old, committed for the murders of police and soldiers.

Two people from Ireland, wishing to remain anonymous, gave their feelings on the troubles in their country.

A young woman from Belfast said she was constantly searched by the police. "The police would look in our bags, search our pockets and frisk us; metal detectors were used in the shops. I feels that the police and [illegible] have made the situation [illegible]

"The police have the ri[illegible] stop and search anyone and many times hassle young [illegible] with previous records," ex[illegible] Thompson. "These kid[illegible] willing to throw fire b[illegible] because they get so tired [illegible] searching and hassling."

A young man from Irela[illegible] the problems in Northern I[illegible] are very serious, stating, "I[illegible] was a war in Ireland, I'd fi[illegible] fight for the Irish governm[illegible]

"The only way the British will do anything is if the Americans take a stand and write to their congressmen."

Thompson explained that the media has been responsible for Americans' unawareness with the situation in Northern Ireland.

Classes Cancelled before Bre[illegible]

Father President Driscoll has approved the request of the Senate that classes on the Wednesday before Thanksgiving be cancelled. According to Father Lawrence Gallen, vice president for academic affairs, the main reason for the cancellation is to give students traveling time to get home. "There are so many accidents on that Wednesday," Gallen said, "this way stu[illegible] can leave a day early."

The University Senate re[illegible] asked that this practice be[illegible] 1982. But at a meeting of the presidents, Driscoll decided it should begin this year.

Although all classes are [illegible]celled on Wednesday, Nov[illegible] 25, all administrative offices [illegible] be open.

computer science. The University "might require additional funds for computer hardware" for this program, Murray noted. "We are hoping that this undergraduate degree will be approved (by the Board of Trustees)," he said.

The projected master of business administration program would also require capital input, if adopted, according to Murray.

Another component of the 1982-83 budget involves the salaries of Villanova employees. The projected faculty increase is 12.5 percent, Murray said. "I'm not sure that we will be able to keep it that high," he explained. Also, the University has to offer the staff more money, Murray continued.

The budget is likely to show an increase in the cost of parking stickers, Murray revealed. Last year the parking fees were raised five dollars across the board, he said. This year, an increase in fees is probable, at least for some individuals, Murray explained. Premium fees might be given for certain lots, he added.

ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWING Tuesday, Nov. 24

Career Center Facilities Found Inadequate

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

While the Career Development Center has experienced a steady increase in student usage and expects close to two thousand seniors to use the services next year, the facilities remain inadequate for staff, students and on-campus recruiters.

Located in the basement of Corr Hall, the Center provides undergraduate career planning and placement services for seniors and graduates. On-campus recruitment is held from October to March.

However, the image of Villanova is affected as on-campus recruiters interviewing prospective employees are subjected to cramped interviewing rooms, faulty air conditioning and heating, dim lighting and the noise from the next door laundry room. "The setting is less than ideal," agreed Mary Lou Cubbage, who is in charge of the recruiting program. "Spacewise, it is definitely not adequate. It can make a lot of recruiters uneasy and uncomfortable."

"It is very tight quarters," agreed Paul Kenney, acting coordinator. "While we believe that the recruiter is most impressed by the student, the CDC is a primary point of the setting. It definitely has an effect on the recruiter."

Despite the appearance of the center, the effectiveness of the on-campus recruitment has not been reduced, as evidenced by the increase of recruiters each year and an 80% return of the same recruiters each recruitment period.

"The fact that so many return year after year attests to the quality of the program," explained Cubbage. "This obviously means that the results are good."

Each summer, letters of invitation are addressed to various companies and firms as the Center focuses on the national trends. Accordingly, if a specific need is seen to be prevalent among Villanova students, an attempt is made to satisfy the demand.

"A lot of the time it is Villanova alumni who have established themselves in companies who interest their companies in coming here," said Cubbage. "Other sources include faculty and corporations who just call up and ask to come on campus."

"Each recruiter asks different things," continued Cubbage. "Some request basic Villanova information, others want to know about extra-curricular activities. I do believe that they understand Villanova as a whole."

To prepare for the job search and the subsequent interviews, a number of planning options are left open to the students. According to Kenney, it's a stressful time that seniors have to face.

"The idea of career planning and job search is over and above academic and personal priorities," stated Kenney. "For some, it's their first major decision. It's a transition period from the 'together' college environment to one's own independence."

The CDC sponsors numerous senior orientation processes that include resume writing, interview process and skills, job search techniques and explanations of on-campus recruitment.

According to Kenney, if a student entering his senior year has not developed a vocational plan, those who seek counseling are presented with the external market information — "what is out there. The students also look at what is rewarding and what can provide self-satisfaction.

"After we have a sense of what the student likes — his activities, interests, values, we pull it together and establish options. With all the time and money invested in an education, the student needs a good decision."

Another aid in guiding the student as to career choice is the Strong Campbell Interest Inventory Test administered and interpreted in groups. The multiple choice test pulls together similarities into six major areas in relation to careers. "Most times the test reinforces the goals and validates the framework of the students choice," explained Kenney.

Of the 144 on-campus recruitment interviews being held between October through December, approximately 54% are concerned primarily with engineering recruits and 30% seek Commerce and Finance seniors. For Liberal Arts majors and interviews for "all majors," only 13, or 9% , are being conducted; this includes four interviews by the U.S. Air Force.

Asked if it would be more beneficial to recruiters and students alike to have separate career centers for each college and its major programs, Cubbage said no. "The recruiters like it centralized. For instance, if the recruiter wants to see both business and engineering prospects, he wants to avoid the extra trip and duplication."

Presented with the low statistics concerning recruitment of students other than those from C & F and Engineering, Cubbage outlined that while the effort is made to contact those companies who employ generally Liberal Arts majors, many companies and firms won't go to the expense. "The Liberal Arts major must work a lot harder and depend on independent resources. They have to be more 'energetic' in job search techniques."

"We are swamped right now," said Kenney. "This is the 'peak period'. If any student came in now for independent help, he would have a week and a half wait. Students should start planning as early as possible."

At the present, there is an opening for director of the CDC, a role Kenney is filling for now. According to Kenney, there is no set time by which the position must be filled. "Hopefully, that person will come in, look at the area space and make a few decisions that will improve the resources."

Concerning revisions for the CDC as a whole, Kenney hesitated, then said he would definitely like to see the waiting area for students be more than a corridor that the interviewees stare at while waiting their turn.

Asked her ideas concerning improvement of the CDC, Cubbaged cited a response to a questionnaire that each recruiter returns after the interview, a response that according to Cubbage, is all too frequent.

This recruiter wrote, "the facilities are unacceptable . . . . cramped . . . . the room is not conducive to a relaxed environment. Villanova should look into providing better interviewing space."

Greek Housing is Unfair

The Inter-Fraternal Council (IFC) is currently formulating a plan, with the approval of the Resident's Life Staff, which would enable fraternities and sororities to occupy entire wings of Villanova dormitories. Not only is this plan unwise, but unfair as well.

The plan, which would take effect starting with the 1982-83 academic year, would set aside certain dormitory wings and perhaps entire dorms, for the exclusive habitation of fraternity and sorority members. For instance, there could be an all DKN-wing in Sheehan or an all LXA-wing in Sullivan.

Regardless of how much this might serve to "develop a feeling of community brotherhood and sisterhood," as stated by Susan Tronolone in last week's issue of the Villanovan, it is an unsound proposal for a number of reasons.

First, the proposal is grossly unfair to the vast majority of Villanova students who do not belong to a fraternity or a sorority. Only ten percent of the over 6,000 students are members of one of these organizations; if this plan is implemented, any off-campus fraternity or sorority member would be able to move into an on-campus housing facility. Why should this special privilege be afforded to "Greeks" when there are countless students languishing on waiting lists, and many others who cannot even get on the lists?

Second, the fraternities and sororities by their very natures are isolated groups within a university. Their members tend to associate almost exclusively with one another as it is. By providing these people with their own dorm wings, the University will only be promoting and augmenting further "Greek" clannishness to the detriment of the over-all sense of the Villanova community.

Last, the entire lottery system for housing would have to be re-vamped to accommodate the special interests of these groups. The sheer logistics involved are astounding. The lottery is already iniquitous, complicated and ill-managed — any further tampering with it would only serve to make it worse.

Obviously, the IFC plan for exclusive Greek housing was not well thought out. No one would benefit from it. What the IFC should do, besides abandoning the whole proposal, is explore alternative housing for its members which do not infringe upon the rights of every other Villanova student.

University Action Proves Wise

The loss of water to Villanova's campus took everyone by surprise on Tuesday.

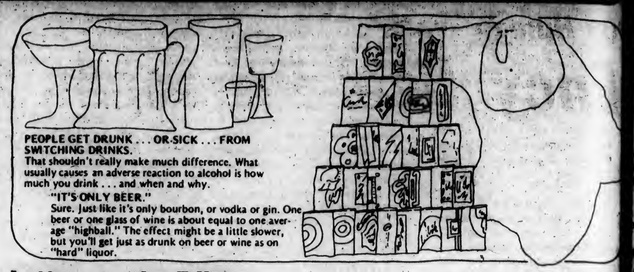
No one was notified by the Philadelphia Suburban Water Company, including the local fire and police departments.

Considering the potential dangers this could have caused, Villanova's administration acted wisely, but more important, they acted quickly.

Besides the obvious health hazard presented by a lack of water, the danger of a fire spreading on campus was imminent. Holding classes in such a situation would have been foolish.

In its actions, the University was trying to eliminate as many people from the campus as possible. It was effective in its actions.

The administration should be commended for its efforts.



PEOPLE GET DRUNK . . . OR SICK . . . FROM SWITCHING DRINKS.
That shouldn't really make much difference. What usually causes an adverse reaction to alcohol is how much you drink . . . and when and why.

"IT'S ONLY BEER."
Sure. Just like it's only bourbon, or vodka or gin. One beer or one glass of wine is about equal to one average "highball." The effect might be a little slower, but you'll get just as drunk on beer or wine as on "hard" liquor.

Letters to the Editor

Patriot Asks V.U. Support

We, the commuting students of Villanova, are expected to park softly and carry a big parking sticker. But now, after another increase in the parking fee, now is the time for barking about parking.

I refuse to pay $30 for a Villanova parking sticker which entitles me to a parking space when I arrive early enough to find one. As a freshman last year, I was suckered into paying $25 for parking at that time, and my only excuses were conformity and sheer ignorance of the situation. But after a year of dealing with the laughable instruments of Villanovan bureaucracy — the "guards" and yes, even the Radnor Township police — I have come to grips with the real issue.

The real issue, my fellow students, is that all cars are created equal, and that each car deserves the right of a parking space when its owner pays for it. My car has been denied that right on many occasions, so I as the owner, have used unorthodox means of ensuring life, liberty, and the pursuit of parking space for my vehicle. Yes, my friends, I too have parked next to the cursed tree which the fire marshal believes will burn down someday. I have also parked next to the Septa depot, at the risk of my car going to jail and me paying the bail for it.

I cannot call myself a real parking lot patriot, for a real patriot would say "Give me parking lot or give me ticket." I wasn't about to let it go that far. I fled the parki lot, and I have since found a sta on which I can practice freedom to park. Thus, I merely a dissident in exile, watches his fellow countryme pay an outrageous tax for illogical reason at all. Why, a from the lack of vehicle rig there is certainly no natio defense. "Security" couldn't c less about your car getting st napped or injured; that isn't th job. Security's only job is to p on patriots, whom they c "violators," and possibly to pi on defenseless tourists.

So Friends, Romans, and Vil novans — lend me your suppo and become a patriot. Thank y

Vandals Dismay Alumnus

Dear Editor:

I am writing to express my dismay at the vandalism which has occurred on campus according to issues of The Villanovan published in September of 1981. I recall reading similar articles which I believe were published in September of 1980, and I should have written a letter at that time.

I am a 1971 graduate of Villanova. I do not always agree with decisions made by my University, but I have always held a great deal of pride for it. As a student at Villanova, I enjoyed a "good time" as much as anyone. However, there must be limitations to "recreation" based at least on common sense and common courtesy. The evidence of recent vandalism makes me hesitant to recommend Villanova University to high school students or their parents. I never thought I would be in this position.

I see where the students are in an uproar concerning the accounting done in allocating the repair costs to the student body. I fully agree that these costs should explained honestly and comple ly. I have to believe that the v dalism was caused by a sm minority of students. (At least t is what I want to believe.) I h that the rest of the stude realize the senselessness of v dalism, and appreciate negative impact it has on Vil nova's reputation. They should in an uproar directed towards elimination of all vandalism.

Sincer

Encyclical Proposes New Economics

"The Vicar of Christ ... not care to walk on the supply ..."
Nicholas von Hoffman

If one were restricted to reports the media during John Paul II's visit to the United States two years ago, one would get the distinct impression that the Pope's social concerns involve exclusively sexual issues. Abortion, contraception, pre-marital sex, women priests, and married priests dominated discussions of the visit. At the time, Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C., president of a small mid-western Catholic university, chided the press for ignoring the far more important social issues being mentioned by the Pope. Although continually mentioned in his public addresses, John Paul's views on world peace, hunger and economic justice were virtually ignored by the press.

Papal Economics

Perhaps all of this will rightly change with the publication of John Paul's recent encyclical, Laborem Exercens ("On Human Work"). Running as it does against the wind of Reaganomics, this encyclical has the potential to change drastically American Catholic economic thinking. If it is given the public attention and media coverage of the encyclicals on human sexuality, Laborem Exercens promises to challenge non-Catholic thinking as well. If there can be one conclusion drawn from this document, it is that John Paul II most certainly rejects the laissez-faire, free market capitalism which we have come to associate with orthodox Reaganomics.

Before my friends and colleagues in the Economics Department accuse me of engaging in armchair economics, we need to clear about the claims made in Laborem Exercens. John Paul makes very few claims in Economics. For example, he says little about the efficiency of supply-side economics. Rather, the Pope is troubled by the assumptions made by such economic theories and by the ends toward which these theories aim. His claims, then, are not in economics, but about economics. Accordingly, John Paul's credentials as a philosopher are not out of place in this endeavor.

Community Stressed

Specifically, John Paul is troubled by the assumptions concerning the nature of human life and human work which underlie laissez-faire, free market capitalism. Free-market capitalists, from Adam Smith to David Stockman, assume that humans are atomistic individuals motivated solely, or primarily, by their own self-interest. This self-interest, in turn, is understood as materialistic well-being (the pursuit of profits). The Pope rejects these assumptions or, rather, this way of looking at humans, on all accounts. Man is not an atomistic individual, he is a social being whose life is intricately and inescapably connected with the lives of others. The community, not the individual, is the foundation of our humanity. The capitalist view of human motivation in terms of material self-interest is an inappropriate and unnatural as the family member who asks, before changing the baby's diaper, "Why should I do this? What's in it for me?" On John Paul's view, if humans are to understood as being motivated by self-interest at all, it is not the self-interest of more and better creature-comforts, but interests in developing and fulfilling the whole person. Human life has value and meaning beyond its use in the production of goods and services. The goal of economics, according to the Pope, is not simply the production and distribution of goods and services; it is the production of goods and services which respects the dignity of each human person as a moral, spiritual, and social being.

Materialism Rejected

John Paul rejects the policies of Ronald Reagan for much the same reasons that he rejects Marxist policies. Both Reagan and Marx understand society primarily in economic terms. Society ought to be organized according to principles of production and distribution. Reagan and Marx differ only in regards to what those principles ought to be (i.e., how we ought to organize the means of production and distribution). John Paul calls both Marxist and capitalist economic systems "materialism," ("theoretical" and "practical" materialism respectively) and tells us that the "error of materialism" is that it "directly or indirectly includes a conviction of the primacy and superiority of the material, and directly and indirectly places the spiritual and the personal in a position of subordination to material reality."

Purpose Of Work

Some rather specific implications follow from this more abstract beginning. Work should not be simply the place where one goes to earn a wage. The workplace must be designed to encourage the person to develop the potentialities and abilities which distinguish humans from machines. Employees, both blue-collar and professional, have rights other than merely the receipt of just compensation for their labor. They are to be treated as more than mere means for acquiring maximum return on investment, and are entitled to a job "in accordance with the capacities of individuals." The purpose of work is not to earn wages (to purchase the time with which we can do those things which are important to us); work should be that very activity which is important to us. Work functions to develop the human person.

Like Leo XIII and Pius XI before him, John Paul II's economic encyclical rejects the assumption that the "market mechanism" can provide for the just production and distribution of economic goods. To leave such things to the abstract fiction of the "market", is to ignore our own responsibilities for rational planning to insure social justice. Whatever else it might be, Smith's "invisible hand" is not the one reaching out to Adam depicted by Michaelangelo on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel.

Community Ownership Defended

The Pope also has some interesting things to say about private property. John Paul defends the right of private ownership of many things, e.g., one's own home, food, clothes, tools, etc. However, the Pope has other thoughts when it comes to ownership of the means of production. Natural resources, factories, technology, and concepts all might justifiably be socialized. This type of property is better understood as community inheritance (inherited from God, in the case of natural resources, from earlier generation in the case of factories, technology, concepts) than as individual creations or property. Under "suitable conditions," John Paul would endorse socializing this type of property. The human community has the final responsibility for the use fo this property so, even if ownership remains in private hands, control ought to rest with the community.

Family — Economy Linked

One final economic implication of the Pope's view of human nature concerns the economics of family life. Unlike Jerry Falwell, John Paul does not blame the decline of the family on pornography, permissiveness or the women's movement. John Paul does lament a break-up of family ties, but sees this as having straightforwardly economic causes. Given that consumer demands go beyond simple economic necessities (an increased demand which, by the way, the Pope sees as caused or encouraged by producers themselves), single working-parent households are virtually impossible. Economic demands force both parents out of the house and into the job-market. The results are that children are separated from parents, spouse from spouse, individuals from family. One solution would be to insure that wages remain at a level which can allow families to remain together. In John Paul's words, "Just renumeration for the work of an adult who is responsible for a family emans renumeration which will suffice for establishing and properly maintaining a family and and for providing security for its future." The Pope then suggests that this can be accomplished either by a single salary which is sufficient for the needs of an entire family, or by "family allowances or grants" to parents who remain at home to raise the children. Although John Paul's implicit reliance on traditional sex-roles suggests that it is the woman who should stay at home, at other points in the encyclical he defends the rights of women to pursue careers outside of the family. Either way, these views are opposed to an Administration which does not support a minimum wage, and makes drastic cuts in welfare payments.

Perhaps it should come as no surprise that a Catholic Pope would take such positions. Catholics have always defended the view of social man found in such writers as Aristotle and Thomas Aquinas, and rejected the view of individual atomistic man found in Luther, Hobbes and, through them, in Adam Smith and modern capitalism. Perhaps we should be more surprised by our own reaction to these views. Would they not be treated as radical and alien by most of us? Perhaps all of this will rightly change.

External Change Alters Lives

This past Tuesday, Villanova students experienced an event which even the visit of a Pope to this area could not accomplish: a day off from school. The act surrounding the stoppage of water to Villanova is cataclysmic in its own right, but the underlying impact it has on everyone involved is far reaching in its broadest sense. Perchance for some, it is a time of reflection on how quickly our lives can be altered by our external environment.

The suddenness in which the loss of the water main breakage touched all of us, and the speed in which it disrupted our lives, can perhaps be related to other events which have touched our lives, can perhaps be related to other events which have touched our lives. The "earth shattering" news of this past Tuesday of the very least could make us reflect on our day to day happenings. Much right on the news it is not uncommon for the loss of members, spouse, and homes. The question is, are we being conditioned to accept change as a nonchalant happening of our lives?

Does not the suddenness of learning of last Tuesday's experience relate in some way to the suddenness in which people of earlier years received the news of the bombing of Pearl Harbor, the deaths of the Kennedys, or in just the recent past, the shootings of President Reagan and Pope John-Paul II and the assassination of Anwar al Sadat? Our society is too often subjected to sudden change. In most instances, being able to cope with sudden change places incredible stress on all of us, luckily in the case of Tuesday's "holiday" the general consensus of most people affected was one of happiness, but one can only parley the feeling that sudden change will continue to affect our lives, and it is something which we all must accept.

Should students have a Bill of Rights? If so, what should it include?

Yes we should. The Bill of Rights should give us more knowledge as to how the University is run, what is in the future for Villanova, and whether we (the students) can have input through the Bill of Rights.

All Students Are Not Rich

Dear Editor:

This letter is in reference to the article from last week's Villanovan entitled "College Costs Force Changes." The article was interesting and I commend Dr. Mathis and Dr. Jones on their work. However, I was quite disturbed with the statement in which Dr. Jones was quoted as saying "Villanova students are rich." I am sure Dr. Jones' research supports the fact that the majority of Villanova students are from wealthy families, but blanket statements such as this are irresponsible, and I feel unprofessional.

For the many students who indeed are not "rich," reading this article was adding insult to injury in light of increased annual costs. It is felt that it is this attitude concerning students' wealth which results in increases being approved without much concern for the outcome. As this attitude becomes more prevalent it will be easier for administrators to increase fees rather than seek saving alternatives. Being a ber of the University Senate et Committee, as well as a rich" student, I hope that nova will strive to improve area of cost-consciousness alise that many students hav rificed very much to come Meeting these annual increas not as easy as this article de

I am writing in response to the article "College Costs Force Changes" (Nov. 6, 1981). I was delighted to hear, according to Dr. Brian Jones, that "Villanova students are rich." Prior to reading the article, I was worried about increased tuition bills for next year. Now, I suddenly discover that I am rich.

Which students were the subjects for Dr. Jones' studies? Most of the people I have talked to were also surprised to hear about their sudden wealth. According to the Villanova University Mission Statement, "Villanova attempts to enroll students with diverse ... economic ... backgrounds." Yet Dr. Jones seems to feel we are all on the same (high) economic level.

Contrary to Dr. Jones' view, increasing college costs will be a serious deterrent to lower and middle class families, especially when the student is paying for his or her own education. Like others, I have serious about whether I will be able ford Villanova's tuition inc next year. With federal cuts to financial aid and incr college costs, the wealthy soon be the only ones who nance a college education. In more years Villanova stu may indeed be rich.

Theresa Marches,

Board Decision Defended

Dear Father Driscoll:

Over the last few months I have followed with a great amount of interest the "controversy" over the decision of the Board of Trustees to discontinue the varsity football program at Villanova University.

I must admit that the controversy puzzles me. Where were all the alumni who were upset over "dropping" football when really serious issues involving the academic development of the school arose? Did they ever get together to pool their financial resources and endow a chair to the university? Did they ever get concerned about the quality of life on campus and write to you with suggestions of how to improve it? No.

But, when the football program was dropped, alumni that you had never heard of started complaining and threatening to withhold financial support from the university. I do not see any reason for their reaction.

First of all, the alumni (and some of the students) seem to be complaining that the Board of Trustees made its decision without due notice to the world. Actually, I do not think that the Board of Trustees has any legal or moral obligation to give notice to the world prior to the making of any decision. The Board only has the responsibility to study a matter prior to making a decision. And I have no doubt that the Board did study this matter very seriously. On many occasions members of the Board indicated to students, the media, and alumni that the matter was thoroughly investigated before a decision was made. But even more than that, I remember how many times this matter was studied during the early 70's by the student body itself, and even by the faculty, and suggested to the Board by the University Senate. The decision was made with full knowledge of the facts.

This brings me to my second point that I want to make to you, regarding the involvement of the University Senate in the decision. In the October 23, 1981 issue of The Villanovan, in its editorial, alleges that the University Senate failed to consider the "decision to drop Villanova's football program." The editorial further states "that the Senate will never possess any real power unless it begins to assert itself."

Having been in the Senate and watched it develop in the first five years of its life, I must admit that I find the editorial totally out of touch with reality. The Senate not only has asserted itself but it has definitely shaped the course of development of the university in the past decade. Almost every single decision of your administration has in some way or another been suggested by the Senate in the past. A lot of the research necessary to reach such decisions was done by the Senate in the past. It is unfortunate that student opinion of university institutions is based on the short knowledge of two or three the university environme students want to become journalists; they must be look in the past, researc course of an idea and see evolved over the years.

As you may know, I hav always been a supporter decisions of the Board of Tr of Villanova University. I do however, that the decision t football was a decision ma sound financial reasons.

Over the last five years, kept away from university because I consider myself outsider, without the abil analyze the facts in dept spend the necessary researc that would lead to a f "critique" of Villanova's a However, I could not stan watch all this rather unreas criticism being raised again university at this time. I am to be an alumnus of Vil University and I shall alw proud of that, whatever d tions of the Board of Truste be. The members of the Boa after all, the few who kno according to Socrates opinion is the one that we listen to, rather than the of the many.

With best wishes for suc your efforts to help the uni I remain,

Where Do Women Belong?

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a four-part series dealing with women. The purpose of this series is to shed light on how women are viewed in the 1980's. In future weeks, the Villanovan will discuss the transition of women coming onto the campus and the Equal Rights Amendment. The series will be written objectively. Any conclusions and opinions can be drawn by the reader.

By KATHY SCANLON

One of the most prevalent issues in today's society is the debate over ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment. The decision finally reached regarding ERA will be one that will greatly affect our careers, family life and future. The ERA is the subject of many heated and controversial discussions.

One such discussion took place on "The Jane Whitney Show" on Friday, Nov. 6. The guest speaker was Mrs. Bea Barrett, state co-chairperson to stop ERA.

Jane Whitney pointed out that while almost everyone has an opinion on the ERA, only 15 percent of the people actually know what it says. The ERA states:

Equality of Rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex. The Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article. This amendment shall take effect 2 years after the date of ratification.

Barrett, who since 1972 has been campaigning against ERA, states that she is for equality, but not for the concept of no distinction between the sexes. There is a difference. She favors the support law. "Under the Support Law, the husband has the primary obligation to support his wife and children. This was passed previously by state legislators who realized the value of the woman in the home. With her contribution of bearing and caring for children, the husband is free to go out and earn a living to support them."

"ERA will say that the wife has to contribute financially to the family ... It will take away our right to be supported by our husbands and our children's rights to be supported by our husbands."

The audience responded emphatically. It was argued that homemakers have never been better off since the state ERA was passed in Pennsylvania ten years ago. The homemaker benefits more than any other group of women because her rights for the first time are substantiated. What the homemaker does in the home is translated into real economic terms.

In an ongoing marriage there is nothing which guarantee the women support by her husband. Only when divorce is eminent is the idea of support taken seriously. Also, it was argued that husbands often default on their support payments and women are left with no recourse.

"Equality of Rights' evaluates everyone's contribution to the marriage and gives them status for it. Support should be based on who needs it, who can give it, not just on sex," stated one audience member.

Barrett maintained her position and replied, "Women have lost the right to be supported by their husbands due to ERA. She is equally liable to the support of her family, and in fact, her husband. This is not an advantage to women.

"The way it stands now millions of women work, but they contribute an average of about 25 percent of the income, which still makes the husband the primary breadwinner. The Support Law never prohibited women who choose to work from doing so, but it did protect the woman who was secure in her home from being forced out into the work force. Under the ERA, the woman is more dependent on her husband because he can decide he wants her to work and contribute to the family support and the law will be behind him."

One woman asked the common question, "How can women be expected to contribute equally when they earn an average of 59 cents to every dollar a man earns?" A wave of applause followed her question.

Barrett explained, "That figure is gotten by adding up all men's salaries and then women's and figuring out the average. However, women spend less total time in the work force due to time taken off for the family. So the figure is naturally going to be lower."

Aside from financial support, the draft was a major topic of the program. As might be expected, Barrett did not feel women should be considered for the draft. She asserted that in our history, Congress has never seen fit to draft women. If we had ERA, Congress would no longer have the right to exempt women from the draft. The majority of the American people don't want to see anyone drafted and certainly not women. "Men are better able to defend themselves and defend the country than women are ... The average man is taller, stronger, faster, heavier and has more stamina than the average woman." Jane Whitney asked, "Are you predicting your decision on the assumption that all drafting means active combat? Women will not necessarily be placed on the front line. A great many jobs are civilian."

The response from audience members and Barrett was that past wars have involved a great deal of active combat. It is naive to think women will not be placed in combat roles.

Overall, the audience was very divided in their opinions. Several sided with Barrett that the ERA would be harmful, a disadvantage, or just unnecessary. These women saw things fine as they were.

Others, however, feel that to turn down ERA is to turn back the sexual revolution. Things will be the way they were. These women feel ERA is a necessary addition to the constitution. As one woman put it, "I have no guarantee that my husband will never leave me, will never drop dead, will never have a disabling accident. I need a guarantee that me or my daughters will be taken care of. And the world is not that way. Therefore, I need equal rights."

Barrett concluded the program with these comments: "The Women's Suffrage Bill took 14 months to ratify. ERA has not yet been in eight years because the American people don't want it to be. ERA will not be ratified."

Players Express 'The Now'

By PAULA C. GARELL

Last Thursday night at 6:30, when most students were rushing home to dinner, there was a small group of students in the basement of Vasey exploring feelings and ideas about Hunger Awareness.

This group is known as the Contemporary Improvisational Players of Villanova University. There are about ten members in the group, including Dr. Joan D. Lynch (assistant professor, theatre) who acts as a guide for the players.

Dr. Lynch describes the group as an "exploration of feelings in current events," through the use of unscripted theatre, both verbal and nonverbal. Their themes are very topical; they deal with the "now." "The Improvisational Theatre is not a particular artists vision," Dr. Lynch points out, "it is a group's vision." It is an expression, an idea which grows out of each student's participation and interpretation.

Improvisation is very metaphorical, which allows for a lot of creativity on the part of the player and the audience. Improvisation has very few limitations, one can explore an idea to its fullest — symbols, nonverbal communication, props — are all accepted forms used by the players.

This kind of theatre is a chance for students to freely voice their feelings about a topic, with support and respect from fellow players. When observing an improvisation, one tends to feel like a voyeur, peeping through the window of someone's private life. However, the audience's reactions can be very influential on an improvisation. There are no scripts to follow, so the audience acts as a sounding board to the group's thoughts, and can influence the player's actions.

Villanova's Improvisational group began about two years ago as an outgrowth to Dr. Lynch's class: Improvisation and the Theatre. Their first performance was for Honor's Junior Week in the spring of 1980, with the theme of the "Me Culture." Dr. Lynch has watched the group change each year. "Each group has its own identity; it is interesting to see the students' change in attitude from year to year," says Dr. Lynch.

This year, the group is preparing for a Nov. 19 performance on the theme of Hunger Awareness, to be held in Dougherty Hall.

A "NewMarket" Displays Philly At Its Best

By CYNTHIA KUBALA

What is a new market? Have you ever seen or been to one? At first thought, one might suspect it to be an outdoor market found along side streets, filled with wooden carts of oranges, tomatoes, and freshly caught crabs. You know, the kind of market that has so much fruit around that you wonder whether or not it will all get sold or if any of it is even fresh! The market located on Second Street in Philadelphia is unlike this; it is fairly large, modern, and full of stores that range from clothing to crafts.

The square the market is located on has been reborn almost two hundred years after its birth with new shops, new restaurants, and a new name. In 1769, Philadelphia was a growing city with colonial men and women traveling about the streets between Pine and Lombard tending to their chores and shopping. A new market was built to provide for their needs. It was one of the first suburban shopping malls in the history of the United States.

Today, the market is known as NewMarket. Streets once made of cobblestone have been replaced by cement. Nevertheless, the buildings have maintained a mixture of architectures including the modernism of American structures, the symmetrical shapes of the Georgian style, the tall and narrow buildings which characterize the Victorian period and the features of Federal architecture where prominent cornerstones hover over the arches on the windows.

The Pavilion has stores that range from carrying the latest silk designs imported from the Orient to fashions for men with classical tastes in clothing. Picture yourself a rich navy blue, pin-striped, three-piece suit offset by a white long-sleeved shirt and finished with a pair of black leather Florsheims.

Passing through the Pavilion, one is overwhelmed by the sweet aroma of cinnamon coming from a cafe. Upon entering it, you'll discover delicious-tasting, hot apple cider.

Eateries and craft shops make up the building called Old Court. There is something here for everyone. Italian specialties, Portuguese and English styles of dining are all offered. And again, the tempting smell from a cookie shop is too irresistible to pass up!

For you stereo buffs, the David Mann Audio is also located in Old Court and has won Philadelphia Magazine's "Best of Philly" for its fine stereo equipment and expert advice.

If you happen to be interested in some of the history of old Philadelphia, an area not to miss is the Bake House Museum, now the site of Archaeology at NewMarket. This contains a collection of some of the most unusual artifacts that were found and preserved during NewMarket's restoration.

Two colonial-looking buildings on the west side of Second Street comprise the rest of the restaurants in the square. One provides a taste of the famous French crepes while another puts you in the old Victorian setting, serving its customers on an open patio.

NewMarket offers a variety of interests whether you're into gourmet dining, extravagant clothes or just along to window shop. It even permits the historical-minded to enjoy old and new Philadelphia at its best!

Life's Fluid Still Scarce

By KATHI A. IANNACONE

With the price of gold and silver surfacing at record highs, how could something as simple as blood be considered as the most precious natural resource? This is because blood, that universal fluid of life, can be scarce in individuals requiring hospital care.

Although blood is scarce, it is available to all who need it regardless of their economic status, ability to donate, place of residence or membership in a specific group. To meet the total needs of the community the Red Cross collects over 270,000 pints of blood a year.

To assist the Red Cross in providing this service, the APO service fraternity is sponsoring their bi-annual blood drive. In the past few weeks APO has stopped advertising and recruiting donors only long enough to eat, sleep and attend classes. But the "brothers" do not do it just because all APO fraternities run blood drives around the country, they do it because giving of themselves to aid other is what living is about.

The members of the Villanova community are integral to APO's efforts since blood only comes from people; it cannot be manufactured.

Without a doubt, everyone is scared about giving blood for the first time. Most donors admit that there is a slight sting when the needle is inserted, but otherwise, the procedure is painless and quick. After the initial tests of temperature, hemoglobin, pressure and medical histories are taken, the actual blood donation takes only about seven to ten minutes.

The fact that other people give blood does not mean that every individual's blood is not needed. The demand for blood and blood products is constantly increasing.

In the Penn-Jersey region alone, nearly 1,450 pints must be collected each day to meet the demands of the hospitals. It is the goal of APO to provide the Red Cross with 450 of these pints.

The average adult has 10 to 12 pints of blood in his body. Less than a pint (450 ml) is all that is taken. According to the Red Cross, within a few hours, the volume donated will have been replaced by a new blood cells which are constantly being manufactured.

Convenience plays a part in the APO drive. It is their purpose to provide the students with a comfortable, local surrounding. The use of the West Lounge provides a well-known "safe" area for the donating.

The American Red Cross blood services is a non-profit organization that serves as a liaison between the hospital and the community, and the patient and the donor. Serving 113 hospitals, it assumes the responsibility for collecting, processing and distributing volunteer-donated blood.

Each part of the blood that is donated is ABO grouped and typed, and tested for the Hepatitis-B antigen. Some of the pints are fractioned into its various components parts that the specific patients needs.

As members of the Villanova community the American Red Cross feels that each person bears the responsibility of reaching out and helping to restore others to good health. Giving blood is a safe, simple process which can lead the community to possess, in abundance, their most precious natural resource.

Education Reaches Another Stage

By MAX LEVINS

There are 24 million Americans who are 65 or older, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. The Bureau estimates that at the end of the century, 32 million people will be in that group, and by the year 2020, the figure may swell to 50 million. The National Institute on Aging and groups like the Grey Panthers have pointed out that many of these citizens with active minds and in good physical health feel frustrated because there are only limited avenues open to them for greater self-expression. They say the problem is particularly important since many senior citizens feel alienated because they are forced to associate only with their peer groups, with little opportunity for interchange of ideas with younger people. Many older citizens are seeking to advance themselves educationally and culturally, for the benefit of both themselves and the community.

Eight years ago, Villanova University recognized this need and established a tuition-free program for senior citizens, as a community service, according to Beverly Schorr, director of adult programs at the school. Schorr, who enrolled at Villanova at age 36 and earned both her bachelor's and master's degrees in counseling, cited instances of women in their sixties who had gone through the traditional roles of marriage and motherhood and had never had opportunities for career advancement. She also speaks about men who married, went into the Armed Services and who for many years were locked into jobs they hated. Both groups had never tested their potential or had the opportunity to find out who they really were. "You can't waste a whole natural resource," exclaimed Schorr. She feels Villanova is supporting this search for human identity.

This semester there are 50 senior citizens on campus. Many have earned degrees, some are working toward degrees and others who hold terminal degrees are taking courses they never had time to pursue. Outstanding among these is Frank Sgro, who received his undergraduate degree when he was in his seventies. In every case, Schorr felt the greatest need was for the senior citizen to feel like a part of the community.

"It is one thing to study history and talk about World War II, or the depression, in the abstract, but it is another thing to have someone there who has lived through it and can talk about it from experience."

"The adult student or senior citizen brings a dimension to the Villanova classroom that is invaluable. The traditionally aged student is not going out to a world that is homogeneous. He is going to have to deal with people of different age groups," points out Schorr. "It is one thing to study history and talk about World War II, or the depression, in the abstract, but it is another thing to have someone there who has lived through it and can talk about it from experience."

The senior citizen has related well to the student body, and Schorr finds it most interesting to see them lunching together at the Connelly Center and discussing mutual school problems.

Schorr's greatest source of pride in the five years since she has been in charge of the program was her role in the development of the senior adults' group on campus called the "Retreads." She recognized that, despite their diverse backgrounds, they had one thing in common: "They were older students in a world with which they were unfamiliar. They needed support and they needed a feeling of belonging to the community at large and to the Villanova University family." Schorr, with a group of interested mature students, and with the support of Villanova, formed this organization, similar to other student groups on campus. This group is unique in that it is probably the only one of its kind on a college campus in this area, according to Schorr. They have meetings where they have speakers come in to address the group from different school departments, and these meetings are open to all of the student body. As Schorr points out, "It is interesting to see the young students coming in; their interests are the same as the older students. One of the psychology professors was talking about how to handle stress, and the 18- and 20-year-old students were sitting right there, interested and very much involved in the proceedings. If you are in a learning environment, how much difference does it make if you are 20, 40, 60, or 80?"

The senior citizen also acts as a role model for the traditional student, states Schorr. "Just because one phase of your life is over, that is the working phase, it does not mean you are going to sit home and become glued to the boob tube. It gives them an understanding for another stage of life."

By the year 2025 most members of the class of 1982 will be retired. What will you do with the next four decades? What contributions can you make toward a more efficient and safe technology for society in the 21st century?

When the 21st century rolls in, most of you will be at the height of your careers. Tomorrow's leaders in business, government, and education need the specialization of a master's degree to deal with tomorrow's advanced technology.

Drexel realizes that technology is an innovation of man to be used in the best interests of mankind. It is an extension of man's capabilities, not a substitution for them. You are invited to expand your capabilities through graduate study at Drexel.

Most of the Master's programs are offered on both a part-time and full-time basis. The graduate curricula and degrees offered by Drexel are as follows:

COLLEGE OF BUSINESS AND ADMINISTRATION	DEGREE:
Business Administration	MBA, M.S., Ph.D.
Executive Management Program	MBA (Saturday's only)

ZAPPA OOZES INTO TOWER

The Torture Never Stops

By AMY MacLACHLAN

"I'm gross and perverted/ I'm obsessed and deranged/I've existed for years/But very little has changed."

And so Frank Zappa sums up himself and his music in the song I'm the Slime, from Overnight Sensation, released in 1973. Zappa and his seven man band can be described as nothing short of completely unique. His performance at the Tower Theater early last week was easily two of the most electric hours of music in the area so far this year.

The concert begins with the audience paying homage to the man on the stage. They come forth bearing gifts and messages. These include items such as hats, women's underwear and other unnameable articles and comments. He accepts all of them and hands them to his six-and-a-half-foot tall bald genie attendant who neatly puts them away. All the while the band plays a song.

'I'm gross and perverted,
I'm obsessed and deranged,
I've existed for years,
But very little has changed.'

The concert as a whole was incredible. The band acts as a three-ring circus of sorts. Two keyboard players, three guitarists (not including Frank), a drummer and a person who is solely in charge of percussion (i.e., the Zings, Zaps, Bongs, Pings, Wows, etc., with which every tune is replete) make up the machine that is so finely tuned and together it becomes ever apparent that a master is behind the wheel.

The entire two hour score is well planned in advance and executed without flaw or a second of silence between selections. Zappa, does not get any solid applause during the concert. The audience claps wildly at the beginning and at the end and in the middle, they are to sit and watch quitely. The feeling one gets is that Zappa could care less if you like it as an individual, he knows it's good and that is what matters. If you have a weak stomach or a hang-up about the use of profanity, DO NOT GO TO SEE FRANK ZAPPA. But if you are a basically open-minded person and are willing to take his lyrics and ideas lightly, you should be in for an excellent entertainment because that is what Frank Zappa is above all else — an extremely gifted entertainer. He's so cool.

Check Out East Side Story

By PAUL DURAND

The East Side Club in Philadelphia is virtually the only consistent showcase in the area for new progressive rock acts, including the current ongoing British invasion.

On Thursday, October 14th, Liverpool psychedelia invaded Philadelphia in form of Echo and the Bunnymen. The Bunnymen had been tearing up and down America's East Coast for the previous week, living up to the critical acclaim for their live show and rave reviews of their new album, Heaven Up Here. They have received a great deal of attention from the music press, usually linked with The Teardrop Explodes, as leaders of the psychedelic movement coming from England as of late.

Both their American releases have been accepted well here, and their shows at the East Side Club brought all their songs alive with feeling and emotion. The Bunnymen were surrounded onstage by a partially netted cloth covering and backdrop, and behind this, the lighting was used very effectively, working with the songs to set their proper moods. Ian McCulloch, their leader and vocalist, dominated the crowd with looks of desperation and sincerity. The musical quality was very high, and very intense; the audience enjoyed the evening, with plenty of dancing and carrying on, but the show left a deep impression on the crowd.

The Simple Minds are actually a sophisticated Scottish troupe which has been playing good dance rock ahead of its time, but has been mostly overlooked by the media, which viewed their first releases as just above mediocre. Just prior to their arrival in America, they released a two-album set in the U.K. to reviews so favorable it surprised nearly everyone familiar with them. The only factor keeping their success story credible is their past success with a single called I Travel. On October 16th, they played Philadelphia. All their material was truly magnificent. But that alone doesn't make a great show. They dressed up for the occasion and also controlled the audience with a stage presence that complimented the music very well. They enjoyed the show as much as the crowd. They performed mostly new material and were great.

The Comateens, from New York, who opened for the Simple Minds, are worth mentioning because they were also very good. They were original, led by a girl vocalist and keyboardist, and played very good, dancable stuff. They even did the theme from The Munsters TV show. It was disappointing, however, to realize that crowds seem to avoid reacting to a band just because they aren't the headlining act. Still, the Comateens were demanded back onstage for an encore.

On Saturday the 17th, The Scars came to the East Side Club. They left a lot to be desired, simply because they were not as good in concert as they are on vinyl. As their records indicate, their songs have killer live potential, but their stage presence and the show were a big disappointing. Unfortunately, the crowd wasn't any help either. They seemed to be a Saturday night crowd, out only because it was a Saturday night, not

Country Meets Rhythm 'N' Blues

By PAUL BERN

Small Town Days and Nights, Guy and Pipp Gillette's first album is a sensation in its uniqueness. Their sound is a cross between '50's R&B and New Orleans Shuffle, but no matter where it comes from, it is definitely boogie music. Strangely enough, Guy and Pipp hail from Texas, but for the past few years, they have been playing mostly in New York bars such as Mick Jagger's "Tracks" and CBGB's, with a couple of road trips to Philadelphia and other East Coast cities.

Guy Gillette

A six-piece band, Guy and Pipp have musicians that are hardly a bunch of nobodies: sax player Richard Grando has played with David Bowie and appears on the David Live album that was recorded at the Tower Theatre, Charles Otis, the percussionist, used to play with Otis Redding, and backup vocalist, Kat McCord, has recently recorded her own album. Not only is Guy and Pipp's music a mixture of many genres, so are their musicians.

Pipp Gillette

The opening song, "Trouble at the Crossroads," sets the pace for the rest of the album and is followed up by "Somethin' Pretty Workin'" and "Bluegrass Kentucky." These songs conjure images from Ry Cooder's style of country home blues that everyone can relate to — "I thought everything with my baby was fine/Till she called out a name and the name wasn't mine/Trouble at the Crossroads."

Mr. Tambourine Man Plays Again

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

You have to wonder what people expect from a Bob Dylan concert anymore. If he plays Maggie's Farm or Blowin' in the Wind the way he wrote them, people crow that he is bored, artistically stagnant, and demand something new. But if he reworks a certain tune, people then complain that it really isn't the same song anymore and demand to hear the old stuff.

If we can separate these two criticisms from Dylan's Spectrum show, then he was brilliant. Almost from the opening, he seemed untrapped by place or time; Dylan played like he belonged to the ages, not just 1981 America. The Times They Are A'Changin', Like a Rolling Stone, I Want You, Ballad of a Thin Man: All the old tunes poured through the audience like the blood through your heart. He really didn't play at the audience, he was the voice through which they spoke. His show was very much like a meeting between two people who wanted each other madly a long time ago, and their realizing that they still do.

The show was also very much like these same two people realizing that maybe they really didn't need each other after all. It is sad that Dylan played only two songs from his latest LP, In the Summertime and Heart of Mine, because if this new album is the way he feels now then what he has given over ought to give him the right to say what he thinks. The audience's less-than-ecstatic response to new material may justify the infuriating paranoia that snakes through the new LP, Shot of Love.

The slow-rolling, foot-stomping raunch that is most manifest in Trouble and the title track from Shot of Love, along with the reggae shadings in the new song Deadman, are the distinguishing features of this time around. Similar to Bob Marley's I-Threes, the three backup vocalists with which Dylan supplements Blowin' in the Wind and Knockin' on Heaven's Door not only make things sound a little more soulful, they'll help save his voice for this tour's final dates. Dylan's use of reggae, because of its tradition of remaining deeply personal while transcending the individual for more general political and spiritual ideas, was not too much of a surprise. The second drummer and the way the bassist, Tim Drummond, blew through the rockers like Maggie's Farm and Slow Train Coming were gut-wrenching surprises.

You can't fault the band, but to tell the truth, the audience might rather have had Dylan himself, alone on stage, all night. Dressed in black like midnight while alternately seducing and shrieking at the light above, Dylan seemed like Oedipus, Hamlet and Lenny Bruce all rolled into one voice crying into a stadium of the damned. They gave him no less than six standing ovations and stood throughout the three encores. Of these three, It Ain't Me Babe, which Dylan played alone, was the most poignant. When he introduced the chorus with, "It ain't me babe," they danced right back with, "No no no;" the immediate juxtaposition of the thousands who came to see this man and his denial of the powers they came to see was deep and confusing.

But Dylan has always been a master of depth and confusion, a poet who has performed tricks with words that English teachers have yet to invent "-isms" for, a voice spitting at anything safe or inhumane. He is the author of a modern mythology, both secular and Christian, for which he will be remembered long after rock and roll is gone.

Smalltown

There are a couple of more quiet songs for the mellower crowd: "Quit It" is the lamentation of a love gone sour; "Why don't we just up and quit it/I can't see much future left in it" is another thought that is easily identifiable with. "I'm in Love Again" was made for a fireside chat with that special someone, or anyone else you happen to be with, as long as they're in the mood.

Undoubtedly, the best song on the album is a live recording of "Swamp Song," Guy and Pipp's tribute to their homeland. The sax solos on this track are anything but dull and the beat makes it impossible to sit through it, especially when you're sitting in a bar with your sixth or seventh drink in your hand as this reviewer has had many chances to experience, and Guy and Pipp Gillette are one of the best experiences this reviewer has ever had.

Movie Review:

Halloween is not Over in October

By PETER BERKERY

Halloween II, the sequel to John Carpenter's classic horror film, Halloween, will soon take its place beside its predecessor as one of the greatest thrillers ever made. This time around, Carpenter and Debra Hill write and produce the film, but Rick Rosenthal takes over the director's spot. The film follows the same style as Halloween and the plot is basically the same, "he tries to kill girl." For those of us with weak stomachs the film does contain a greater amount of gore.

The movie begins exactly where Halloween left off, except Donald Pleasance, who does a superb job as the psychiatrist who is trying to track the killer down, finds that his six bullets were not enough to kill the monster. Jamie Lee Curtis is rushed off to the hospital for treatment and a little peace and quiet, but once again she is in for a big surprise. The killer is still ravaging the town of Haddonfield, Illinois and the psychiatrist and the sheriff find it difficult to distinguish the killer from other trick-or-treaters who are still on the streets. They find out that Ms. Curtis is more than just a friend to the killer, who is even more determined to murder her.

John Carpenter is definitely a genius at creating suspense. More than once in the movie the when the killer will appear, invariably we are caught off guard. As the movie builds to the climax the audience jumps at every sudden movement. Granted the script does not explain why the hospital is so understaffed or why the halls are so dimly lit, but the dynamic suspense soon makes us forget our questions.

Halloween II does accomplish what the producer wanted; it scares the wits out of the audience. The acting is once again first rate. For those of us who are still looking in the backseat before we get in our cars, the film provides even more memorable moments.

because the Scars were playing. A lot of the audience was probably there to see Philadelphia's own Impossible Years, which opened the show. They were fun, but weren't liked by everyone.

The East Side Club is the place for Philadelphia punks right now. It's the place where most good dance rock acts (like Killing Joke) end up. And, it is also the place to check out new music, even from America, if you don't recognize the name of the band. It is virtually the only consistent showcase in this area for new progressive rock acts.

Quakers Outlast 'Tired' Wildcats

By JOE MARUSAK

The Villanova soccer team has two games remaining on its schedule, but those matches will be of little or no consequence to the Wildcats.

Penn made sure of that. Last Saturday the Quakers visited Villanova Stadium and came away with a resounding 3-1 triumph over a seemingly downtrodden VU squad.

In terms of league standings, the contest meant more to Pennsylvania than it did to the Main Liners. Going into Saturday's game the Quakers carried a solid 3-1 record in the highly competitive Soccer Seven Conference. They needed a victory to stay alive. On the other hand, Villanova was 0-4 in Soccer Seven matches.

VU's poor standing didn't diminish the importance of the Penn game for Coach Howard Graff. In a pre-game interview Graff commented, "We are pretty much on par with Penn. Last year at Franklin Field the game ended a close 1-0. Today we should prove we are on the same level."

It didn't turn out that way. Although Villanova commanded much of the first half, the Cats were totally outplayed in the final 45 minutes. Pennsylvania, regarded mainly as a defensive team, found itself with the ball during most of the second half. Not even top scorers Brian Barr and Mike Layfield could revive the Cats.

Barr began the scoring in the game at the 26:58 mark of the first half. The Wildcat Co-Captain found himself wide open in the middle and he lofted the ball over Penn goalie Michael Moore.

Interestingly, Moore has been regarded all season as the weak link in the Quaker defense. The junior keeper from St. Louis is only in his first season as a starter, and has not performed up to the standards Jim Tabak set a year ago.

So, with the score tied 1-1 going into the second half, Michael Moore shut out the Wildcats the rest of the way. The keeper was aided by a piercing wind, which many times cut down the force of VU's shots.

During the game, Coach Graff had his players key on Pennsylvania midfielders Kevin Kinnevy and Bruce Becker. But in the long run, Quakers Moore and John Baudouin proved to be Villanova's demise. Baudouin, a Mexico City native, tallied his team's final two goals with rocket-like shots past netminder Pete Jirak.

Although Villanova was manhandled for a good part of the game, it did have its opportunities. With only 2:20 left in the first half, Cat halfback John Waraksa centered a pinpoint pass to Barr, whose header was miraculously saved by Moore.

Also in the first half, Barr made two beautiful crosses. The first was to Brendan Dalton, whose effort just missed. Minutes later Layfield received the second, but his shot went wide.

With the loss, Villanova goes to 9-7 on the season. Five of those losses are to Soccer Seven teams.

CORNER KICKS: Villanova's final home game is against Drexel on Sat., Nov. 14 at 1:00 p.m. . . . Drexel is currently ranked 5th in the Mid-Atlantic Conference . . . Coach Graff explained his strategy before the Penn match: "We want to use the wings more than we have. Let them control the ball and then center it in the Penn defensive zone. We want to keep the ball out of the middle as much as possible." The strategy worked throughout most of the first half, thanks to Barr, Waraksa and Co.

Intramural Play-offs Begin

By BOB CONWAY

Play-offs for the men's intramural flag football league will begin this weekend. The original field of over 50 teams has been narrowed down to the final 16. The top two teams from each of the seven divisions received automatic post-season bids, while two clubs will receive wild-card bids to round out the play-off picture.

The league, under the direction of Craig Hudson, completed one of its smoothest seasons in recent history. Hudson credits much of this year's success to the visible help of past Villanova Wildcat football coach, Lou Ferry. Hudson said, "Lou has helped improve the program in so many ways. He was at all the fraternity games, and most of the other games throughout the year." Hudson continued, that Ferry's work with the officials has made the games safer and better controlled than in previous years.

Hudson and Ferry both hope the smoothness of the regular season will carry over to the play-offs. "The matchups in the play-offs will be fierce as ever, but we will do everything we can to insure that the games are played fairly," remarked Hudson.

One of the squads, which appears to be the team to beat, is Athletes Foot. This powerful team went through the National Central, the toughest division, without a loss. The Delts, whose lone loss came at the "feet" of Athletes Foot has also gained a play-off spot. The National Central may also produce one of the wild-card clubs. The Gladiators and the Wave have come up a little short in this rugged division, but may have enough to get into the play-offs through the back-door.

The American West division featured two strong teams. Wally's Gators and the Moon Unit will both be hard to beat in post-season play. When these two clubs played two weeks ago, Wally's Gators prevailed 12-6. The Moon Unit, however, dominated in the all important first down category.

The top spots are locked up in the American Central. Good, Bad, and Ugly (GBU) went through the entire season without getting scored upon. GBU executes well and could be there when the dust clears. Tanz's Terrors, after losing their first game to GBU went on to win the next five. This team could be the surprise team of the play-offs. Quarterback, John Maxwell uses the able hands of Pete Sartore and the quick feet of Tim Kindler, competently. Kindler, a fleet-footed back, has led the Terrors with six touchdowns.

The Black Sheep, Wallbangers, Chain Reaction and the Plague also have qualified for the play-offs. These teams are well drilled in winning football, but will find the going tough in the play-offs.

Representing the Fraternity division are two strong teams DKE and DTE. Any team that survives the Frat league is a strong candidate for post-season accolades.

Cats Tip-Off Tuesday

By TOM REUSCHE

For those of you who insist that nobody plays basketball like the Americans, and that outside of the Russians, foreign basketball is a joke. This, however, will not be the case at the Field House Tuesday, November 17, at 7 p.m. The Villanova Wildcats will square off against the Cibona Basketball Club of Yugoslavia, a team head basketball Coach Rollie Massimino called "One of the top three international teams in the world."

In recent years, Villanova has faced some underwhelming foreign opponents, but Cibona will be an exception. Massimino states, "This is probably the best international team we've ever faced. Next to the Russians, they've probably been the most successful of the touring teams in recent years."

Cibona will be touring the eastern United States, playing the eight member teams of Villanova's basketball conference, the Big East. Since the Cats will be playing Cibona at the start of their eight game trek, Massimino feels he will be seeing the Yugoslavians at their playing peak.

Cibona's players have an average age of 23 years, and an average height of over 6'6". This experienced squad, which includes several former Olympians, is led by Kresimir Cosic, a 6'11" center, who is considered to be the greatest Yugoslavian player ever. 6'9" Andro Knego and 6'6" Mihoval Nakic join Cosic at the forward positions to form a formidable front line for Cibona.

Aaron Howard, the Wildcats' 6'7" senior forward, was a member of the Big East all-star team which played Cibona four times last summer. "They're like a professional team," Howard recalls. "They are very big, and show a lot of discipline." Are they physical? "Somewhat," Howard feels, "maybe not as much as here (in the Big East), but they're definitely going to beat some Big East teams." He could be right. Cibona defeated the Big East all-stars in three out of four meetings last summer.

Massimino plans to treat this like a regular season game, but adds that "everyone will get a chance to play. In a game like this, we can take chances, because winning won't be the ultimate goal. We'll have a chance to check on game slippage, and correct it between then and the season opener."

Next Tuesday may provide the Cats with a thorough pre-season contest, but it will also give the students, alumni, and fans of Villanova a chance to honor the Wildcats' longtime trainer, John "Jake" Nevin. Jake is entering his 52nd season at Villanova, and over the years has become perhaps the best known and most loved figure in Villanova athletics. Tuesday night has been designated "Jake Nevin Appreciation Night," and a special ceremony honoring Jake will take place at half-time.

The Wildcats have been included in Street and Smiths' Basketball Magazines' Top 20 pre-season forecast. Massimino insists, however, that to play at that level, "we need the fans' support to get off to a good start."

Nova Honors Jake Nevin

By MIKE HEALEY

Next Tuesday night at 7 p.m., a very special event will take place in the Villanova Fieldhouse, because on that night, a very special man will be honored. This man is none other than John "Jake" Nevin, Villanova's own living legend.

Jake is something of a rarity in sports these days. At a time when costs and salaries are escalating, people are regularly being hired and fired, and uncertainty seems to be the only certainty, Jake Nevin is kind of a reassuring figure. As head trainer at Villanova, Jake is reassuring because he has been here since 1929. He is someone that you can depend on through thick and thin.

His value to Villanova sports over the decades is immeasurable; he has given so much and asked for so little in return. But finally, come November 17th, during half-time of the Villanova-Cibona (of Yugoslavia) exhibition game, Jake's countless accomplishments will be recognized in the event labelled "Jake Nevin Appreciation Night."

When chatting with coaches and players on the basketball squad about Jake, the word "special" is fairly recurrent.

"Jake's been very special to all of us," says Assistant Basketball Coach Marty Marbach. "He's always there to joke around and make you smile or to console you if you're feeling down."

The players have similar sentiments of the little guy with the heart of gold. "Jake's a spiritual person. He's witty on roadtrips and he keeps you loose," says junior Stewart Granger. "The feeling that I have for him," Granger adds, "is very difficult to explain. He's just so special."

It didn't take freshman Eddie Pinckney very long to discover how unique Jake was either. "My first impression," says Pinckney, "was that not only was Jake special to us (the basketball team), he is special to the whole school. He's also a steadying influence," continues Pinckney, "and just having him on the bench is a big boost."

Jake receives additional high marks from team manager, John Varley. John's relationship with Jake is slightly different than the players', yet his feelings are basically the same. "He's like everybody's dad," says Varley. And in a professional sense, Varley adds, "Jake knows more about training than anyone that I know, and he doesn't get credit for that."

"You have to watch out though," continues Varley, "so he doesn't sneak up on you and play a practical joke." Ah yes, before I make Jake into a holy angel, this brings up another point about him. Don't ever let it be said that Jake Nevin has no sense of humor. At times the man can be downright impish.

Just ask any of the players — they've all been at the receiving end of a patented Jake Nevin practical joke, at one time or another. Sometimes, the jokes is in the form of a jet stream of ice cold water from the water bottles, directed at some helpless individual.

Harriers Prepare for Nationals

Everything went according to ... for Villanova's women's ... country team. Earlier in the ... first year Coach Bob ... laid out his plan for the ... to peak for the championship meets in order to earn a ... to the AIAW Championships. Last Saturday at Worcester, Massachusetts the women ... away with the meet honors, much to the surprise of local West Chester and other teams sure that Villanova would not be that competitive.

Mary Ellen McGowan (18:37.0) led the squad to their 64 point finish, 11 points ahead of second place Boston College. McGowan is a freshman who has proved infinitely valuable to the 1981 squad, scoring in all the meets and posting more than one first place among Villanova finishers. She finished in the seventh position.

Also scoring for Villanova in order of their respective finishes were: Eva Maria Berardi (18:45.2), Carol Gilsinger (18:54.4), Sue Shea (18:58.0) and Bev Reilly (19:13.3). Amelia Cain ran in the sixth position, finishing well up in the pack with a time of 19:31.1. Another important event of the day was Villanova's 23 point spread over fourth place West Chester. It was the first time this season that the Wildcats had crossed the line before their local rivals.

The first place finish at the Easterns has Villanova running toward the AIAW Division II National Championships one week from now in Pocatello, Idaho. But the women plan to be ready to meet the challenge, not only of the tough national competition but of the difficulty of running in the high altitudes.

High altitudes cut the runner's supply of oxygen, making the change from the low altitudes very difficult. However, the Wildcats have been preparing for that for three weeks now as they do some of their track and road work outs in PO² masks. These masks, which cover the girls faces, cut their oxygen intake by one-half. Lightweight tanks on their backs regulate the flow of oxygen.

The trip to Idaho is hard won yet well prepared for. The women had an impressive finish in the Eastern Regionals and have trained carefully for the high altitudes of the mid-west. They are looking to victory in the National Championships.

Women's Teams Honored

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The Villanova women's soccer team finished their season with an 11-3-1 record. Along with posting a winning record, the women booters received honors in the Mid-Atlantic Women's Soccer Poll, holding the tenth position in the final ranking. Nationally ranked Cortland State took the poll's top spot.

VOLLEYBALL

For the first time, Villanova's women's volleyball team has qualified for the AIAW Region I Division II Championships. Each year has been one of improvement for the still-young team which has worked so hard with first year coach Bob Covell to secure this bid. Its 27-8 record and second place finish at the LaSalle Tournament seems to have secured the berth at the Championships to be played on November 19 at Towson State.

The winner of the Regional Championships advances to the National Championships to be held in December at Colorado Springs, Colorado.

The Wildcats were seeded seventh among the ten team field, just ahead of Navy who fell victim to the Wildcats during the regular season. Second seed Delaware split in their play against the Cats.

Jake Nevin

But usually, Jake's humor can be found in the form of some amusing one-liner not soon to be forgotten. Whatever the case, as the players will attest, sooner of later, Jake's gonna get you.

All things told, Villanova Jake is simply a remarkable person. He possesses the rare qualities of a sense of humor, kindness, and a general caring of the people with whom he associates. Those who know him would assuredly agree on one thing: they are fortunate to know him. Perhaps Marty Marbach put it best in saying, "Jake's a legend and we greatly respect what he's one for Villanova sports."

Cats Take Pair

The Villanova ice hockey team upped their record to 4-1 last week with a pair of victories over Lehigh and West Chester State. The Cats now stand at 3-0 in the Mid Atlantic Collegiate Hockey League with all three victories against the Rams for West Chester.

On Saturday, the Icecats struggled throughout most of the game but managed a hard-earned 5-3 victory over Lehigh. Villanova controlled the game for the most part but had a tough time putting the puck in the net. Senior Jerry Murphy led the Icecat attack with a pair of goals with single tallies coming from Jeff Beck, Mark LaFond and Tom Curran. Sophomore goaltender Don Clark continued his outstanding goaltending posting his fourth victory in five tries.

Villanova then hosted West Chester on Sunday, but were not too hospitable, crushing the Golden Rams 6-2. Villanova dominated the entire game with the hat-trick with other scores coming from Chris Mancuso, John Canuso and Jerry Murphy.

Coach Skip Probst has been pleased with his teams performance thus far. "I've been surprised at how fast the team has blended. We look like a team in mid-season form."

The Icecats travel for a rematch against Lehigh tomorrow before hosting MACHC foe Drexel University on Sunday. Game time is 12:00 noon.

Fire Protection Found Adequate

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

Following the Oct. 16 fire in St. ary's Hall and the Nov. 10 ter-main breakage, the question fire safety and precautions on Villanova campus has been ised.

The University is under the diction of the Radnor Town- fire code, which is updated ry few years. The University t comply with this code and Township's Fire Marshall, rnard Quinn, sees to this com- ance.

Quinn explained that there is a le building code which governs protection rules from a single- elling home up to a college or ice building. The regulations that there be a certain number fire exits, each properly marked h illuminated signs, a proper number of fire extinguishers or hoses according to the size of the building, fire escapes, if necessary.

The township's code suggests one drill a month for educational-occupied buildings and three drills a month for institutional buildings, which dormatories fall under. The individual universities however, decide what they feel is an adequate number of drills. Villanova holds at least one drill a semester for the buildings on campus.

There are different sections of the code pertaining to existing and new buildings. Edward Meagher, of the maintenance department, explained that the systems in the buildings on campus comply with the code at the time of construction; Tolentine Hall was built in 1929 so its systems agree with the 1929 code, whereas the Connelly Center has to comply with the 1980 code, because that was the time of its finished construction. Although some of the buildings date back to as early as Tolentine, Meagher feels that, "The systems in all the buildings are very safe." However, he added, "There is always room for improvement. We are constantly updating, when the funds are available."

"The biggest problem that I have found at all the universities is the students and their direct misuse of the fire equipment," stated Quinn.

Thomas Trucks, head of the maintenance department, agreed, saying "By September 8, all of the systems in all the buildings were completely operable but by the end of September, after the first fire drill, 10 of the buildings had problems." Truck explained the situation at St. Mary's; "We surveyed the entire dorm and had a crew come in and work overtime to complete the work for the arrival of the students. By Sept. 8 the fire system was completely functional with the exception of 11 out of 35 bells." Trucks explained that missing parts for the 11 bells had to be specially ordered because many of the missing parts were found in students' rooms last spring, being used as ashtrays.

"People do not realize that the fire alarm systems are related. You rip out one bell and the whole system is made inoperable," explained Trucks.

Trucks feels that the problem of the alarm failure during the Oct. 16 fire was the result of vandalism. A crew had to go in and replace missing parts of bells and remove chewing gum from the bells after the fire. Trucks said that by Oct. 26 the system was again complete and operable.

"There seems to be an evident contempt of the students in the misuse of the fire equipment," stated Fr. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president of the administration.

"In all the resident halls there is the common practice of playing "with the fire extinguishers and hoses. It has happened in Tolentine but the academic buildings are not as big a problem because they are locked at night and closed on the weekends, with the exception of Tolentine," stated Rice.

Trucks stated figures in regard to the situation with the extinguishers in 1981. Jan. 20,-$1,464.75, Jan. 28,-$1,428.50, Feb.

Senate to Meet Today

By MELINDA MUSIAL

The University Senate will meet day at 4:00, with an opening ad- ss by Father President Driscoll the top of the agenda.

Senator Alvin Clay will present Senate Budget Committee rt and the initiation of the ter's of Business Adminis- tion (M.B.A.) program will be sidered. The Senate Planning Priorities Committee will also ent budget priorities involving luations of changing en- llment in academic majors, the of the proposed M.B.A. gram and a proposed under- duate major in Computer ence, as well as several other ues including Animal Care cilities and Field House Light- .

Non-academic budget priorities ing discussed will also include financial aid and maintenance and renovation.

A motion will be brought up during the meeting by Senator Vic Falvo to increase access to support facilities, including Falvey Library.

Consideration of the M.B.A. program proposal will involve Senator Lawrence Gallen's review of the proposal submitted by the Graduate Committee concerning the M.B.A. program. Analysis indicates that if initiated, the program should eventually generate $500,000 a year in needed revenue. One hundred and fifty new students would be admitted each year, with a peak enrollment of approximately five hundred.

The budget priorities committee's report will be built on the assumption that the inflation rate over the period of the 1982-83 budget will be in the range of 7.7 percent to 8.7 percent.

According to the Budget Priorities Committee, the most recent evaluation of Villanova's animal care facilities showed that the University is not in compliance with existing regulations and is exposing students and staff to unnecessary contact with infected animals. And, according to the committee, the existing lighting system in the Field House will not support color television, an important part of the Big East package, and should be upgraded.

Today's meeting marks the first Senate meeting this year at which Driscoll has spoken.

The meeting will conclude with new business.

The Senate meets in the West Lounge once a month.

Computer Major Proposed

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

A Bachelor of Science degree in Computer Science may be offered by the 1982 fall semester. The proposal to change Computer Science from a concentration to a major will possibly receive its final approval at the December 8 Board of Trustees meeting. "There is a graduate program in computer science, so this computer science major naturally fills out the complete program," said Dr. Hartmann, of the math department. The Computer Science major will prepare students for graduate study — or anyone of the increasing number of industry jobs.

"The University has realized that computer science is an important part of the Liberal Arts College. Some students who are majoring in math of psychology are interested in computer science. Because of their requirements within their stated major, they are unable to take as many computer science courses as they wish. If a student is able to major in computer science the student is able to concentrate studies in this area," stated Hartmann.

Students currently enrolled in computer will be able to apply for admission into the computer science major. The work done in computer science courses will be applied to the major.

"We expect to accept 50 students a year. No higher number because of the availability of the equipment and staff, but we will not enroll below 50 students, in order for the major to maintain itself."

Additional computer equipment is a request within the Computer Science major proposal. The consideration of additional equipment is in response to the inadequate amount of equipment for all of the computer science work now being done. Hartmann realizes the problems students face for accessibility. To help this situation, computers are open to the university community 24 hours a day in Mendel as well as for scheduled hours in Tolentine and Bartley.

"There is currently a consideration of a separate academic computer. The students would still plug into a terminal and follow the same procedure, but with a more advanced computer available. There would be more graphic plotting, color plotting, and various other aspects," said Hartmann.

The computer equipment is expensive, but "the university sees that they have to invest money in equipment, and they realize that this equipment is used by students constantly," added Hartmann.

In the computer science major, number of available teachers but not in the expertise, according to Hartmann. There are already graduate teachers specializing in computer science, so some of the graduate teachers will also teach undergraduate computer science courses. Sixteen of the 32 undergraduate staff have already been teaching in the computer science area exclusively.

Hartmann added that "help will be given to the faculty to develop their skills in computer science through summer institutions and other courses. Most of the teachers in the math department specialize in math, not as computer science. Fr. Lawrence Gallen, vice president of the academic affairs said that "for the most part we will be able to use the faculty we have, but in four years or so, when 200-250 students have enrolled in the computer science major, a need for four or five more teachers may be necessary."

Fourth World Photo Exhibit Held

By CAROL ALKONS

From now until November 24, a photo exhibit titled "Thirty Years from the History of Fourth World Children" will be shown in the Connelly Center art gallery. The collection of 189 photographs, many of which were taken in the US, was prepared in 1979 for the International Year of the Child by International Movement ATD-Fourth World, and has been seen in many international centers including Center Pompidou-Beauborg and UNESCO in Paris; Westminster Abbey in London; the Council of Europe in Brussels.

The exhibit was inaugurated in this country at the United Nations in New York (in May 1980) and has been shown in several locations including San Francisco City Hall and Artista Embassy; New Orleans International Trade Mart; universities of Dayton, Ohio; Loyola/Marymount in Los Angeles; and New York.

Sue Smith and Johanna Stadelmann, workers for the Fourth World Movement, will be present at the gallery to answer questions and explain the Movement's goals. The exhibit has been shown since Tuesday, Nov. 10, although the official opening was Sunday, Nov. 15. On Tuesday, Nov. 17, there were several slide show presentations and discussion groups for students.

When asked how the exhibit came to be shown at Villanova, Smith, who is from England, explained that Father George P. Magee, O.S.A., from Monsignor Bonner High School saw the exhibit at the United Nations, and asked for more information. "He thought of us in connection with Hunger Awareness Week," she stated.

Smith described the term "Fourth World" as referring to the "poorest and most excluded people in any society — the people who are left out of society."

The movement began in 1956 when a Catholic priest, Joseph Wresinski, became chaplain of a shanty-town at Noisy-Le-Grand near Paris and "recognised that the people there were not an excluded group by their own choice. They represented a group all over the world. He (Wresinski) gave them the name "Fourth World." The movement grew with that vision — recognizing that there were excluded people everywhere," Smith further explained.

"We hope that the exhibit conveys a message. We hope that people will recognize the kind of problem we are talking about. Most people aren't associated with Third World problems and with Third World poverty. They tend to think that there may be poor people, but that they're taken care of. These people are not only deprived, but they are excluded — they are pushed to the edge of society and are rejected and blamed for their condition. People say they are lazy, or that they shouldn't have children if they can't provide for them. Some people do recognize the problem — some don't," stated Smith.

Stadelmann, a native of Switzerland, who became involved with the Movement in 1968, commented, "It is up to us to want to change things. These people want to be treated like human beings. That is the basic exclusion. We must become aware of that and change it. The problem doesn't

V.U. Yet to Re-apply for Morris Estates

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Once considered to be a "land bank for the future," Villanova's purchase of the Morris Estates seems to have turned into a white elephant for the University.

Turned down once by the Radnor Township Zoning Board for presenting incomplete plans for institutional re-zoning and development, Villanova has yet to re-apply and gain the township's approval.

In 1978, following 15 years of on-again, off-again negotiations, Villanova purchased 37 acres of the estate that included five buildings for $760,000. Included in the transaction was the University's right of first refusal on Dr. Morris' house and the accompanying acreage.

"Three years ago the plans were incomplete," Father John McKenzie, Villanova's director of planning told the Villanovan early this year (January 30, 1981). According to McKenzie, a petition had been drawn up that spelled out the University's plans and was to be presented to the Board of Trustees. "I'm fairly confident that the township will grant the zoning and the ordinances," McKenzie had said.

"The next step is up to Villanova," said Radnor Township Manager Charles Guernsey. "No, there has been no formal application since the first one was turned down. How long ago was that? Three years?"

"In Villanova's presentation, they came before the zoning board with 'possibilities,'" Guernsey explained. "With no definite plans and a lot of 'maybe we'll do this or that,' it certainly did not impress the Board."

For Villanova to be given zoning permission, a letter of petition must be submitted to the Zoning Board. The Board examines it, then distributes it to various township committees for their recommendations. The Zoning Board responds to the request within a three or four-month time period.

At a township hearing, the proposals are heard. Objections and questions can be raised by the community as well as the township managers at this meeting.

Farewell, Fish!

Editor's note: We would like to take this opportunity to thank all of those who kept this "tribute" a secret from out-going editor Bill Clark. This is an especially noteworthy achievement in light of the fact that Clark ranks as one of the nosiest people ever known to mankind.

Nearly four years ago, Bill Clark came to the Villanovan from a dinky backwater hamlet somewhere in that great sludge heap called New Jersey. The town's name is Iselin, or some such nonsense. Anyway, who really cares?

Editors from Clark's early period recall the then-budding young reporter as distinguished chiefly by his total unremarkability. In fact, most of them don't even remember him at all. Many of the editors who have served under him say the same thing.

Clark started his career as a groveling cub reporter, covering the stories that no one else wanted to do. He worked his way up the Villanovan ladder, going from general reporter to Assistant News Editor, and from there to Editor-in-Chief. Along the way, he acquired a well-deserved reputation as a human invertebrate, exhibiting an incredible lack of spine every step of the way. But despite this physical and spiritual handicap, Clark overcame.

He overcame other obstacles in his career as well. First of all, he was and is an accounting major. Most accounting majors can't read, let alone edit a paper. Clark is no exception.

Also, he co-ordinated the "Villanovans for Anderson" presidential campaign. Talk about adversity.

But Clark has not been without his successes. However, we really are at a loss to name any of them.

The Villanovan loses a great contributor to its quality with the departure of Bill Clark. But, we felt the same way when someone stole our typewriter balls. And, come to think of it, we'd rather lose Bill than the typewriter balls. But so it goes . . . Farewell, Fish.

Bill Clark poses with the only thing that makes him feel like a man.

As usual, Clark yields to the physical threats of roommate June Lytel.

Hours Compared at Libraries

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

A recent survey by the Senate shows that the Falvey library is open fewer hours than several other comparable Universities in the area.

"The last time Villanova had longer hours was in the early 70s, said Senator Vic Falvo, who prepared the motion concerning the library that will be presented today at the University Senate meeting. "Since then, the caliber of students and faculty has increased. Therefore, the demand for library hours also has increased.

"I'm not saying the administration should be locked into anything — they should try it on a trial basis to weigh the costs versus the benefits."

Falvo cited research he has completed which shows that schools such as Drexel University, The University of Pennsylvania and Saint Joseph's University keep more library hours than does Villanova.

"I've spoken to faculty, students and administration recently and they are in favor of the motion," said Falvo.

"If only one person is using the facilities, it would be silly to spend large amounts of dollars. But, if a lot of people in the Villanova community use them, the hours should be kept."

Falvo has been compiling his information for several weeks, and explained that some students had approached him about attempting to extend Falvey's hours. "I began talking to people, (faculty, students and administrators) about whether they would use the facilities and they said yes."

The official resolution to be presented to the Senate today says "Resolved: That the University should increase access to support facilities such as Falvey Library and the Computer Center. However, such increased access should be consistent with a reasonable cost/benefit analysis."

Falvo said the rationale for the motion is as follows: "In order for the Villanova Community to maximize the performance of various functions — teaching, learning, research, etc. — it is necessary for the community to have maximum access to those University-provided systems, such as libraries and computer services that support the above functions."

ACS Redefined Under New President

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The Association of Commuter Students (ACS) has become more organized and involved with the University this year, according to ACS President Britt Gourley.

"This year, it has really turned around," said Gourley. "We're organized and doing things," he added.

Britt Gourley Peter DiPaolo Photo

"Our first big event was the Great Adventure trip — it went really well. We had a half-decent turn-out and everyone who went had a good time," said Gourley.

Gourley said that the recent Halloween party sponsored by the ACS was "fantastic" and that more people attended this party than any of the organization's other parties.

"Another aspect we're trying to develop is dealing with commuter problems. We're meeting with the administration about parking problems and trying to improve that. We're also trying to work out a deal with Keystone Auto, through the University, where you could make a phone call if your car won't start in the lot and Triple A would come and get you running again."

"A lot of people think we're just for people who live at home, but we are encouraging off-campus residents to join also," he explained.

Gourley said that he hopes to work with the Resident Student's Association in the near future. "We haven't had anything yet, but we're willing to work with them. It is a matter of when," he said.

Gourley attributes the recent [illegible], who is on Residence Life Staff, have behind us 100 percent."

"There's a whole differen[illegible] titude from last year — [illegible] more positive," agreed Pa[illegible] Maura, the social com[illegible] chairperson. "The people [illegible] much more involved and [illegible]erested. There used to be a [illegible] of organization and no one [illegible] what was going on. We are [illegible] more organized this year [illegible] are working more with the U[illegible]sity," Maura said.

Asked about the organiz[illegible] financial situation, Gourley [illegible] "Our budget is sufficient. W[illegible] do pretty much what we w[illegible] do. They gave us more mon[illegible] year so the University is [illegible] more behind us."

"We're still open for [illegible]bership, and trying to get m[illegible] volved here at school," G[illegible] added.

"Another aspect we're trying to develop is dealing with commuter problems...A lot of people think we're just for people who live at home, but we are encouraging OCRs to join also."

The group is also working on a commuter handbook which would be free to all commuters. "It would have information about car-pooling, fix-it hints for cars, train schedules, descriptions of the ACS, routes to school, and other things," explained Gourley.

"Right now," said Gourley, "we're involved with Hunger Awareness — we worked with Campus Ministry on this and we have done very well collecting money from commuters."

successes of the ACS to the "people we have, especially our chairpeople and officers." And, said Gourley, "Student Activities has been very helpful. Our moderators, Lucy Gorski, and deal with just the political or economic system, but also within humanity."

"We are showing some 'hard' photographs, but we're also showing dignity and joy. We're showing the hope and courage that these children have," said Smith. "Five percent of the people in Europe, and five percent of the people in the United States are Fourth World people as we know it. Compared to what we get, these people never get recognition, education, or proper housing. The possibility for schooling is there, but these people live such chaotic lives, they're not able to go on a regular basis. There might be only one pair of shoes for all the children in a family to wear, or the child must stay home to care for the little ones. Many times there are language difficulties, and the child may be behind the other students his age by several years. These children have the same potential, but they're living apart in a different world."

The movement workers stressed that the problem perpetuates itself — children of poor families grow up and have poor families of their own: "Extreme poverty shapes their lives from childhood on. It saps their health, constricts the world, and often affects their ability to learn. Poverty also brings exclusion-by classmates when in schools, by employers when they look for work, by landlords when in search of housing. Employed intermittently, if at all, they find their lives governed by policies and institutions in which they have no voice and are not represented. This cycle of dependence forces the same conditions on their children," explains the movement pamphlet.

"The people of the Fourth World need our help not only in an individual way; it is necessary that changes are thought of for the poorest ones. It is always the same people who are kept apart — who are trapped. Justice will have to change for the poorest; then it will change for everybody," said Stadelmann.

Smith explained, "The movement is trying to create a friendship between the poor and the non-poor. We don't go into a poor area as professional people — we just try to hear and understand what they're expressing in their lives. When these people come together as a group, they realize that they have an identity. They learn that their experience is not an isolated one, and they discover that together they have a voice and that they have much to tell us."

"They want all the means for a family life — to be together, to learn, to get training, and to be recognized as human beings. They want to have a voice to say what they are living, and to have others listen and understand that they count," continued Stadelmann.

"Those who have suffered the most extreme situations can show us what justice is."

TV Lighting Approved

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Approval has been granted to Villanova's athletic department by the Budget Committee, to install additional lighting for TV purposes in the Villanova fieldhouse. These lights would be in place by last September.

Dr. Ted Aceto, Villanova's athletic director, says the installation will begin in May, 1982. "The proposal was submitted last year, and we received the approval to have installation started, but we didn't have the time to get it done for this season." The lighting can not be installed during the school year without interrupting the student use of the fieldhouse facilities.

Last February, the Georgetown game scheduled for the fieldhouse was moved to the Palestra to accommodate NBC-TVS network television coverage. Inappropriate lighting for TV was then cited as the reason for the switch. Technicians from NBC came to do light meter readings twice in November, 1980. They decided the current lighting was not sufficient to televise a basketball game in color. The last game broadcast from the fieldhouse was in the early 1970's, and lighting standards have been upgraded since that time.

The small size of the fieldhouse itself also contributes to network TV's problems. "Bigger, newer arenas are easier for them to work in," Aceto claimed. Among the problems technicians face are placement of transmission cables and locations for cameras and operators.

According to Aceto, "We won't have any idea how many games will be televised (next season) until after next August. But there will be considerable income due to such appearances."

This season, six Villanova games are scheduled to be telecast on free and cable TV networks. At least one of these games will be telecast from the fieldhouse with the existing lighting system.

Prof Honored for Courage

Dr. James Kirschke, an assistant professor of English, was recently honored by the Millay club of South Catholic Bishop Newman — St. John Newman High School.

The award was presented to Kirschke for his courage during his service in Vietnam at a Communion breakfast on Sunday, November 15 at Palumbo's restaurant in Philadelphia. The event was emceed by Robert Capone, alumni director at Villanova.

Although a double amputee, Kirscke continues to swim a mile every day and is an avid weight-lifter.

Kirschke has been at Villanova since 1977, after serving as editor of the Journal of Modern Literature.

His first book was titled Henry James and Modern Impressionism. He has recently completed his second book Not Going Home Alone which centers on his experience as a Marine officer.

"The award is for an alumnus of the school who has contributed to his country and is someone people can look up to," commented Capone.

12,-$786.00, Feb. 18,-$38.00, and March 18,-$2,125.00. These figures cover the repairing, recharging, and replacement of the fire extinguishers alone. Stanford hall had the highest figures last year for damages and misuse of the fire equipment."

Christopher Janosik, director of resident life, stated that, "The institution's response has been adequate in the maintenance of the fire protection standards. The problem is the available funds. When the money is available, we try as rapidly as we can to update the systems." Janosik continued, "We do as much as we can but if the students insist on tampering with the equipment, then we get defeated." Janosik did say that the tampering in Sullivan and Stanford halls does not seem as prevalent or serious this year.

Morris Estate

Edward B. Shober, 775 County Line Road, is a neighbor to the Morris Estates. He is also a distant cousin of Mrs. Morris who still resides on the estate property.

"I guess you could say I'm opposed," the longtime resident said. "The neighbors here are used to the quiet life. The traffic would be bad," he added.

Standing on his front step in the early twilight, Shober outlined various reasons why he and his neighbors are against the zoning request of Villanova. "I'm so close. I see the most. Students would be going in and out all day. With the increased traffic there would be more pollution. And what about a road? The one they have back there is in pretty bad shape. It would have to be widened. Villanova would have to build a new one," he said.

At the time of the purchase, grandiose plans for student housing and athletic fields were contemplated. However, alleviation of student housing shortages was not deemed possible due to the lack of modernization able to be incorporated on the estate. Lack of a local sewer tie-in and the cost of rewiring the electrical systems were just a few of the needed changes.

Later revisions has led to plans for general academic and administrative facilities.

Shober revealed that three months ago, a committee of neighbors had been formed to collectively raise objections against the possible zoning by Villanova. The protests will continue to be heard according to Shober.

"There was zoning meeting several months ago, explaining the pros and cons," continued Shober. "The representative from Villanova — I don't remember his name — was impressive but he wasn't definite. It probably wasn't his fault. There seemed to be a lack of precise ideas," he explained.

The Power of Journalism

"Great is journalism. Is not every able editor a ruler of the world, being a persuader of it?"

Thomas Carlyle

When this present editorial board took over the Villanovan last November, we had dreams of changing Villanova for the better.

Through our commentary and investigative reporting, we hoped to inspire the Villanova community to take an interest in Villanova.

After a year of effort, we have come to realize a hard and difficult lesson; for the most part, Villanovans don't give a damn.

After all, the written word cannot create action; it can only encourage it. Unless a journalist's work is coupled with a corresponding concern for it by his readers, his best efforts will be unnoticed.

This has certainly been the case during the past year. If being an editor does one thing, it makes one humble.

This is why Villanova owes much to the dedicated reporters and editors of the Villanovan. At a school where the majority of people are concerned only with their own interests, these people are concerned with providing a service to the Villanova community.

Other than seeing their names in print, mixed in with the headlines and pictures, they have no rewards. Yet, they give so much of themselves.

Perhaps there is something like indescribable pride for a job done to the best of their ability which motivates them to continue their efforts week after week.

Then again, maybe there is the hope that one person will read their work, and be informed and influenced by it.

The dreams of grandeur which we possessed last November no longer exist. They have been hardened by a year of unfulfilled hopes.

Obviously, Thomas Carlyle never went to Villanova.

Villanova

The first paragraph of Villanova's mission statement states, "Villanova is committed to those same high goals and standards of academic integrity and excellence as well as personal and corporate achievement that characterize all worthy institutions of higher learning."

As we have discovered by reporting the news for the past year, that statement is a blatant lie.

During the past year, we have seen Villanova football disappear. We have seen tuition hikes of 12-16% . We have seen few changes for the better.

These facts alone, however, do not render the mission statement false. It is the way they came about.

The people who make up Villanova, the 10,000 students and 44,000 alumni, were not consulted in the least. These decisions were reminiscent of smoke-filled backrooms at political conventions.

If Villanova is sincere in developing "the total person," it should be concerned with treating its students as adults and giving them the responsibilities which go along with this.

As our series titled "Who Runs Villanova?" pointed out, students have few responsibilities at Villanova.

Unfortunately, this attitude towards students exists with some of the faculty as well. In a recent opinion expressed in the Villanovan, a faculty member stated that such things as "respect for student's opinions" and "the appearance of a genuine interest in and concern for each student personally" have nothing to do with good teaching.

In a school which claims to be dedicated to "academic integrity and excellence," this view should have no place.

If Villanova indeed wishes to be classified as a "worthy institution of higher learning," it should re-evaluate its attitude towards its students in relation to its own defined mission.

Letters to the Editor

Response to Change Op-Ed

Commenting on last week's article entitled "External Change Alters Life," it seems appropriate for myself to ask Mr. Gosselin how he can define a water main breakage which closes school for one day as earth shattering news. To say that the stoppage of water is cataclysmic is a gross exaggeration. I feel that it is inaccurate for one to classify a main water break along side acts of rape and murder as occurrences which disrupt our daily lives. The reason being I think society can more easily adjust to a main water break than it can to the effects of rape and murder. Also, to relate Tuesday's event at Villanova to the bombing of Pearl Harbor and the shootings of President Reagan and Pope Paul II is a very weak analogy and undermines the importance of these events. It seems to me that Mr. Gosselin should realize that a main water break is not so dramatic an occurence that people can not handle the situation in the course of their daily lives. Finally, I would like Mr. Gosselin could explain to the school how such an event puts incredible stress on all of us.

Sincerely yours,
Paul DelDo
Class of

'Rich' Explained, Qualified

Dear Editor:

Obviously, all Villanova students are not rich; just as obviously, they are not all poor. Since the truth resides somewhere between those absurd extremes, it would be silly for me — or anyone — to make either blanket generalization. I recognize this now and I recognized it before a recent interview for The Villanovan. The article summarized results from in-class surveys which I have administered over 2-1/2 years to a total pool of approximately 450 students. In a nutshell, the family income of the typical Villanova student is above the ninety-fifth percentile nationally; i.e., the average student's family is wealthier than that of 19 out of 20 Americans.

This does not preclude student poverty. No income average rules out cases of real financial difficulty, either now or under conditions of reduced student aid. The point is that such cases will be less common here than at an institution with poorer (on the average) student families. This is a statistical fact which seems more secure than "asking a few friends" whether they feel wealthy. I am amused that the authors of both letters to the editor (properly) quoted my finding that "the majority of Villanova students are relatively rich," and then expressed their outrage that I was accusing them — personally — of great wealth. Consider the logic: just because the majority of students are careful readers (and writers of letters) doesn't mean that all of them are.

Sincerely,
Brian J. Jo

APO Thanks All Donors

Dear Editor:

I hope you will publish this note for I would like to publicly thank all those who donated their time, effort and blood to the campus' APO Red Cross blood drive. Once again, the Villanova community has proven how special it really is and how much it cares. In a time when the Red Cross organization is facing as critical a shortage as there has been anytime in the last decade, Villanova shot for a never before attained goal of 450 usable pints of blood! However it should not surprise you that we not only met this goal of 450 pints, but surpassed this goal by 96 pints! Giving us a final total of 546 pints. Again I would like to thank everyone involved.

Landlord, tenant problems

Center Provides Aid

At one time it was felt that academics was the only thing a university should provide the students.

Gradually, educators realized that students did not live by books alone. Sports were added, then social outlets, clubs, and student organizations.

Counseling centers sprung up when Universities realized that tending to student's personal and emotional problems was equally important as lecturing them on the fine spirit instilled by their institution.

Now, over one hundred colleges have recognized that legal problems too, are part and parcel of what could commonly occur to any given student during a four-year college career.

Some of these colleges employ lawyers on a full time basis. In some others, students have been permitted to go to small claims court and represent other students.

During the last three years I have been teaching here at Villanova University, I have found that a substantial amount of my student counseling concerns informing students of their most basic legal rights.

The majority of requests for information involves landlord and tenant law problems. Due to the housing crisis along the Main Line coupled with the lack of dormitory space on campus, students have often found themselves in disadvantageous positions when dealing with landlords.

In order to remedy this, I decided with the aid of several volunteer law students to create an information center where students could go to receive free legal advice in landlord-tenant matters.

Before attempting to establish this center I realized there were three hurdles to overcome: (1) proper training; (2) professional liability; and (3) charges of an unauthorized practice of law.

First of all, I designed and set up a training program in which local judges, lawyers, building inspectors and zoning officers came to Villanova University and lectured the law students in their area of expertise concerning landlord and tenant law.

In addition, drawing from my own experience as a practicing lawyer, as well as director of a neighborhood law office for three years, I lectured the law students on the methods and skills needed for legal interviewing and counseling.

Secondly, as to professional liability, I was fortunate enough to find an insurance company who understood the limited nature of their exposure compared to other areas of law and who agreed to insure the entire program and all of its participants at a minimal cost.

With respect to the charges of unauthorized practice of law, I formally presented the program to the local bar association's standing committee on Unauthorized Practice of Law. The program received their unanimous approval thus allowing the law students to participate without fear of charges of professional misconduct.

Thanks to the kindness of the Student Government Association we now have office space and a phone available. The office is in Dougherty, 207A, and the phone number is 645-7212.

The primary purpose of the Legal Information Center is to provide counseling for students. Should a particular problem become so serious as to warrant court action, the case will be referred to an attorney. The attorney is usually a local lawyer known to myself (usually a Villanova graduate) who agrees to take the case for a reduced fee. I have been able to do this thanks to their generosity and our friendship.

I would like to close on a personal note by addressing the patient volunteer group of law students who offered their help to me when the idea for this center was first discussed. At that time, the substantive problems of organizing this center and the procedural process in gaining approval seemed like a difficult task.

I told them that a law professor once told me "nothing happens unless you make it happen." And now I say that given a fair system and an honest need a new idea needs no precedent and can succeed on its merit alone.

On Campus

By ELISE VALADE and JEFF PAGE

Since this is the last issue of the Villanovan edited by the present editorial board, we asked the seniors how they have benefited from their experience as editors.

"Aggravating, unrewarding, but the best experience in my life."

Bill Clark
Editor in Chief

"I think I have learned a lot about how to relate to people and how to take some initiative. I have also seen how this University is run, and I must admit that at times I have been a little surprised and disappointed by what students think we are doing, and how some members of the administration look at the student body."

Mary Anne Granger
News Editor

"I got to meet a lot of very sweet people. I was afforded the opportunity to present my thoughts without being censored too much."

Chris Slawecki
Entertainment Editor

"It was a valuable experience. I learned a lot about Villanova, especially about the sports teams. One of the major benefits was that I was able to get into all of the Villanova sporting contests free of charge."

Bob Conway
Sports Editor

"I got to say nasty things about the Blue Key and DKN. I got to go to concerts for free and I got to work with Chris Slawecki."

Amy MacLachlan
Entertainment Editor

"Aside from the fact that it was really annoying, I would probably do it again. Being an editor of the Villanovan gave me the opportunity to meet a lot of people that I would not have met otherwise."

Sharon Winters
Associate Editor

It was an experience that was sometimes frustrating, but in the long run very rewarding. Seeing how Villanova sports ran behind the scenes was an enjoyment. Plus the fact that I could get into Philly games with a discount and park for free at the Palestra was a bonus. Not only did I benefit from being an editor, but if it wasn't for me, the ice hockey team would never get coverage.

Where Do Women Belong?

By SUSAN WILMARTH

To be a woman at Villanova in 1966 was to be something of an "oddity." That was the year that women broke through the all-male barrier and made Villanova a co-ed university.

Though their numbers were small, the new women made their presence felt. The admittance of women had a profound affect on the social and academic atmosphere at Villanova. Dr. Miriam Vosburgh, associate professor of sociology, admits, "I wasn't here when women first came, but they must have added a richness to the place." Women must have caused quite a shake-up in the all-male Villanova tradition. The presence of women couldn't help but change the whole outlook of the school and add a new dimension, a different perspective, to the Villanova community.

In the years since they were first admitted, the role of women at Villanova has undergone a series of changes. Fifteen years ago, the male/female ratio was considerably lopsided in favor of men. Today, women comprise nearly half of the student body. There are more opportunities for women than ever before in sports, academics, and extra-curricular groups and organizations — virtually all facets of Villanova life. On campus housing for women was unheard of in 1966 and though women's housing is available now, there are complaints that the housing policy is still unfair to women. In respect to recruiting measures, Linda Bickert feels, "if there is any prejudice, it's from outside the school."

In a study done by Vosburgh's sex roles class, some elements of sexism can be found in the Villanovan. The class found that women's sports were not as adequately covered as men. But, Vosburgh was quick to point out that, "most of the sexism was found in the advertisements from outside the university."

One area where women lag far behind their male counterparts, is in the faculty. Vosburgh states, "There are not enough women faculty members. The only adequate representation of women is because of the nursing school." There is strong support of this claim. Dianna Moratti, a junior marketing major, says, "I've never had a woman teacher and as far as I'm concerned there aren't enough women teachers in the business department." Debbie Nachajski, a junior psychology major, has fared a little better, "I've had two women teachers since I've been here." To Linda Bickert, however, the number of female faculty members makes no difference, "I don't care who teaches as long as they're qualified."

Villanova women reflect many of the attitudes prevalent in society as a whole. In her class dealing with sex roles, Vosburgh found that, "generally, women's attitudes toward sex roles are more modern than men's. Women have stronger feeling on equality and a more modern view of marriage." That may come as a shock to those who charge that most women at Villanova are in pursuit of a "M degree." As Kate McDon points out, "Anyone who's her Villanova, paying all that mo is certainly not here just to fi husband."

According to Vosburgh, to extent, men and women at V nova, as in all of society, hav fervent roles. Vosburgh exp "women see themselves some differently from men, but are pared to take on the same t as men these days."

Where Were You?

By DAVID POMA and BOB HERMAN

Chicago had its fire, San Francisco had its earthquakes, New York City had its blackouts and last week on Tuesday, November 10, Villanova had its own catastrophe.

The fall semester always has seemed endless because there are no real holidays other than Thanksgiving, but what about November 10? What? You didn't know about November 10? No, it wasn't Veterans Day. It was "Lack of Water Pressure Day." Where were you when the water was shut off?

Many of us were notified that there were no classes by 10:00 a.m. on Tuesday.

Since we could not go to class, we pondered about how we should spend our unexpected, yet welcomed holiday.

The library seemed as good a place as any to spend this day to catch up on some work, but after we went in, we were told that the library would be closing by 12:00 p.m.

Oh, well, that's okay. We really didn't feel like "hitting the books" any way. Maybe it would be nice to go into Philadelphia for the afternoon, but we had better go to the bank first for some money. The only problem seemed to be that the bank closed at 12 noon too. Well, there goes that idea.

Let's go to lunch and maybe we can decide what to do there. After that it might be a good idea to go see a couple of teachers just to rack up a few points.

The Philosophy Department seemed like a good place to start because philosophy always seems to be a troublesome subject. But there was nobody around — the phrase "bats out of hell" came to mind. While we were in Vasey, we decided to stop by the English Department. When we walked in, we found that the English professors were on the heels of the escaping philosophy professors. More bats.

Oh, well. There was only one thing left to do — sleep, but we should set our alarms an hour earlier because dinner was scheduled to begin at 3:30 and it would take at least fifteen minutes to get to the dining halls. Finally, we would be able to learn about the ambience of St. Mary's dining hall.

Well, maybe it isn't worth the walk to St. Mary's or the Law School for the "shopper's special" of Soup, Sandwich, Salad, Soda at St. Mary's. So, our day without the "three r's" ended with an evening of the five s's.

Many "Run For Hunger"

By CAROL ALKONS

Late last Monday afternoon, Hunger Awareness Week's annual "Run for Hunger" took place.

"In just three hours, 59 runners ran a total of 511 miles — an average of 8.7 miles per person," stated Dave Nieskens, chairman of the event. "There were more runners this year than in the previous two years. Also, there was a great deal of volunteer work from Austin Hall to help work the race," he commented.

The route was a one mile loop around campus, starting at the library and continuing around Tolentine, down along Austin field and back behind Sheehan and Sullivan Halls.

Dr. John Durnin, from Villanova's Education department ran the longest distance — 21 miles — and was awarded a large Villanova University mug. Dr. Lew Morgan, also from the Education department ran 20 miles. The prize for the runner who turns in the most money from his or her sponsors will be awarded after all the funds are returned.

Nieskens seemed pleased with the results of the day: "The weather held up — that was good. We had plenty of cooperation fr everyone, and everyone had a g time." Nieskens, who declar himself "not a runner," yet w ran five miles added: "But we all sore."

U.S.C. Invited Lynch

By MARISA BOLINSKI

"Shakespeare: The Globe and the World," recently opened in Los Angeles at the California Museum of Science and Industry. This exhibition was sponsored by the American Film Institute, the Folger Institute of Renaissance and Eighteenth-Century Studies, the University of California, and the University of Southern California. Its purpose was to stimulate new interest in Shakespeare and his works. A major event that coincided with the exhibition was a symposium entitled "Shakespeare on the Screen," which was designed to introduce college and university teachers to the theory, practice, and methodology that is part of producing Shakespeare for television and film. The American Film Institute invited Joan Lynch, a professor from Villanova University to act as scholar consultant at the symposium.

Lynch is a member of the theater department and has taught at Villanova for nine years. Upon entering her office on the first floor of Vasey Hall, an immediate sense of relaxation and friendship is felt. Her quiet, yet clear voice complements her friendly and pleasant personality. Behind Dr. Lynch's clear blue eyes a storehouse of valuable knowledge prevails in her conversation, despite her natural modesty. Her credentials for the program stem from her educational background and related teaching experience. She taught a course in Film and Theater in the honors department at Villanova and has her master's in theater. She earned her doctorate in communications with an emphasis on film study.

Lynch flew out to the University of Southern California for three very busy days of lectures, discussion sessions, and demonstrations about Shakespeare and film. Her guiding standard of looking at any discussion centered around the question: "What would the questions be and to consider the answers to a contemporary audience." She commented, "I had to ask myself, 'If I had never seen a Shakespeare play before, what would I want to know?'" Lynch also participated in a panel discussion on "Shakespeare and Film" and a panel discussion on "Shakespeare and Theater." A few high sch teachers were also present.

The three day program be with a documentary of John Ha mann, actor in "The Paper Cha and also a noted stage and film rector, directing a production "King Lear." Its purpose was show how Hausmann works w actors and how he builds a mod production. Hausmann then spo on the importance of the tra tional preservation of Shak speare's plays. His opinion w that Shakespeare's works sho be presented as they were writt A few speakers who follow Hausmann gave an opposite vie point, stating that the direc should be allowed to interp Shakespeare's scripts and st them from his own point of vie

Lynch held the moderate, int pretive approach to Shakespear work. It can even be seen throu her choice of clothing attire consisting of blazers and shirts t she is a woman who keeps up w the times and also in accord with style, but also in day to d life.

This, a disappointed am Lynch admitted that she "did see much of Los Angeles on t visit to California." Her time s planned for her from 8 a.m. to p.m. on each of the three da Despite the restrictions that th symposium had imposed upon her schedule of activities, "I ha the time to enjoy myself quietly and relax at the beach. I had a wonderful time."

You Bet Your Life

By NANCY MARTIN

What is diabetes? Do I have a chance of being afflicted with it some day? These are two very common questions that are asked when the topic of diabetes is mentioned. Diabetes is the third leading cause of death in the country and the leading cause of all forms of blindness. Everyone needs to know more about Diabetes since it affects young and old alike and is steadily rising at a rate of 6% every year.

Diabetes mellitus, the proper name for this disease, is a chronic disorder of carbohydrate (sugar) metabolism. The specific cause is not known, but there are a few predisposing factors: family tendency, obesity, stress, and possibly diet. Diabetes occurs when there is insulin deficiency in the body. Insulin is a hormone secreted by the pancreas which responds to high blood sugar levels. When there is not enough insulin as in diabetes, glucose is not able to be used for energy by the cells of the body and the blood glucose level rises, producing hyperglycemia. With this rise comes the onset of the four cardinal symptoms of diabetes millitus: excessive urination, excessive thirst, weight loss, and excessive hunger.

There are three types of diabetes mellitus — one, juvenile or insulin-dependent diabetes, which occurs at any age and is treated by the administration of insulin, exercise, and diet control. two, Adult maturity onset diabetes, which is commonly seen in overweight persons over forty and is controlled with a proper diet and/or the administration of oral hypoglycemic agents or insulin, and three, gestational diabetes, which appears with pregnancy and is controlled by diet and insulin. All three types of diabetes mellitus can be adequately controlled, and complications that accompany diabetes such as eye, kidney, heart and nervous disorders can thus be delayed in onset or reduced in severity. Keep this in mind: diabetics do lead normal lives!

To check for diabetes, a simple urine screening is done to test for the presence of glucose. The American Diabetes Association can answer any questions that you may have and provide support for diabetics and their families. If you think you have diabetes, consult your physician. Diabetes is not a condition that will go away by itself but with proper care the effect can be minimized.

Head For The New Fashion

By GINNA RANAUDO

There is an annoying, urgent sound coming from someplace in the room and after a few seconds, (light dawns): the horrible noise is the alarm clock. It must have been ringing for a while because there are only ten minutes left to get to class. Closet doors fly open and the first thing grabbed is six-year-old jeans and an old tee-shirt from the last cross country meet in high school.

Finally waking up (after class), one views campus style with awe. The energy filling the air is "dressed to kill." Everyone else that is: IZOD here and Ralph Lauren there, not to mention Calvin Klein and Adidas everywhere! The gruly, sloppy look just does not fit today.

Surely everyone finds himself one day or another in this predicament, yet the dress code among these students is high style. Just walking around campus, one can also see different styles of dress among the women and men. This seems to be the age of individualism where many styles are in, not limiting only the very tall, thin and chic to be in.

This is the 1980s and at Villanova, it seems that anything goes, anything expensive that is. The co-eds don't seem to mind spending money on clothes that make well and compliment the figure. Most girls have decided when to buy an expensive, worthwhile piece of garment and when not to buy the temporary, expensive trends that designers push so hard to sell. Villanova seems to be a community of fashion-conscious women and the result is a well-groomed university.

Since Villanova draws students from the northern states such as those is New England, as well as New York and New Jersey; southern states such as Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and Florida and western states; many different styles gather together. With this blend of students, together with the Main Line influence, Villanova basically has two types of dress: conservative preps and the wild-chic-New-York. There are others, however, who dress somewhere in the middle, yet the majority of the students fall into one of the two groups, with the preps representing the larger group.

Individuality at Villanova seems to be an important characteristic that should be admired among the students because people are not afraid to be themselves. "Variety is the spice of life" appears to be the operate phrase.

Aside from the preppie and chic looks, there is another that is coming up at V.U. This is the Western look and although it has been "in" for about a year, the eastern "folk" have taken their time in adopting it. Nevertheless, it is creeping up and revealing itself slowly around campus.

[illegible] denim [illegible] jeans, cowboy boots [illegible] and [illegible] skirts seem a perfect way to dress casually, yet stylish.

As for the men's fashion, basically the athletic look is in the lead. Polo's, Levi's, sweatsuits and high tops in a variety of colors

Marriage Spices Vasey Stage

Susan Furey-Lloyd is the Bride and Jim Pomilo is Leonardo in Vasey's production of 'Blood Wedding.'

By STEPHANIE M. SCHWARTZBERG

The latest production by Villanova Theatre is Frederico Garcia Lorca's Blood Wedding. Director Irene Baird brings to the Vasey Stage a passionate drama of love, hate and revenge. It is the story of a bride who, on her wedding night, while the guests still dance and sing, flees with Leonardo, her former fiance.

Lon Winston's set and lighting create the scene beautifully. Blood Wedding is set in a small Spanish town far up in the hills. Everyone knows everyone in this little town. Old family ties are strong but family rivalries are even more intense. The very opening of the play is a mother pleading with her son not to take a knife with him when he goes to the vineyards. Both this man's father and brother had been killed in knife fights. The mother's seething hatred for the family that killed them can be felt throughout the audience.

The young man in this scene is the same young man who will be left by his new bride for a man who is a member of the family that killed his father and brother.

The bride is a rich young woman who lives with her father on a distant farm. She is, by the standard of the day, a good woman. She bakes bread in the early morning and keeps a clean house. When she first appears, in a meeting between her father and the groom's mother, she is obviously uncomfortable. Her first meeting with her future mother-in-law is understandably tense. The bridedoesn't even feel secure and happy with her fiance. Her temper is short and she is evidently upset about her position; she still loves Leonardo.

At fifteen the bride was engaged to marry Leonardo, but he is now married to the bride's cousin and has a child by her. Leonardo is a dashing figure. He drives his horse to the far-off farm of the young bride whom he still yearns to have sex with. Leonardo is evil yet it is impossible not to be attracted by this passionate man, masterfully played by Jim Pomilo.

The title Blood Wedding brings out a major theme of the play. This theme is one of blood, of families and their reputations and the effect these reputations have on the individuals of each family. The groom is from a respectable family and is therefore of good blood, but Leonardo and the bride are not so fortunate. Leonardo is condemned by the groom's mother as a member of a murderous family who "kill quickly and well." The bride is of dubious background because as a neighbor relates, her mother did not love her father. Ultimately the bride cannot stay with the groom, she and Leonardo are already wed in their bad blood, though she wears another man's ring.

The mother of the groom is played well by Patricia Maskinas. In the opening scene, a fight with her son, she has such high intensity that it seems she can go no higher but at the bride's desertion of the groom, her son, she does just that.

Leonardo is an enchanting demon in contrast to the conventional goodness of the groom, played by Richard Lolla. Both in ideals and in battle Leonardo and the groom clash.

Susan Furey-Lloyd, as the bride, is wonderful. She forces the audience to despise the runaway bride yet she coerces them also to pity a woman trapped by a former love. Maureen Lynch, Leonardo's spouse, has a lovely singing voice and does a good job as the foresaken wife. Geneva Wiggins-Collins as the bride's servant is a very strong character. She is the only one who knows about the bride and Leonardo before the wedding and tries to stop them, to no avail.

Queen Chronicles Their Best

By PETER BERKERY

Queen's Greatest Hits album may be a disappointment to die-hard Queen fans, especially since no songs are included from Queen II. The band should have released a double album rather than a single, but for a single album, Greatest Hits contains a wide range of songs; perhaps not the "greatest" but definitely the best selling. Included among the album's 14 songs is a new song composed, performed, and produced by Queen and David Bowie, entitled Under Pressure. The song marks the first time Queen has collaborated with another artist on any album. Although Bowie and Queen may seem an unusual combination, their style is somewhat similar, and both Bowie and lead singer Freddie Mercury have a good vocal range that works well together. Mercury may not have the power on the high notes that he used to, but drummer Roger Taylor can still provide a powerful "why" when called upon. Due to the nature of its composition the song is distinctively Queen and David Bowie. The single as well as the album is receiving heavy promotion from Elektra-Asylum records and both should prove to be top sellers.

Queen, lead singer Freddie Mercury, lead guitarist Brian May, drummer Roger Taylor, and boss guitarist John Deacon, formed back in 1971. When Freddie Mercury joined with Brian May and Roger Taylor, former members of Smile, all three gave up promising careers to form what would become Queen. Mercury was working on his diploma at Ealing College of Art. Taylor, with whom Mercury had once shared a stall selling art in Kensington Market, had earned a degree in Biology. May had a degree in astronomy and just recently earned his doctorate in that field. The three were joined by John Deacon who had a first class honors degree in electronics and the band was on its way.

Keep Yourself Alive was Queen's first big hit off their first album Queen and is appropriately included in the Greatest Hits package. Brian May says the song was written as "a lighthearted comment on the life of a rock group, and it turned out to be strangely prophetic." The song was adopted as a theme by Queen fans and has been included in every Queen concert ever played. After the release of Queen in '73 Queen was voted "Band of the Year" in a Melody Maker reader's poll. Two months later the band released Queen II, and toured the States with Mott the Hoople in 1974.

Although Queen and Keep Yourself Alive both achieve "gold" status, in England the band was relatively unknown in the U.S. The album Sheer Heart Attack and the single Killer Queen broke the ice in the U.S. and several other countries. The bands soaring vocal blend and Brian May's sizzling guitar sound caught the ear of many listeners and critics in the States and Killer

'Just Between Ourselves'

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Recently, Alan Ayckbourn's Just Between Ourselves finished its run at the Annenberg Center (on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania). In two acts, Just Between Ourselves is a study of people and their relationships. Ayckbourn uses the lives of two couples and an elderly woman to send home his message.

Dennis Crothorne (Herb Foster) is a carefree sort who is always busy in his garage fixing or working on something. His wife Vera (Peggy Cowles) resents him always spending time in his garage and not with her. Neil Andrews (Robert Lanchester) is a neurotic milquetoast who gets sharp pains in his side whenever he is upset or is faced with a decision. His wife Pam (Jill Tanner) is a domineering woman who resents Neil's lack of aggression. Finally, Marjorie is Dennis's overbearing mother. In other words everyone's mother-in-law.

The play opens up with Dennis, as always, working in his garage. His car is up for sale and Neil Andrews is an interested buyer. This opening scene ties in how the couples meet.

After this, Ayckbourn systematically brings the characters together whenever one of their birthdays rolls around. Ayckbourn ironically uses the birthday, the symbol of good times and gifts, to let each character vent his problems.

Directed by Nagle Jackson, Just Between Ourselves was first presented at the Queen's Theatre in London, in 1977. The play is reminiscent of Neil Simon's Same Time Next Year, in that it has its characters meet during a certain time period.

On the whole Just Between Ourselves is entertaining. Herb Foster is wonderful as Dennis and his antics and expressions bring to mind Dudley Moore. Joan White who plays Dennis's nagging mother is cute. We have seen this character many times before but we still laugh. Yet the play does have its shortcomings. The characters as a whole were rather predictable and the first act was quite slow. Still, that did not stop this reviewer from having a thoroughly enjoyable evening out.

In Concert:
Human Sexual Response

By STEVE HELMETAG

"What does sex mean to me?/What does sex mean to society?"

Human Sexual Response, who performed at the Bijou Cafe last Thursday night, is one band willing to ask provocative questions of its audience.

Playing before a sparse, but enthusiastic crowd, Human Sexual Response offered a unique blend of Manhattan Transfer-styled vocals meshed with an art-punk rhythm unit a la Public Image Ltd.

Although not having played with each other in a week, the seven-member band showed off a high level of professionalism with some particularly intricate musical patterns. Supporting their second album release, In A Roman Mood, HSR pounded through an intense 18-song set, displaying an array of vocal ability.

Headed by Larry Bangor, HSR's vocal work is handled by Casey Cameron, Windie Davis, Dini Lanot, and chief lyricist Bangor.

Although based in Boston, they have 'claimed' to be from California ever since the group toured the West Coast last month. According to drummer Malcom Travis, "Today's American bands must be from California to be in vogue." By playing with his sticks backwards, Travis is in vogue in his own way.

Highlighting the Bijou show were Guardian Angel and What Does Sex Mean To Me? from the Figure 14 debut, along with the more recent 1-10.

In the former, a deviant little boy finally learns to behave himself when he finds his "Guardian Angel." The combination of facial expressions, an effective use of a tambourine, and the mere uttering of the word makes Sex one of the band's most creative works. All three are well-remembered because of multi-layered choruses with somewhat off-beat lyrics throughout.

Usha Usha is an adventure into the advant-garde. The lyrics — consisting of moans, words, and partial words — are minimalistic and make little sense, at least to this reviewer. However, between the staccato clash and phase shifting of Rich Gilbert's guitar and the usual brilliant vocal sounds, Usha Usha is a credible adventure, especially when put on live.

Gilbert is responsible for the band's music. Unfortunately, due to technical problems inside the guitarist's amplifier, his playing was not as prevalent as it probably should have been. "We all had to adjust our levels a bit to cover up the hiss coming from Rich's amp," said Travis. Regardless, the band was able to continue after a short five-minute break.

The band's encore set, consisting of three numbers, included two covers: Cool Jerk, and Hang On Sloopy. The rendition of Cool Jerk, first heard on Figure 14, appropriately concluded the show with a frenzy, proving that besides having a great name, Human Sexual Response is a great band to see in concert.

The quickest way to get emergency money.

These days a trip to the college bookstore can reduce your available funds to some small change. Luckily, that's about all you need to make the one phone call that can replenish your depleted funds in a couple of hours. Here's what to do:

1. Call home. Report the situation, and tell the folks they can get emergency cash to you fast by phone.

2. Ask them to call Western Union's toll-free number, [illegible] in Missouri, [illegible], anytime, day or night. They charge [illegible] and service fee to their [illegible]

Valentino's Romances Discofans

By KATHI IANNACONE

It has been said that variety is the spice of life. If this is believed to be true then Valentino's is hotter than a bowl of chili in Mexico.

Although it is believed that this club's address is in Cherry Hill, New Jersey Valentino's may seem to the inexperienced disco-fan to be located somewhere in the outer hemisphere.

Beginning with the vast array of clothing that donned the place in all of its glory, Valentino's sparkled with more metallic than the sky on a clear night. I guess I should have realized what I was in for when I pulled up to the door and saw four "girls" in mini-mini skirts made of gold or silver material that had that crinkled tin foil look.

Other outfits that attracted my attention were those trimmed in fur and leather and also those made of leopard with plunging v-necks both in the front and back.

The guys were no exception to the modern outfit look. They dazzled the room with ripped T-shirts, skinny ties and leather in just as many unusual ways as did the girls.

The lighting was yet another aspect that lent to the galactical atmosphere. The lights on the bar-room ceiling were shaped into the geometrical 5-point star patterns that gave way to a romantic struck feeling.

Mirrors surrounded every hall in the small crowded room. The lights of rainbow colors reflected off the mirrors to create unusual lighting illusions. There were spot lights, stroblights and footlights which surrounded the perimeter of the room.

Entering through the massive foyer doors and located to the extreme left was the dancing area. What made this so wonderful was that it was not just a section of floorspace but rather a raised platform with another stage-like platform set upon it.

The dancing area was also engulfed with lights and mirrors. One unique feature was the mirrors in the large wall behind the dance-floor which roused outrageous neon lighting within these mirrored halls.

All along the textured walls of Valentino's were large, plush, couches and scattered cocktail tables. The seating provided just the amount of relaxing atmosphere that was needed for such an extravagant setting.

If it's hot and spicy excitement that you're looking for, then Valentino's is one club that fulfills these requirements. It lends the right amount of romance and fun to what could be just another dying disco. Valentino's is a "super-freaky" place that shouldn't be missed.

Mercury and Co. Keep Alive

Queen became the band's first big hit. The band followed up the success of Sheer Heart Attack with their next two albums A Night at the Opera and A Day at the Races. The six-minute long, operatic single off A Night at the Opera entitled Bohemian Rhapsody became the band's firs million selling single in the U.S. In England, it became the length at No. 1 record holder, topping the charts for nine weeks. A Day at the Races provided two hits for Queen; Somebody to Love and You're my Best Friend. The gospel overtones of Somebody to Love were inspired by the style of Aretha Franklin, one of Freddie's favorite singers. You're my Best Friend was written by John Deacon and was his first big hit. One of the main reasons for Queen's success is that all four members write their own songs in different styles. The final product is a group effort but the writing and composition is an individual one.

Despite commercial success, Queen was sharply criticized by the British press. Mercury wrote Queen's next big selling hit We are the Champions as a tongue-in-cheek answer to the press. Champions was released as a double-A-sided single along with We Will Rock You and became the band's first platinum single in the states. The songs were included on the News of the World LP, released in 1977, which topped the charts in the U.S., Holland, Belgium, France, Israel, Canada, Brazil, Ireland, and Mexico.

Queen's seventh L.P. Jazz received criticism for being a promotional rather than an artistic album. Bicycle Race and Fat Bottomed Girls were the two big hits off Jazz and are included on Greatest Hits. The selection of Bicycle Race is rather questionable, but Fat Bottomed Girls illustrates the skill of Brian May, who may be one of Rock's most underrated guitarists. Freddie Mercury plays guitar for the first time on Queen's next big single Crazy Little Thing Called Love released in December of 1979. Buckingham Nicks Fleetwoods

Lindsey Buckingham: Ain't he cute?

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Earlier this year Mick Fleetwood and Stevie Nicks of Fleetwood Mac released solo albums. Now a third member of the band, Lindsey Buckingham is throwing his hat into the ring. Buckingham's Law and Order may not sell as many albums as Stevie Nicks's Belladonna, but it is a much more creative if not interesting work.

Law and Order contains ten songs which reflect the diverse talents of Buckingham. Bwana and Trouble are two tracks which exude feeling and mood. Both songs have a reggae-ska sound which makes one want to keep time with the music.

Johnny Stew, (which is probably a tribute to John Lennon) is a catchy tune that could be the hit of the album. Shadow of The West is a good song complete with pretty harmony from Christine McVie.

Law and Order can truly be called a "solo" album. Besides producing and writing all of the songs, Buckingham plays all of the instruments except for Trouble where Mick Fleetwood plays drums and George Hawkins bass. Whether or not this is an ego trip for him, Buckingham succeeds in putting together a fine album.

What sets this album apart from other solo albums is that Lindsey Buckingham takes chances! Most solo albums use a formula which says to get studio musicians, do several cover versions and write silly lyrics complete with basic rock and roll riffs.

Buckingham's interest in ska is truly transformed on vinyl. He doesn't sound tired and bored with what he's singing or playing. So if you're looking for something a little different as far as solo albums go, and for some aural stimulation, Law and Order is for you.

Playoffs Wind Down

By BOB CONWAY

Last week, there were 16 playoff teams. Now there are four. The four teams are Athletes Foot, DKE, Moon Unit and Wally's Gators.

Athletes Foot, the number one seed, has won their two postseason games in workmen-like fashion. "The Foot" beat the wildcard LXA squad 12-0. Following the opening-round win "the Foot" toppled Tanz's Terrors 24-7. This game was tied at seven at the half, but Athletes Foot ran back two punts for scores to put the game out of reach.

Tanz's Terrors had reached the second round beating the Fury 12-6. The Terrors, seeded ninth, were the only team to upset a higher-seeded team. The Fury was the only division winning team that did not get by the first round.

DKE was impressive in their first two wins. DKE beat the Black Sheep 12-6. Then, in the second round, DKE handled Chain Reaction 14-6 to gain a spot in the final four.

The Moon Unit, the only team that did not win its division to make it to the quarter finals, had an easy time beating the Plague, 26-0. Chip Suski's punt return for a touchdown put this game out of reach. The moon Unit then had to beat highly rated GBU to earn a rematch with division rival, Wally's Gators. The Moon Unit accomplished the task they set out to do by beating GBU 12-6. Phil Huben made a spectacular catch for the game-winning touchdown.

GBU almost did not make it to the second round. The Gladiators, primarily a freshmen team, took GBU into overtime before succumbing 12-6.

Wally's Gators had an easy time with the Travelers. On the Gators first play from scrimage they scored, and then romped to a 27-0 victory. The Gators then proceeded to trip up the Wall Bangers 19-6.

QUEEN

ideas." The song was No. 1 in the U.S. for five weeks and was the best selling single of 1980, with over 3-million copies sold. Play the Game was another hit from The Game, marking the first time Queen used a synthesizer on any of their records.

Recognized all over the world as one of the greatest live bands, Queen set a record for paid attendance at a rock concert. When 130,000 fans cheered them on in Brazil last Spring, Queen was the first major rock band to tour South America and in seven concerts they were seen by over half a million fans. The future looks very promising for the band and they seem anxious to expand their horizons. "It's not a question of money anymore," says Freddie Mercury. "I spend money like it's nothing. But money doesn't control me. What I do need is to be honestly able to say to myself that I'm still enjoying the whole business of singing in Queen. As long as we feel a sense of achievement and that we are breaking new ground, we're very happy and ought to continue."

Cats NCAA Bound Again

By LARRY GOANOS

Led by senior standout Ross Donoghue, the Villanova men's cross country team raced to a second place finish, behind Penn State, in the NCAA District II Championships at Lehigh University on Saturday. Donoghue, Nova's most consistent harrier this fall, posted a first-place finish in 29:51.2, which was good enough to edge out such runners as Patrick Peterson of Manhattan and U.S. Olympian John Gregorek of Georgetown. Gregorek however, as Donoghue himself was quick to point out, has been bothered by an injury for the last three weeks.

Of course Donoghue did not do it all by himself, he had a little help from his friends. Villanova's John Hunter, Marcus O'Sullivan and Brian O'Keefe placed 10th, 12th and 26th respectively. Perhaps the biggest boost which the team received, according to Coach Jack Pyrah, was from Dermot Anderson, a walk-on who finished in the 33rd position. "I was especially pleased by Dermot's performance," explained Pyrah.

This was the first meet of the season in which the Cats were reasonably healthy. Everything came together just in time for the second place finish was good enough to qualify Villanova for the NCAA Cross Country National Championships for the 23rd consecutive year. The Cats will be in Witchita, Kansas on Monday, November 23rd to take on such national powers as UTEP, Providence, and Arkansas. Pyrah hopes to improve upon the Cat's ninth place finish of a year ago, but he realizes that it will not be an easy task. "We don't have Amos Korir and Sydney Maree this year, but we'll do the best that we can," he said.

As for Donoghue, he is just pleased to be going to the national championships. "It's really exciting," he explained, "Because we're bringing a healthy team out there. As for myself, I didn't expect to be running this well. In my last three races I've set personal records."

Ross Donoghue won the NCAA District II Championships at Lehigh. Villanova placed second in the race earning them a spot at the NCAA finals.

Oldtimers to Play Reunion Game in Field House

By MIKE HEALEY

As most collegiate basketball fans will attest, Villanova's roundball teams have enjoyed a prestigious tradition throughout most of their existence. The name, Villanova, is pretty much synonymous with excellence, not only on an eastern level, but on the national scene, too.

If considered in perspective of the talented performers who have rendered their services here, it is indeed easy to see why Nova squads have been so successful over the years. Just go through the long lineage of stellar performers: McDonnell, Huggard, Sims, Porter, Jones, Ingelsby, Rigsby, Herron, etc, etc..

One could go on and on extolling the electrifying performances of those aforementioned athletes, and the thrills and suspense that accompanied them. Of course, all Wildcat fans have that special memory of a thrill. But the athletes too, cherish a special moment or game thrill in their careers which can never be matched again.

For Bob McDonnell, currently a publicity man with the Phillies, that unique moment came in the 1943-43 season in a game against Princeton. The Cats had an outstanding campaign that year, finishing with a 19-2 record.

McDonnell relates: "Unofficially that year we were No. 1 in the east and they were No. 2. It was a typical Field House game. the stands were packed and the fans were crazy, so loud you could hardly hear yourself think."

"They had some great guys," he continued, "but we put together a great team effort and beat them. I remember how confident we were in any game we played in the Field House. The fans were so close and so loud, it was a super feeling."

Some of you readers may remember a more recent Villanova grad named Whitey Rigsby. Rigsby's collegiate career spanned from 1975 to 1978. He played in a phenomenal 107 consecutive games and finished with 798 career points. Now a sales engineer in the Philadelphia area, Rigsby's great moments came in a series of 1978 NCAA games versus LaSalle, Inidana, and Duke.

"I remember the afternoon game against LaSalle at the Palestra," says Rigsby. "The place was packed to the rafters and the game was televised. It was like a match-up between Brooks and Herron, two great players. I guess it was more like a track meet than a basketball game. I mean, how often do two college teams score 200 points in one game? The final score was 103-96 in our favor. After that we moved to Providence and faced Indiana."

Rigsby continues: "It was great to play against Bobby Knight. I was in foul trouble, in and out of the game. Late, we were down by 10. The book says that you don't come back against a Knight team when you are down that late. But we did as Sparrow hit a buzzer-beater. What a super feeling. Finally, we lost to Duke. All in all though, it was a super, super series."

The Wall Bangers beat the Delts 6-0 before losing to the Gators. This young team, quarterbacked by Bob Szadek, kept their heads in beating a very physical Delts team. The only score of this exciting game came on a double-reverse pass from Tom Roberti to John Adams.

Later today, the Gators will play the Moon Unit. The Moon Unit, which lost 12-6 in the first game these two powers played, will be looking for revenge.

Athletes Foot will play DKE. Both of these teams are very physical. The winner of this game might not have enough able bodies to field a team for the championship game which will be played Sunday afternoon.

Watercats Look to Defend Big East

By STEPHEN FALLON

With the 1981 season just two weeks away, it is time to take a look at one of the more overlooked teams at Villanova, the men's swim team.

Under Coach Ed Geisz, the Villanova swimming program has developed into one of the finest in the east. Geisz himself has rolled up an impressive track record over the past 28 years here at Villanova. In this time, the personable mentor has amassed over 200 wins as well as coaching 18 All-Americans. One of these All-Americans, Dick McDonough, was named 10 times to the select group in the early 1960's. Geisz has also groomed 3 Olympic swimmers while developing the respect of his colleagues throughout the college ranks.

The program is run with a major emphasis on academics which prepares the student-swimmer for the future, not only the next swim meet. This is by no means meant to imply that the swimmers don't work. On the contrary, training begins in September with Nautilus workouts and long distance running. "Swimming requires discipline, the training is tough, even boring, but if you want to excel you have to commit yourself. It's that simple," remarked Geisz.

This year's squad appears to be extremely talented. There are seven returning lettermen from last year's team which posted a 10-4 record and won the Big East Conference Championship. Add to that two "blue chip" recruits and you have a team quite capable of defending their title. The recruits, Paul Staley from Delray Beach, Florida and high school All-American Jose Alvarez from Wilmington, Delaware, should help solidify the already talented team. However, the task will not be easy as the Cats face an arduous schedule including some of the finest teams in the country, Army, Navy, Yale, and Maryland.

The team, lead by tri-captains Darrell Linder, Matt Rafferty (Rugged Raf), and Dan Ahern, is a close unit which will be extremely important for the long season ahead. "The team does a lot together outside of practice. We're really close and there are no personality conflicts," replied Linder when asked about the team's temperament. "This is important when you consider it is easy to get frustrated. We all help motivate each other and pick one another up," added Linder, who disdained a summer job to work out all summer with Rafferty in preparation for the season.

Swimming Coach Ed Geisz

Discipline, motivation, friendship, and talent, all attributes of a winner. According to Coach Geisz the goals of this year's team are simple, "A winning season, a good showing in the Eastern Championships, and to defend our Big East Championship."

Cats Trip Up Cibona in Exhibition Game

By JIM FEMIA

Villanova opened their 1981-82 basketball season on Tuesday night, hosting Cibona, the Yugoslavia National Team at the Field House. It was "Jake Nevin Appreciation Night" and the Cats treated Jake, and the rest of the Villanova fans to an impressive 89-63 victory.

But this year's season opener drew more attention than in previous years. After all, Wildcat fans were watering at the mouth to check out the new recruits that they've heard so much about, and just as anxious to see the entire Wildcat squad, which has been included in most pre-season polls.

Villanova was Cibona's first stop of their eastern United States tour. The Yugoslavians will play each member of the Big East before returning home. Cibona is one of the most respected and top international teams in the world but Villanova was not intimidated at all, taking it to their guests right from the start.

Coach Rollie Massimino unleased a starting unit of John Pinone at center, Aaron Howard and Mike Mulquin at forward and Stewart Granger and Frank Dobbs at the backcourt. The Cats opened playing an aggressive man-to-man defense and held Cibona scoreless over the first three minutes. In fact, in their first six possessions, Cibona turned the ball over to the Cats. But Villanova's offense wasn't at its best and only managed a 10-6 early lead.

Five minutes into the game, Villanova fans got their first look at two of the three recruits, Ed Pinkney and Dwayne McClain. From this point, Villanova took control and went on a nine to two scoring binge and never looked back, cruising to a 24-11 lead.

Villanova completely dominated play throughout the rest of the first half. Pinone picked up where he left off last season netting ten first half points, all of which came from in close or from the free-throw line. Howard, who is better known for his defensive and rebounding abilities chipped in ten points as well. Not only was Howard an asset to the Cats on the offensive end but he also ripped down nine first half rebounds.

But Cibona regrouped at half-time and raced back at the beginning of the second half, cutting the Cat lead to 55-41. Led by 7-0 center Kresimer Cosic and forward Zoran Citura, Cibona stole the momentum of the game and held Villanova to two points over a six minute span. But Villanova began to run the ball and scored 11 unanswered points to build up a comfortable 26 point lead. The Cats then coasted the final seven minutes enroute to a 89-63 victory.

After a 26 point victory over a top notch organization, the Villanova basketball team proved to everyone that they DID deserve those pre-season votes and the recruits showed everyone that they ARE as good as everyone said they were.

Villanova's next game will be Nov. 29 when they host Monmouth College in the Field House. Prior to the game, there will be a Villanova Oldtimers game. Game time is 7:00.

Supremes New Champs

By JOHN JORDAN

When the playoffs began only 8 teams were left to decide the women's intramural football championship. When the playoffs ended last Sunday, on a muddy field, the Supremes defeated the Beavers 12-0 to claim their first championship. The Supremes 5-1-0 during the season swept through the playoffs in convincing style by scoring 30 points and allowing none.

"I'm really proud of our team," stated co-captain Vivian Foranoce, "especially of our defense, they shut-out every team this year except for the first game of the season."

As the Supremes were wiping out their opponents, the rest of the playoffs were marked by very close scores. The most exciting game of the first round pitted the wild card team Mccarthy against the defending champs Halbert's Hoons. The game was a tough duel but the defending champs came out on top 13-6 in overtime. In the other two games the Football Team defeated the Mighty Mites 13-12 and the Beavers trounced Roxie's Rollers 14-0.

In the semi-finals the Supremes subdued the Hoons by a 12-0 score. The game not only eliminated the Supremes toughest competition but gave them the confidence to take the championship. The win over the Hoons also had a special meaning for the Supremes quarterback Maureen Sullivan. Maureen was the quarterback for Holberts Hoons last year. After leading that team to victory, she switched loyalties to become co-captain of the Supremes. Meanwhile the Beavers got by the Football Team 7-6 because of a missed extra point.

The final stage was set, as the two Harpo League rivals, the Supremes and the Beavers squared-off for the championship. The Beavers 6-0 had handed the Supremes their only loss of the season and were favored to win. The first score in the game came on a ten-yard dash by the Supremes best running back, Cynthia Burke. That remained the game's only score until late in the second half when the two co-captains, Sullivan to Foranoce hooked up for a fifteen-yard touchdown throw. The Beavers put on some threatening drives but the Supremes defense stood the test and the game ended 12-0.

"The playoffs really ran well this year," said Commissioner Pam Zurkowski, "the girls seemed to enjoy it. There was a big celebration after the championship game which both teams came to. The sportsmanship was really great even though everyone wanted to win very badly." The playoffs, as in any other league, was marked with some controversy but for the most part, the officiating was well done.

"I tried to make it as fair as possible," stated Borkowski. "I had five referees for each playoff game while normally we have two."

"I was surprised that we won it all," said Vivian Foranoce. "I think we had one practice all year. But we had a lot of fun and played well together."

Hope Appears for Football

By SHARON WINTERS

Bob Hope headlined a musical-comedy evening at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia for the restoration of football at Villanova. On Tuesday, Hope performed three comedy sets, sang, and returned for an encore, after receiving a standing ovation from the crowd of 2,000.

"I'm available," sang Hope in his opening song. "Anytime you need my talents, I'll be there . . . That's why I'm here at Villanova."

"You should have a team. What is a college without a team?" Hope questioned. His response: "It's like Dolly Parton without a tight sweater." Later, he referred to himself as an "old football player," claiming that "I used to play center, but I had to quit because I was too ticklish."

Football was also the topic for sportscaster Al Meltzer, the master of ceremonies. "I have a partial score. Villanova: nothing," he said. "But, it's only the first quarter and where there's Hope, there's football," he added.

Meltzer read several messages to the audience that he had received. The first was from LeRoy Zimmerman, state attorney general: "Athletics are an important part of life. Football is one of the most exciting." Zimmerman a Commerce and Finance alumnus, extended his best wishes for the restoration of football.

Another message extended "best wishes and support" citing football as a positive force. Sent by Joseph V. Paterno, football coach at Penn State, the note explained that the loss of football deprived a university of a valuable resource.

Later, Douglas J. Murray, president of the general alumni club and a member of the Committee to Restore Football, presented the comedian with a framed portrait of the chapel at Villanova after which Hope introduced the Committee members in the audience, and had them stand up. "They will work and will continue to work for the restoration of football," Hope said. "Villanova in Latin means we have not yet begun to fight," he stated. Next, Hope wished "the greatest of luck" to those interested in the football program. "Anytime you want me, call and I'll suit up," he said during a reprise of Thanks for the Memory.

Committee Plans

The Bob Hope show is just one of the projects of the Committee to Restore Football. "We want to demonstrate that we can raise money every year," Murray said. "We will continue doing it." he added. The committee has a promotion scheduled for February 1982 which they will not discuss yet, said Murray. Also, the committee hopes to stage an event in the spring around reunion time, he explained.

The fund-raising drive at the Covered Wagon restaurant in Strafford earlier this year brought in over $100,000 according to Murray. The Hope Benefit is expected to gross $100,000 and net $30,000 after expenses, he said. Bob Hope has a fee for a benefit, but it is less than his usual performance cost, Murray explained.

The committee is also giving out pledge cards for football. The pledges involve supporters of the program promising to buy season tickets for the sport once it is reinstated. Cards were distributed at the Hope concert.

Since the University claims finances as the reason for dropping football, Murray feels that the money raised and the pledges will supply evidence of the ongoing alumni support of the game.

Later in the show, Philadelphia Mayor William Green joined Hope on stage. "I care about Villanova. As you know, I went to law school there." Green said. "I also care about Villanova football. I came here to hope that Villanova football will be reinstituted and to honor this man (Hope)," he continued.

Audience Responds to Entertainment

The Villanova band began the entertainment for the night. They led the audience in V for Villanova and Go Cats Go, as well as other numbers. The audience participated in the songs, prompting one person to say, "They haven't been able to do that for awhile."

Then, Al Meltzer opened the show and introduced the Walter Jay orchestra. The big-band sound of the local group included Shanty Town and In the Mood.

The star-attraction next appeared. A medley of songs associated with Bob Hope's career began and ended with Thanks for the Memory. He wore a grey suit, a red tie with yellow and black

Driscoll Addresses Senate

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

Father President John Driscoll addressed the University Senate at its monthly meeting Friday, November 20.

Introducing his thoughts from what he called an "oblique angle," Driscoll told the Senate that it might find his words, "encouraging and at points, frightening." The president then outlined the direction Villanova will take in the next five years and how the funds to do so are to be realized.

Driscoll explained how the University would need to grow to meet the expected demands. In the overall planning process, a "total needs assessment project" has been developed.

"Over the past three years this has consisted of a number of individual studies," said Driscoll. "It has taken quite some time for the assessments, and now we're ready to pull it together."

One example of the work cited by Driscoll was a comprehensive physical survey of Villanova — "needs for each building on campus to bring it up to ordinary maintenance par." Driscoll reported that the cost for this deferred maintenance will be about $31 million.

Another area Driscoll noted was that of academic planning. Two important programs, the Masters of Business Administration (M.B.A.) and the proposed computer science major, require the upgrading of present facilities to "meet the need of our clientele," according to Driscoll.

"They give every indication they will be academically sound, top-drawer and financially viable. The 'burgeoning' need in the area of computers will continue to grow." The estimated cost for the computer facilities is $1.9 million over the next five years.

Concerning the need for student housing, the president admitted that the general consensus is that there is a necessity for additional dormitories. "We need to relieve the pressure of overcrowded dormitories," explained Driscoll. "We need to provide additional beds in view of future enrollment. There are a certain amount of tentative plans.

"The big problem is where to find the space. The prime location would be on the South campus, filling out the original plan."

Development would be in two stages. The first would consist of a 350-bed dormitory that would not necessarily house new students, but relieve the overcrowding in other dorms. The second unit constructed would be another 350-bed dormitory, and in addition, dining facilities. The approximate total cost to fill out the original south campus plan is $13-14 million.

Calling Tolentine Hall an "energy guzzler," Driscoll next launched into the design for energy conservation. After salaries, the highest University expenditure is the cost of energy.

Villanova will invest a great deal of money into converting to energy conversion the next five years. $2.2 million, the maximum amount allowed, will be applied for by the University in the form

Cultural Film Series

MEDEA, written and directed by Pier Paolo Pasolini, is the next film in the Villanova Cultural Series. The movie will be shown in the Connelly Center Cinema located on the Villanova campus. MEDEA will be shown on Sunday, December 6 and Monday, December 7 at 7:30 p.m. Following Sunday evening's film Kostas Myrsiades will lead a discussion on "Myth in Film."

In Pasolini's rediscovered film conception of MEDEA, Maria Callas is a creature of a realistic background, the barbaric magical world of her native Colchis. When she is brought by Jason and the Argonauts to Corinth and the Court of Creon, she finds herself in a strange materialistic world. Her struggle is the struggle between myth and reason, nature and civilization — and this drives MEDEA to cause the death of Glauce (Creon's daughter) and to kill her own two sons by Jason.

MEDEA is "full of eccentric imagination and real passion." (N.Y. Times) It's an essential for anyone who is the least bit interested in mythology.

Kostas Myrsiades is a professor of Comparative Literature and Film at Westchester State College. Dr. Myrsiades, who has published several books on Greek Literature and has edited a journal on film and literature will discuss MEDEA in terms of Greek myth. His discussion will follow the film on Sunday, December 6.

S.N.A.P.

V.U. Runner Charged With Rape

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

Villanova freshman Adrian S. Ward, home for Thanksgiving, was arrested in Baltimore, Maryland, Friday, November 27 on charges that included rape, assault with intent to murder, robbery and burglary.

Prior to a Monday morning bail-review hearing, Ward was charged with a second rape and was denied bail. As of Tuesday, Ward remained in jail. Police are looking into several other incidents possibly involving Ward.

A former track star at Northwestern High School in Baltimore, Ward is attending Villanova on a full track scholarship.

Ward was connected to the first crime-rape that occurred in September 1980 by fingerprints, and also was identified by the 40-year-old victim, police said.

According to Lieutenant Koffenberger of the Baltimore Police Sex Offense Department, the first victim identified the accused by a photograph after a special-detail investigation linked together the incidents. The second rape occurred in August 1981. "We're looking into several more incidents," said Koffenberger. "We brought the first victim backphotos from past crimes and she picked him out."

Ward's high school coach was still in a state of shock when contacted by phone on Monday. Echoing what he told the wire services, Coach Jim Ward said that Adrian is a "good kid. He comes from a good family — a strong father and mother," said the coach. "All he wants to do is get an education and run."

When told of the second rape charge against Ward, Jenkins quickly pointed out that "all this happened before he came to Villanova."

According to the runner's former coach, Ward was happy with Villanova and its facilities, and called him once a week.

Villanova track coach Charlie Jenkins was also shocked by the arrest. His initial reaction to the first charges was one of disbelief.

"I'm shocked. There's not much more to say," said Jenkins. "I'm sorry it has happened. It is terribly unfortunate. I talked to his father over the weekend. Guilty or not, in essence, the best thing we can do is pray for Adrian."

When told of the second rape charge against Ward, Jenkins quickly pointed out that "all this happened before he came to Villanova."

Jenkins said he did not know that Ward previously had been convicted of burglary and was placed on probation two years ago. Ward was heavily recruited, and according to Jenkins, it took a last-minute visit by the Villanova coach to convince the runner to come to the school.

Villanova's Sports Information department is not issuing a statement because "the incident did not happen on campus."

Jenkins would not speculate on how the arrests and possible convictions might affect Ward's athletic standing and scholarship status.

Ward ran the fastest quarter-mile in the state of Maryland last year and won the Atlantic Classic quarter-mile, which features the country's top high school runners.

Sculpture Vandalized

By KIM RUSHTON

A recently-erected piece of sculpture outside the Connelly Center, "Homage to Victor Hugo" by Joe Mooney, was vandalized sometime last week. Profanities were painted on the sculpture.

Brother Richard Cannuli O.S.A., director of the Art Gallery of the Connelly Center, wrote a letter to the Villanovan expressing disappointment "That this kind of ignorant and juvenile behavior must ultimately reflect on all Villanova students."

Cannuli commented further that "like much of modern art the work is abstract and unconventional, not a recognizable image of anything and never intended to be."

The work is by Philadelphia artist and Villanova graduate Joe Mooney, and is here temporarily in advance of a show of Mr. Mooney's sculptures to be held in the Connelly Center Art Gallery in February.

When interviewed, Cannuli expressed distress over the fact that the sculpture was previously in the open at Temple University and no one had vandalized it. Cannuli remarked that it is ironic that in the high crime area surrounding Temple the sculpture was never vandalized, yet it was soon after its arrival at Villanova.

"Just because people do not see Victor Hugo in the sculpture does not mean they have to deface it." said Cannuli.

Cannuli said the artist had not been informed yet, as he has been unable to contact him. He hopes the sculpture can be cleaned as soon as the right solution is found.

Captain Joseph Cunnane of Security said the defacing was done before Thanksgiving vacation. Cunnane said such acts are almost always done very quickly and under the cover of darkness.

"They never do it when anyone could possibly see them." said Cunnane.

Cunnane compared the incident to the bridge on Ithan Avenue being painted, and stated as the possible cause psychological deficiencies that people have which cause them to destroy and mar public property.

Conservation Made Priority

By MELINDA MUSIAL

In an attempt to stabilize University operating costs, the University Senate recently listed energy conservation as one of its main priorities. According to Ed Meager, assistant director of maintenance, certain energy conservation projects will be nearing completion by September of 1982 as a result of funding from the federal government.

"A 50-50 matching grant for approximately $400,000 will be used for window replacements, heating controls, ventilation and air conditioning." The maintenance crew has been working at night for the last month on the completion of Vasey and Tolentine windows. "Once we tighten the building-envelope, we will put controls on the heating systems so that the buildings will not overheat."

Energy is so expensive today, and future costs are sure to escalate," Meager said. He suggests that students can help by "being more energy conscious and by understanding the magnitude of energy wastes by leaving lights on unnecessarily in classrooms and dorms."

In the meantime, Meager urges students to report any blatant waste of energy. "We are morethan willing to accept any suggestions that students wish to offer."

Political Debate Held

By BILL CLARK

The Villanova Political Union featured Congressman Robert Edgar as a guest speaker at its last debate, held on November 23 in the Connelly Center.

Edgar spoke against President Reagan's economic program. The Union approved a motion against Reagan's economic policy by a vote of 21-4-1.

Edgar, a Democratic congressman from Pennsylvania's seventh district, spoke against the present economic program. "The President believes that government should start getting off our backs," said Edgar, "and the media images say that the President has been successful in doing it. But no one has taken the time to read the fine print."

While pointing out that the President was successful in cutting social programs from the budget, Edgar said that the budget still faces huge deficits in the future.

Edgar pointed out that the Reagan tax cuts are a major cause of these future budget deficits. "People will be immobilized if defense keeps going up and taxes keep going down," said Edgar. "We will be borrowing ourselves into a situation which will be difficult to get out of."

Contrary to the President, Edgar claimed that this new tax cut is different than those of previous administrations. "People compare this tax cut to the Kennedy tax cut in 1963. People fail to realize that those tax cuts were paid for through government surpluses or reduced government spending. Neither is the case here," said Edgar.

"I want to suggest that supply-side economics is a disaster," said Edgar. "It will cause higher interest rates, more unemployment, and inflation will rise. And it will force small businesses to go belly-up."

In response to the country's current economic difficulties, Edgar feels that the United States has five basic choices. He claimed that the country can ignore the problem; decrease spending even further; roll back some already enacted tax decreases; cut defense items; or adopt new "revenue enhancement" measures.

stripes and a blue, pin-striped shirt with a white collar. The audience rose for a standing ovation, to which Hope replied, "That's worth coming to Philadelphia for."

"Father Driscoll came to the airport to greet us. We were still at 5,000 feet," Hope remarked. He spoke of the resources of a Catholic school, "First of all, nuns can make a novena." Then he related a tale about a priest who tried to get divine help for a field goal; however, the kicker still missed. Later, the team discovered that the water in the team bucket contained wine, Hope added.

Hope spoke of a recent performance that he made at the Valley Forge Music Fair. "Valley Forge brought back memories of one of the toughest Christmas shows I ever did," he said.

The comedian's topics ranged from his travels, to golf and politics. He claimed that when he performed a show at the White House, he slept in the Lincoln Room; the next morning he freed his writers, he said.

Hope also included some religious humor. "Of course priests take a nip now and then — comsider what they give up. Come to think of it, I drink more these days," he said. He noted that he was a Protestant and never converted, even though his wife is Catholic. "I figured that if they demoted St. Christopher, what hope do I have," he said. A "cheer to U.S.A., medley was the next feature of the show. Hope sang a series of tunes that were about states or cities; Chicago, Dixie and Oklahoma were a few examples. Hope received a standing ovation for the set.

of grants and applications.

Following Driscoll's appearance, the Senate conducted its meeting. The agenda included a review of the Senate Planning and Priorities' Committee's findings and the passing of the motion for the M.B.A. program.

Senator Alvin Clay, Dean of Commerce and Finance, revealed that the starting salary for qualified faculty appointments will be about $33,000. "We will still be operating in the black. The tuition for this will be substantially higher."

Senator Vic Falvo brought up the motion to increase access to support facilities, including Falvey Library. This was unanimously approved after "access" was thoroughly explained to the Senate.

Dr. James Clarke presented the findings of the Senate Planning and Priorities Committee, indicating that "everything is not a priority."

The evaluations struck out the need for improvement in the existing lighting system in the Field House as significant. The committee also denied that improvement in animal facilities was needed and that Villanova was in compliance with the state regulations.

Gallen pointed out that Villanova was indeed "not in compliance," as a previous evaluation pointed out. Approval of the report was passed 30-0, with one abstention.

Congressman Speaks to Political Union

Edgar stated that he preferred the option to cut defense items. "When Carter left office, he pledged a $1.3 trillion commitment to defense over the next five years. If we even followed that plan, it would save $300 billion over that time," said Edgar.

Edgar also took the opportunity to address some specific aspects of the Reagan budget. In particular, he claimed that the Northeast and Midwest sections of the country were facing an "inordinate amount of the reduction."

In addition, he claimed that, "Nothing he (Reagan) is doing takes into account the economic problems of the cities.

"Reagan's mandate has been misread," added Edgar. "It was to fire Carter, not to dismantle government. It was not to say that government no longer had a role to play in our lives, it was to manage government better."

Poland Situation Analyzed

By LISA M. FEDERICO

Three experts on Poland were present to speak at the political science department's lecture on Thursday, November 19. Professor Maurice Simon, associate professor at the University of North Carolina in Greensboro and the author of Background to Crisis, was invited by the department to speak on the current political and economic situation in Poland. Both Dr. Miron Wolnicki, professor at the University of Lodz, and Dr. Marcin Sar, professor from the University of Warsaw, were unexpected additions to the lecture.

The lecture commenced at 4:00 p.m. in the west lounge of Dougherty Hall with an introduction by Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, associate professor of political science. Hahn gave a few facts from Simon's personal background, then presented him as the first speaker.

Simon, who is fluent in Polish and has traveled to Poland several times in recent years, has done extensive research in Warsaw on the Polish political situation. It is Simon's opinion that, "all the political forces in Poland are currently changing," and basically coming to, "Communism versus solidarity."

Speaking about the Polish economic crisis, Simon commented that it is "the result of an overheated and controlled economy," and that there were now "glaring social inequalities in housing, education, and health care." Simon discussed the effect of the current Polish strikes, stating that "currently, the strikes are the least of Poland's problems; the main problem is the missing components needed for the production of goods, therefore resulting in malfunctions in food production and misdistribution of products."

Simon discussed the Polish Union Solidarity in detail. He covered various aspects including its formation, its purpose, and its popularity among the people. He commented that "solidarity is more than the workers discontent but rather a consolidated workers' movement for the revival of democratic rule."

He also remarked on the Polish United Workers Party, saying that "it was discredited in late 1970s by internal corruption and political opportunists."

In his closing comments, Simon mentioned the Catholic Church's role as a "key force in Poland in the 1970s and 1980s being a mediator in Polish conflicts.

At approximately 4:50 p.m. Wolnicki was introduced as the second speaker. During the 1982-83 fall and spring semesters Wolnicki will be teaching courses at Villanova in both economics and political science. In the course of his comments he discussed foreign intervention in Polish economic problems, stating that "without substantial foreign assistance, any economic recovery is impossible," and "in order for Poland to secure new credits, it must increase its present indebtedness."

Wolnicki voiced a comment as to why he feels "the West should help Poland," saying that money lent by the U.S. and western Europe "would not be charity but, rather, healthy business." Concluding he called for "better international relations between Poland and the U.S. and western Europe which would strengthen democratic possibilities in Poland."

Hahn introduced Sar as the third speaker. Sar decided his first comments at the popularity of Solidarity in Poland, saying that "Poland is currently witnessing clear-cut radical urbanization of its masses which will affect the solidarity movement. He commented too, on the Catholic Church's role, claiming that "Poland is coming into a recognition of the Catholic Church as a strong political power."

Computer Blamed for Mid-Term Foul-up

By DAVID POMA

Mid-term grades for Villanova students will not be sent home this semester because of a problem in the University's computer system.

Edward Murray, assistant to the president, said, "We are having trouble running the mid-term grade project through the computer." Murray explained that the new mid-term program was successfully run through the computer with only about 100 names but, "when the total file of 6,000 or 7,000 students was run through the program did not go through to completion."

Tom Scott, director of University computer activity, agreed and added, "It's just one of those things you have to keep analyzing. At this point we don't know if the cause was in the hardware of the computer or in the program itself."

The office of Academic Affairs informed the faculty that mid-term grades would not be sent, according to Murray. He added that students who wanted to find out their mid-term grades should get them directly from faculty members.

Murray said that the computer problem should not affect the processing of final exam grades. "We have a fall-back plan, but we believe that we'll have the system working in time. I'm 99 percent sure that the final grades won't be affected."

Other university computer activity also is being interrupted, according to Murray, but he added that the next semester's schedules would be sent out shortly.

Trustees Need Limitations

Bob Hope appeared in a benefit at the Academy of Music this past Tuesday at the behest of the Committee to Restore Football. His appearance netted approximately $30,000 for the committee, which will try to use the funds to pressure the University's administrators, in particular the Board of Trustees, into reviving the Villanova football program.

Over 2,300 alumni and friends of the school turned out for the event. It's nice to see that so many people care. It's nice to see so much time, energy, and money being donated for a worthwhile cause.

But a more important issue than the re-instatement of football is at hand: the power of a select few at this university to make unilateral decisions whose effects are felt by thousands.

Of course, this exclusive group is the Board of Trustees.

This insular body — 22 men and women — has the enormous power to direct the University in any manner it desires, without either having to consider the wishes of students, faculty, and alumni or justify its actions. The decision to drop football is a classic example; no prior notice was given that the issue was even being considered, and the Board has steadfastly refused countless requests to re-evaluate its judgment.

The important thing to remember is that the dropping of football should not be considered by the students and alumni to be the main problem; rather, it is a symptom of a greater malaise — the Trustees' unresponsiveness to and apparent lack of concern for any student and alumni opinions or desires.

Again, it's nice to see that so many care so much about an issue like football, and that so many can work together to attain a goal. But if this had been applied to the greater issue of limiting the power of the Board of Trustees, perhaps there would never have been a need for the Committee to Restore Football at all.

Senseless Actions Condemned

About two weeks ago, a modern sculpture by artist and alumnus Joe Mooney was placed outside the Connelly Center as a prelude to a larger exhibition of his work. Unfortunately, within days the iron-and-wood structure was marred by a stupid act of vandalism.

What is especially appalling is that this is not an isolated act at Villanova. Vandalism by students here occurs with amazing frequency.

And most disheartening of all is that the vandals do not seem to realize that every time something like this happens, they are the ones who are ultimately hurt by it, as well as every other person on campus. The vandals are the ones who must bear the costs, not only the monetary ones, as when a window is broken, but also the ones which come from destroying what could have added to their social and cultural enlightenment.

But will they ever understand this? Probably not — that is, not until they come to realize that they cannot and will not be allowed to continue their wanton and senseless destruction.

To make vandals understand this will take a concerted effort by every person who gives a damn. All acts of vandalism, and the vandals themselves, must be reported; the vandals must receive the stiffest possible punishment. Only then will this incredible idiocy that in one way or another affects us all be stopped.

Letters to the Editor

Professor Responds

To the Editor,

In a recent editorial (Nov. 20, 1981) the Villanovan took issue with an opinion I had expressed in an earlier issue of the student newspaper regarding what I thought ought not to be regarded as criteria by which to judge good teaching by asserting that that opinion should have no place in a University which claims to be dedicated to academic integrity and excellence. Among the examples of criteria that I had mentioned as not being relevant to the question of good teaching were "respect for students' opinions" and "the appearance of a genuine interest in and concern for each student personally" and it was at these examples that the Villanovan took umbrage. In its summary dismissal of my opinion (a sort of Parthian shot by the outgoing editors) the Villanovan has evidently agreed with the principle that not every opinion is demanding of respect (not even a Professor's). Indeed, mine was consigned to outer darkness without even the benefit of a trial by reason (as though what I had asserted was self-evidently false), a procedure that would seem to have no place in a University dedicated to academic integrity and excellence. Moreover, it seems strange, even paradoxical, to find a newspaper, particularly a student newspaper, outlawing an opinion.

However, perhaps it was not so much an opinion but an attitude of mind perceived to be inconsistent with the moral or professional responsibility of a teacher that the Villanovan was attacking. In that event, I would like to clarify my position since it may well have been misunderstood. In suggesting that "respect for students' opinions" should not be taken as a measure of good teaching, I was not implying that good teaching has nothing to do with respect for students or for their right to express an opinion or point of view in class. I mean to suggest something quite different, namely, that good teaching has absolutely nothing to do with cajoling students' opinions since what ought to be respected are not opinions but the truth. However, in this matter, as in others, style is perceived to be more important than substance and a teacher may easily, though unintentionally, offend a student if he is not particularly sensitive to the manner in which he disagrees with the student's opinion or shows it to be false or not well-founded rationally. Perhaps, then, a more relevant criterion here would be "sensitivity in the handling of students' opinions" rather than "respect for students' opinions." Regarding my example "the appearance of a genuine interest in and concern for each student personally," I thought the operative words here were "the appearance of." As we well know, things are not always what they seem. In my view, the teacher who effectively communicates valuable and genuine knowledge to his students has the true educational interests of his students at heart. Thus, it is perfectly conceivable (as in large lecture classes) that the teacher may not know each student personally, let alone show an outward display of genuine interest in and concern for each student personally, and nonetheless be an excellent teacher.

Grassroots Apathy

Dear Sir,

The Villanova community was reminded once again this week that the university lacks a football program. However, what it should be reminded of is that the student body and alumni lack iniative. This is what is most important. For until the prevailing attitudes change and until a powerful, actively involved, and united coalition is formed and developed, the trustees will continue to run Villanova University in their esoteric manner.

Because of the existing apathy and lack of organization amongst the students and alumni, the trustees were allowed to abort the football program. As might have been anticipated, the trustees were not confronted with any fierce opposition or resistance. They watched as a confused, disgusted, and uncaring community sat back and let the program die. The lack of concern and support proved to the trustees that the students and alumni can indeed be manipulated.

By placing full blame on the trustees one ignores and fails to reach the core of the problem. The bottom line is that a great majority of the Villanova community just does not give a damn! So, not only are the trustees responsible for the "football incident," but everyone else in the community is also equally responsible. The students and alumni succumbed to the system and failed to actualize and utilize their power.

The football program is gone and the chance to save it has long since passed. No fund raisers, money, or half-willed student activities can change that now. Not even Bob Hope can change that. The issue can now only serve as a valuable lesson. All must realize the urgent need for a re-establishment of the grassroots amongst Villanova University's students and alumni. Until that occurs, the university will continue to be run by a select few.

Alumnus Criticizes Driscoll, Trustees

Much has been said by both parties (those involved with the decision to drop football and those attempting to get this decision reversed), but the letter from Anastasius Efstratiades, BA '72, MA '74, JD '76, in the Villanovan issue dated November 13, 1981 has inspired me to write this response.

From Father Driscoll's standpoint, this must have been a very satisfying letter from a Villanovan who obviously is unaware of what is actually taking place. I would like to comment on various statements which address many of the reasons why I personally am most annoyed by the decision to drop football, and the subsequent treatment of the Villanova community by the decision-makers.

Initially, this gentleman asks the question of where the alumni, who were upset over dropping football, were when the really serious issues involving the academic development of the school arose? I believe that if he investigates the backgrounds and the history of the alumni who are most actively involved in attempting to have the Board of Trustees take a more objective look at this decision, he will find that they represent not football "jocks" or "beer drinking cronies", but a combination of social, business and community leaders who have supported all aspects of the Villanova community, including academics and athletics for as many as twenty five years. No sir, we did not just write to Father Driscoll with suggestions about how to improve life at Villanova — we were activley involved, both financially and personally, on campus to improve the quality of life at Villanova.

Secondly, he has stated that the Board of Trustees had no legal or moral obligation to give notice to the world prior to making any decision; the Board only has the responsibility to study a matter prior to making a decision. Obviously, he is unaware that only three years ago the Board delegated an ad hoc committee comprised of six extremely competent (at least I thought so) Board members to prepare a major report on a decision of whether or not to keep football. The result of the ad hoc committee study was a strong recommendation that Villanova maintain football on the level at which they were then playing. That ad hoc committee report was never even discussed prior to the April vote to drop football. Alternatives suggested by that committee were also ignored; alternatives such as changing levels of involvement or attempting to raise money to support the program in other ways.

Mr. Efstratiades is correct in saying that the Board did study this matter very seriously; unfortunately, they didn't even abide by their own study. Another fact which he and Father Driscoll fail to realize, or at least apparently fail to realize, is that Villanova is not a public corporation or a private corporation with a Board of Directors who make decisions which affect the company, and whereby all employees are required to abide by these decisions. Villanova is a community made up of four specific groups: faculty, staff, students and alumni(s). Each group is a significant part of this community and it is very difficult for me to understand how two groups (students and alumni) can be significantly affected, and yet neither the Board of Trustees nor senior administration seem to care. Father Driscoll has stated many times that the Committee to Restore Football and the alumni who are so supset represent active leaders of the Villanova alumni and community for the past so many years, but since the time of the initial decision and the three months that passed before the second Board meeting, did he or any members of his Board ever sit down with us as a group to even discuss the matter? No.

Mr. Efstratiades states that for the last five years he has kept away from university affairs; that is his decision, but for those alumni who have dedicated a tremendous amount of time and, in many cases, a tremendous amount of money over many years, they deserve more respect than that. The students are paying a significant tuition to attend our fine university, and the alumni who have already paid that tuition and have continued to support the university in many different ways, including sending their own children to Villanova, deserve more respect than has been shown them in the past ten years, but more significantly in the past six months. "You question us being upset?"

Finally, he refers to the Board of Trustees as "the few who know". I am amazed at his confidence in a group of people who attend quarterly meetings, are updated on facts and figures as presented by the operating members of the university, and expect that they know all things. I recognize that the Board is composed of successful businessmen and educators, but I question how much they know.

I question if they recognize the impact of no football on campus as it affects the social life at Villanova. When I say social, that does not simply mean drinking and partying as many people perceive social life at Villanova. I question whether or not these Board members recognize how quickly Villanova has become a "suitcase school" (Villanova has quickly become a lonely place on the weekend for the student who lives far away), which has always been one of the major differences between Villanova and St. Joe's, LaSalle and Temple. I question whether or not the Board recognizes the fact that many of the most loyal Villanova alumnus are now questioning their loyalty to a school that has shown so little respect to them.

Obviously, he must have been overwhelmed by the beautiful letter that Father Driscoll sent to the alumni, parents and friends only a few months ago. I was insulted by the timing of the first general mailing by the President of Villanova University to the alumni in twenty years (at least). Later I was astonished that I was promised a greater homecoming than ever before only to find that our President never attended the Alumni Medal Dinner the first night, let alone step foot on campus for the entire weekend. I was amazed that we were told a $2 million capital outlay would be made on football over a three year period, when even their own reports indicated a $600,000 loss that included scholarships which even their own ad hoc committee previously reported should not be considered as a capital cost to the football program. So to Anastasius Efstratiades, BA '72, MA '74, JD '76, I say we alumni who love Villanova University have a reason to be upset and maybe if you had not stayed away from the University for the last five years and had given your time and spent your hard earned money you would also be upset.

I do appreciate that the Villanovan has communicated the feelings of both sides even though the alumni paper — which seems to be much more controlled by administration — ignores the situation, and hope that you continue to express the opinions of everyone concerning this decision. You see football is an important issue, but it brushes upon other issues which at some point must also be addressed by the administration before we once again have a unified Villanova University community.

I would hope that everyone communicates his/her ideas to Father Driscoll and the Board, whether they be pro-football or anti-football. It is important that these decision-makers have a truly representative idea of how our community feels about this issue.

Reforms Needed, Not New Prisons

During the 18th and 19th centuries, the incarceration of offenders and the facilities used to incarcerate them — the jail, the prison, and the penitentiary — were the objects of controversy and the targets of advocates for reform. This has also continued throughout the 20th century. This controversy and reform advocacy became crystallized in the 1971 statement of the American Friends Service Committee which referred to imprisonment as a 200 year experiment that had failed and recommended the development of alternatives to imprisonment and imprisonment overcrowding.

The National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals' observation was that "there is no need to build additional major institutions for at least ten years." The Commission incorporated this view in its standard for the planning of new correctional institutions.

Further, support for a moratorium on new jail and prison construction in the United States during the 1970s and 1980s may be found in individual organizational writings and the recognition that such a moratorium had worldwide application may be found in a publication by the United Nations.

Opposing the advocacy of a moratorium on new prison construction during the past decade have been the advocacy of the dealings with the offenders: emphasis on retribution and deterrence, de-emphasis or elimination of rehabilitation, and construction of new jails and prisons as a means of dealing with the prisoner population explosion that is overcrowding the facilities.

Some factors cited as contributing to the overcrowding of jails and prisons have been the rising crime rates, the high proportion of the population that is in the prison high-risk ages of 19 to 30 years, the increase in police effectiveness, and the publics' demand for tougher attitudes and procedures in dealing with crime.

With exception to the national population's age structure, these factors that have allegedly contributed to the overcrowding can be successfully challenged. The rising crime rate may be challenged on the grounds that it is more of a reflection of the reporting and recording of crime than a real increase in crime. The alleged increase in police effectiveness may be challenged on the basis of the relatively stable rate of clearance by arrest over the past years that has been recorded in the Uniform Crime Report. The tougher public attitude may be challenged on the grounds that it is more of an orchestrated response than a grass-root demand. Several authors have interpreted the public's tough attitude on crime as the product of the public's exploitation by politicians and the communications media.

From 1969 to 1980 the prison population of the United States has increased 61 percent and the incarceration rate has increased from 98 per 100,000 to 140 per 100,000. These increases continued to maintain the U.S. as the nation with the highest incarceration rates and the longest prison sentences among the western nations. However, while the decline in the rate of prison population growth is projected for the 1980s, the problem of achieving decent prison conditions and maintaining proper standards will continue through the 1980s.

The advocation that new jail and prison construction will solve the present and future overcrowding of these facilities needs to be evaluated as to the social and economic costs involved and the effectiveness such construction will have in decreasing crime and increasing the protection of society.

An alternative solution to the problem of jail and prison overcrowding would be the implementation of comprehensive adjustment policy that reduces overcrowding by reducing the overcriminalization of overincarceration that exist in the United States. In dealing with overcriminalization, the adjustment policy would decriminalise victimless crimes, status offenses, and the criminality associated with alcoholism, drug addiction, mental illness, and other sociomedical problems. To reduce and prevent the overcrowding of jails due to the reliance upon overincarceration for detentioners, the adjustment policy would use detention as a last pre-trial resort while utilising to the fullest the following: diversion to community complaint centers, nominal bail, release on own recognizance, mediation, and others, including the maximum use of an improved computerized administrative criminal justice record system.

Reviewing the literature published in the last ten years shows that the reasoning in support of the moratorium is still valid and that the need is even greater.

Defacing "Juvenile"

Dear Editor,

Recently a piece of sculpture was erected outside of the Connelly Center. The work is by Philadelphia artist, Joe Mooney and is titled "Homage to Victor Hugo". It is here temporarily, in advance of a show of Mr. Mooney's sculptures to be held in Connelly Center Art Gallery in February. A graduate of Villanova, Mr. Mooney was invited to display his work at our school. This work was known at Beaver College, and other works by the artist were part of a large invitational sculpture show at Temple. All of the pieces came through unscathed. Last week some students felt that the only way to express their views on the sculpture was to deface it with profanity in paint. It is disappointing that this kind of ignorant and juvenile behavior must ultimately reflect on all Villanova students, since I know that there are many who would not condone it.

Like much of modern art, the work is abstract and unconventional, not a recognizable image of anything and never intended to be. The work is about space, form, and mass, concepts that require a little thought. We hope to continue bringing challenging art exhibits to the Art Gallery, making it a place for learning and new ideas. Watch for Joe Mooney's show in Feb. Maybe we'll get him to come out and give a talk, and then again, maybe he won't want to come.

Ad Methods Defended

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the article written about my methods of advertising for the Atlantic City casino tours appearing in the November 12 Villanovan. As was described in the article, the Office of Student Activities and I had a conflict of interest, and although the whole situation still remains somewhat unclear to me, it is in my eyes resolved.

I believe that the students at Villanova have a right to know about some of the different brands of interaction that often occur between the students and the Administration and I appreciate the Villanovan for facilitating that means of communication. However, in my opinion, the atricle in appearance and content seemed sensationalistic and was an exploitation of the actual situation. The article was biased towards the administrative view and tended to depict the occurrence as a major incident when in reality the situation was simply a misunderstanding.

In all due respects to the Villanova, your journalistic endeavors on the whole are generally accurate and informative, but in presenting the account of my conflict with the Office of Student Activities I feel you have somewhat failed.

Sincerely your,
Michael M. Granato

Prisoner Grateful

Dear Editor,

Toward the end of February, 1981, I sent a letter to your office and asked that it be published in your paper. It was, in essence, a cry for help, understanding, and compassion. As you might recall, I am an inmate at the Arizona State Prison and have been here for some time. I am a rather lonely person having no family or visitors, nor do I have any type of income to speak of, thereby leaving me in a rather precarious situation. Anyway, one of the first respondents to the article was a very beautiful girl, a student and an asset to your school. Her name is Susan Purpuri, from Beachwood, New Jersey. I know that my wording cannot even begin to describe what my heart and soul feels toward her.

From her first letter, she not only sent me stamps that were very badly needed, but she also sent money. She has shown me kindness that I have never known before, has shared her family with me, shown me new paths to God and His teachings. She has given me a new incentive on life that I never knew existed before.

To everyone: have a beautiful Christmas and a peaceful New Year. Thank you all for allowing me to be a human being again.

Thank you again, respectfully
James E. Worth

Best Wishes

Dear Editor,

I extend my best wishes to you and the new Editorial Board of the Villanovan.

With your talent and dedication, I am sure that Villanova can look forward to a fine year for the newspaper.

Sincerely yours,
Bill Clark

Student Pleads

Dear Editor,

With the influx of new administrators to Villanova University this past year, we of the University have observed a jumble of authority, the end of one power struggle and the beginning of another. I would just like to bring to light some of the various descrepancies and oddities to which we have been subjected, due to this deluge of well-intentioned but misguided leaders who are striving for a more organized administration.

Beginning with the top of the hierarchy is Rev. R.J. Martin, dean of students. Rev. Martin has decided to test his new authority by banning the annual and traditional Greek Chugging Contest. His main reasons, as reported in the Villanovan (Oct. 2nd, 1981), were "... illegal, immoral (to him) and personally repulsive." One should realize this university is not the property or ploy of one individual who chooses to foist his personal objections on the morality of the university at large.

As for the Vice President of Student Life, Dr. Richard Neville, who was quoted in the Villanovan (Oct. 16th, 1981), saying, "... students who drink should drink responsibly." I ask Dr. Neville if it is his responsibility in driving students off campus to drink due to the stringent and unreasonable rules imposed upon us. One such example is the new rule for fraternities and sororities which limits the number of people invited to a party to a 1:1 ratio with members of that particular organization. Coming from a very small fraternity, it is ridiculous for our fraternity to even think about a party for approximately 25 people. I would also like to point out in that very same article, a statement by Dr. Neville which quotes him as saying, "We want to avoid trouble with the LCB." It appears this attitude displays a total lack of regard for the safety of students who are forced to drink off campus, and more importance placed on Villanova's status with the LCB.

Next in line comes the new Director of Greek Affairs, Mr. Gary Bonas, who also holds the title Assistant to the Director of Student Activities. Mr. Bonas' primary goal as Director of Greek Affairs is organization of the Greek Society here at Villanova. I would like to know, if Mr. Bonas is here to aid and organize, why is he designing a self-styled witch-hunt for his office to carry out against any violators of IFC law. This is quite evident in the fact that Mr. Bonas attempted, in October, to increase the punishment on the LXA fraternity so he could make them an example for all other would-be offenders of the law. The severity of the offense was just a fraction of what was brought to light by Mr. Bonas. The mere fact is that the fraternity had violated another useless law by promoting, "cocktails and a cash bar" at a social off-campus which they were sponsoring. This could hardly have seemed to be such a flagrant crime as to provoke such retaliation from Mr. Bonas' office.

Now, we look to the Director of Housing, Mr. Christopher M. Janosik. I will not even mention the allegations over the room and hall damage charges which were disputed back in September and October. But I do question the time lapse which did occur while the university awaited his office's response. And when Mr. Janosik finally did respond in his OP-ED (Villanovan, Oct. 2nd, 1981) to the students, he was intent on referring to "... the best interest of both the student body and Villanova University." What Mr. Janosik and the rest of the novice administration fail to realize is that the student body is the university. Without the student body there would be no such institution called Villanova University. And to refer to the student body and the university as two separate entities shows a total lack of responsibility. For I contend that without the students, the administrators would not have jobs. We pay the bills, including their salaries, and we keep this place running.

Now it may seem that the situation has reached an all-time low, and as far as the university's morale is concerned, it has, but I'm sure that with the cooperation of the administration, things will resume to their normal standards. The university is just suffering from a wave of untried administrators who feel that in order to gain the respect of the student body, they must take an extremely strict stand on various issues. It is commendable to try new rules and regulations to aid in the reorganization of student life, but to do so without the consent or considerations of the students prior to the legislation displays a flagrant indifference to the democratic process.

And so along with my long list of complaints is a plea, a plea to the administration to stop destroying the feeling and sense of community which has been built up over these past 125 years here at Villanova. We don't expect perfection from our new administrators their very first year out, but we do expect them to rectify and use reason when they render decisions which affect more than 10,000 people each day.

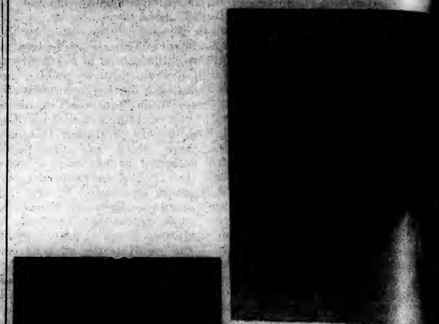
This week the Villanovan asked: How has the absence of football affected you?



It made a big difference in everybody's social life. Football was a big part of this school; it was here for 87 years. I'm sure they could get funds somewhere. People want to donate and the priests don't want to take it.

Lisa Ferraro, Junior
History/Political Science

It has had some affect on me, in the fact that there is a lack of unity. Saturday afternoon football was a unifying force. It brought everyone from school together for tailgates and the game.

Gregory Kelley, Senior Business Administration

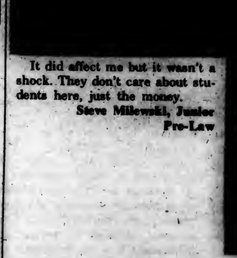
I think that there is no social life on weekends because of the loss. It doesn't seem like there is a lot of morale, spirit. It seems to be picking up now because of basketball.

John Mazza, Freshman
Marketing



It did affect me but it wasn't a shock. They don't care about students here, just the money.

Steve Milewski, Junior

To be perfectly honest, not at all. I am sorry for the people involved in it and who had it snatched out from under them. But, as for personal devastation: no.

Part III

Where Do Women Belong?

By KERRY LYNCH

The proposed Equal Rights Amendment (ERA), awaiting ratification by three more states, grants important legal protection and status to women, according to its proponents. Authored nearly fifty years ago, the time for its passage was extended by Congress, but now only seven months remain to get it ratified as the 27th amendment to the constitution. The National Organization of Women (NOW), one of the amendments' most ardent backers has proclaimed this week to be National ERA Awareness Week.

The amendment is a legal issue: it grants equality of rights under the law to all persons, regardless of sex. According to NOW, it is a follow-up measure to the Fourteenth Amendment and is designed to give women rights denied them by the ambigious wording of the Constitution. According to its supporters, it is necessary that this legislation be passed in light of previous Supreme Court decisions which have denied women rights solely on the basis of their gender.

The National Woman's Party, a long time supporter of the legislation, promotes ERA as a legal issue, while many of its detractors argue against it on social issue platforms, claiming that it will threaten the lifestyle now adopted by many Americans.

The United States Constitution is based on English common law, which considers married women the property of their husbands. They have few legal rights after marriage; even their property becomes their husbands'.

Many states now have their own Equal Rights Amendments, but this is not sufficient protection for women, claim the national amendment's various supporters. They say that, although women have the right to vote, they are not legally allowed or protected to take full and active places in society. The very laws which allow them to vote and pay taxes restrict them from taking equally responsible positions as U.S. citizens, for by virtue of their sex they have a legal status which results in their being treated as second class citizens. It is pointed out by many organizations that in some states, women still cannot sign legal documents, get a credit card or start their own business under their own name without their husbands' counter-signatures.

In the United States, ERA supporters claim that women earn sixty cents on the dollar as compared to men, and they are often paid less for the same jobs performed under different job titles and descriptions. Many also point out that there is no law which protects women from this corporate rip-off; the only recourse they have are expensive legal battles which often cost more than the economic value of the damages awarded.

Those who argue against ERA often do so in the context of social issues, which, according to ERA backers, are not directly related to it. Although the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment will have some impact on social issues that affect both men and women, it will not change any laws or precedents which have been decided on other constitutional grounds, according to those in favor of the legislation. For instance, the fear of co-ed bathrooms, women in combat, neglected children and the threat to men of losing the economic potential to support their families are not issues directly affected by the passage of the equal rights legislation, say its proponents.

Although passage of the Equal Rights Amendment will make it constitutionally necessary to draft women for the military, the Congress has always had this right and even considered using it toward the end of World War II. No person drafted however, will be assigned to a position he or she cannot fulfill, assert ERA supporters. It is also noted that most military positions are civilian in nature, and do not include threat of combat.

The bathroom controversy has already been solved by Senate Report 92-689 which supports separate but equal bathroom facilities under the right to privacy act as enunciated by the Supreme Court.

Support laws also will not change, except that men as well as women will be entitled to support on the basis of need.

Thus, all social issues discussed in context of the Equal Rights Amendment, claim its proponents, must be pared down to the legal issue at the core. No person's lifestyle will be threatened by legal protection gained by others through virtue of this amendment. All people will know greater freedom in doing as they please, they point out. All people will be legally free from restrictions assigned to them by the mere fact of their gender. The Equal Rights Amendment does not have to be part of the "Women's Lib Movement", claims the National Woman's Party — it is a legal measure of protection that has been due women since they were awarded the vote in 1919.

Students See Gov't Action

Cynthia Enger and Kathrine O'Neill, are political science majors at Villanova University who are gaining a close-up view of the federal government while interning with Congressman Bob Edgar (PA-D).

The studens learned about the opportunity at the Congressman's office through Villanova's internship program, sponsored by Dr. Albert Dorley, assistant history professor.

Katie believes that besides learning about the true workings of a Congressional office and background in special areas such as women's issues, Social Security, and problems in Ireland, her personal life has been impacted by the internship. "Having to sometimes deal with serious and emotional problems in a wide range of circumstances and personalities, I feel that I have become more compassionate and more confident in listening and giving sound advice. I have found patience to be one of my greatest tools," said Katie.

Cynthia Enger (left) and Katie O'Neill (right) pictured with Congressman Bob Edgar.

Being a native Washingtonian, and having a mother who was active in politics and government, granted Cindy a realistic view of the federal bureaucracies and Congress even before her internship. However, the business-emphasis, political science major has gained important values and even clearer perspective of the successes and handicaps of this system of government. "It is very easy for any of us to express our sympathies for those who are less fortunate than we are. What is difficult is being confronted by a hysterical mother, whose husband has left her and she has no means by which to support herself and her children, and she needs you to help her," explained Cindy.

Both Katie and Cindy have learned that while it is the duty of their office to accept all cases from constituents, sometimes, there is only so much you can do. Other times, it is the most rewarding experience to actually solve a problem or give the right advice and direction that an individual can take.

Love From Broad Street

By DEAN BALSAMINI

This past Sunday the Philadelphia Flyers were at the Spectrum. Uncharacteristically, there was only one fight. That was — the fight against leukemia. Entitled "The Flyers Fight For Lives," the Spectrum was turned into a carnival as thousands of people came to have a good time and contribute to a worthy cause. The carnival (which has now run for six years) is held to aid the Barry Ashbee Leukemia Research Laboratories at Hahnemann Hospital.

Barry Ashbee was a great Philadelphia Flyer defense man who was struck down by leukemia almost seven years ago. Since his death the Flyers' players, wives and even General Manager Keith Allen annually take time out to give of themselves at this carnival. Also, it is a chance for the Flyers and their fans to get to work with one another.

Sunday night was also a chance to see the "other side" of the "Broad Street Bullies." Bobby Clarke could be seen working behind one counter at a "wheel of chance." Paul Holmgren could be found working at another giving away stuffed animals to those who had won various games. If you wanted you could have had your picture taken with the Stanley Cup and your favorite Flyer. Coach Pat Quinn was posing for anyone and everyone. Even Don Saleski, who retired several years ago, decided to give up some of his time to work at the carnival.

The point is that, like everyone else, these people are human beings. Touched by the death of someone they loved, the Flyers annually have come together like a close-knit family. The carnival is not something which the Flyers' players have been forced into, they want to do it and enjoy doing it. This was obvious from the look of satisfaction on each player's face.

What was most refreshing though was the attitude of the Flyers towards their fans. In today's world of sports, many players are overpaid and quite selfish; this cannot be said of the Flyers. Each player extended himself towards the fans and the fans loved it. Players and fans were found chatting and getting to know one another. Autograph hounds were having a field-day. On the whole everyone had a thoroughly enjoyable time.

Over the first five years the carnival has raised over $625,000. Once again, thanks to the work of the Flyers' players and their wives, the carnival was a rousing success.

It is still uncertain whether leukemia soon can be stamped out. However, what is certain is that the Flyers are much more than just a hockey team.

You Bet Your Life

By CATHY ALZNAUER

With the holiday season quickly approaching, many people are getting into the spirit of parties. Alcohol will be served at the vast majority of these get-togethers. Drinking is common. Two-thirds of all adults in almost one-half of the American population make drinking a common practice. But what separates the social drinker from the problem drinker? The simplest definition of an alcoholic is one whose drinking is constantly out of control; he or she has lost the power to choose whether to stop drinking or not.

Alcohol is now the nation's No. 1 drug problem. Ethanol, the mood altering substance in all types of alcohol, takes effect almost immediately. It is absorbed from the stomach directly into the bloodstream where it is carried into the brain. Small amounts of alcohol act as a stimulant while larger amounts act as body depressants. Speech and co-ordination are impaired, reflexes are slowed, tastes and smells are dulled and pain sensitivity is diminished.

It takes the body about one hour to eliminate each half-ounce of alcohol. The amount of alcohol in two martinis takes the liver six hours to process. The effects of overconsumption of alcohol-a hangover — can only be cured by time. It is a popular myth that a cold shower, black coffee, fresh air or another drink will cure a hangover. These remedies only make the person more aware, not more sober. The effects of the alcohol are not relieved until the body rids itself of the alcohol; a process which cannot be quickened.

The best cure for a hangover is prevention. Pace drinks over the hours. Slow the rate of alcohol absorption. If there is food in th stomach, especially protein, the alcohol will take longer to reach the blood stream. The type of mixer used also effects alcohol absorption. Drinks mixed with water or juice are absorbed more slowly than most drinks mixed with carbonated beverages. Finally, drink sensibly. How can you enjoy a party if you are passed out in the corner?

Beware of Jack Frost

Last year the Legal Information Center dealt with an unusual number of serious problems in January which were caused by the severity of the winter. Students returned to their 'real' homes for a period of three weeks with little thought of any possible trouble. Finals and the anticipation of mass quantities of twice-cooked turkey can easily distract one from considerations of tenurial responsibilities.

A number of students returned from break to find their accommodations in poor condition due to a record- cold winter. Frozen pipes and major structural damage are no way to begin a semester. Learn from their mistakes and follow a simple checklist before you "abandon the premises" between semesters.

1. Make sure that your oil tank is full.
2. Turn the thermostat to 55 or 60 degrees.
3. Firmly close all storm windows and storm doors. An unsealed storm window is like no storm window at all.
4. If you have a garden hose spigot, turn it off from the inside of the house.
5. Take all of the usual precautions against burglary.
6. Tell the landlord that you will be gone for a period of time.

Congressman Speaks For "People"

By BILL CLARK

In 1980, the National Right to Life Committee targeted 12 members of Congress for defeat. Congressman Robert Edgar was only one of two Congressmen to survive.

Then again, Edgar's entire political career has been one of overcoming odds. In 1974, he became the first Democrat to be elected from Pennsylvania's 7th district in 116 years.

This fact is even more startling, considering that Republicans outnumber Democrats in the 7th district by a three-to-one ratio.

Edgar came into office in the first election after the Watergate scandal. "I was the right person, at the right time, with the right issues," explains Edgar. "I had enough newness not to anger people, but enough skills to do the job."

Before 1974, Edgar had absolutely no political experience. In fact, his only experience was in the church.

While a chaplain at Drexel University, he founded the People's Emergency Center, a refuge for women who had no place else to live. Even though he became interested in politics in the late 1960's, he was not involved in local politics at all.

"In 1973, I got angry at Nixon, especially for firing Archibald Cox as special prosecutor," said Edgar, in trying to explain how he entered the political scene. "Besides that, I couldn't believe that government didn't have a role to play in our lives. Looking at how the poor and elderly get consumed by the system, and how fragile the earth really is, I knew that they needed to be protected. I knew that much of that could only be accomplished by taking on the system," he added.

After deciding to become involved in politics, he explained that he literally looked up the Democratic Party in the phone book.

"Edgar had a very unusual career path," added Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairman of Villanova's political science department and a long-time supporter of Edgar. "He wasn't involved in party politics at all, and because no Democrat had held the seat in so long, it almost seemed worthless. But Watergate and a split in the Republican party turned a lot of long-time Republican voters off."

Edgar explains that his victory can be attributed to the campaign organization which he set up. "I was able to set up an organization centered around people," said Edgar. "Other Democrats previous to me had spent time focusing on the Democratic versus Republican choice. I spent time convincing people that they were voting for people, not parties."

Hopkirk added that Edgar's hard campaign style also contributed to his initial election. "He did a lot of hard work," she said. "This included door-to-door canvassing. He knocked on doors that no Democratic candidate had ever knocked on before."

Since 1974, Edgar had been re-elected three times. Even though he still maintains his active campaign style, he feels that his political record has maintained him in office. "I have built up a base of support which is neither Democratic or Republican. I am the exception in Delaware County. People will vote straight Republican, except they'll vote for Bob Edgar," he said.

One reason for this base of support is the services which he provides for his constituents. In addition to being a lawmaker, Edgar feels that a Congressman should also be a case-worker and project-person for his constituents.

To facilitate these responsibilities, Edgar has opened two offices in Delaware County. These offices only handle problems from people in his district.

"Even my opponents admit that my constituent work is the best in the areas," adds Edgar.

While in Washington, Edgar chairs the Northeastern-Midwestern Policy Group, a coalition of Congressmen and Senators from these areas of the country who feel they are being short-changed by government policies.

In addition to such issues as public transportation, urban policy, and Central America, Edgar pays particular attention to environmental and social issues.

"I think the most important issue right now is how we are consuming ourselves. By the year 2000, there will be 6.6 billion people. In 1900, there was only 1 billion. If these third and fourth world countries want proper energy resources and a quality of life, the pressure will be massive. This is something which we never talk about.

"People in government have two, four, and six year mentalities. They have no vision. How are we going to handle the loss of our land, air, water, and other natural resources?," asks Edgar. "When are we going to start taking energy conservation seriously?"

In order to change this attitude in Congress, Edgar proposes that Congressmen should only be permitted to serve for 12 years, and that there be public/private financing of Congressional campaigns.

"This way, Congressmen don't get political action money, and they can start representing people rather than special interest groups," explains Edgar. "Also, we can get a recycling on Congressmen. I have said that I will only stay in Congress for 12 years. After that, I'll do something else."

By IRENE SHALLOW

If you haven't thought much about Spring Break, or if you have and you haven't come up with anything worthwhile, the honors department is offering a course next semester that might shed some light on this otherwise dreary ordeal. The course, entitled "Irish Literary Heritage," Honors 5751, is being given by Dr. James Murphy, associate professor of English, the requirements include a trip to Ireland over Spring break.

This three-credit course is designed to enrich the students' understanding of the oral and written traditions of Ireland. The readings introduce the student to major themes and figures in Irish literature with special influence placed on the imagination. These literatures are intimately rooted in the soil, legends and mysteries associated with the countryside. Prior to the trip, the class will meet on Sunday evening for about two hours. At the conclusion of the term, a 10-15 page paper is due on any Irish-related subject.

Students will leave for Ireland on February 26 and return on March 7. The price of the trip is $699, which includes air fare, hotel accommodations, one meal per day and guided bus tours. The first five days of the trip will be spent in western Ireland; the heart of its tradition and folklore. Students will embark on an all-day tour of the Dingle Peninsula. They will make their way to Gaeleo and the cliffs of Moher. There will be an excursion to the Connemara, where Gaelic is still spoken and where the turf ferries beat the white-washed cottages on the stoney slopes. Students will then move on into Yeats' country. The remaining days will be spent in Dublin and will include a trip to the Martello Tower of Joycean Fame and an excursion to Glendalough, Anoca, Powers Court and other Dublin attractions. Murphy also promises that students will get free time to brouse, shop and explore personal interests.

Murphy stated, "We try to mix as much as we can to the literature and general culture of Ireland. But to go and mix with the people of the country is the only way one can really experience the flavor of the country. To sample the pub life is definitely on the agenda. It's a communal institution for all ages. It's a chance to meet, drink, and learn of the stories which are very much rooted in the land."

Enrollment in the course is limited. Anyone who is interested in the trip should contact Dr. Murphy before the semester break. A non-refundable deposit of $100 for the trip is due before Christmas vacation. The remainder is due at the start of the Spring Semester. It is important to note that any student who wishes may go on the trip without taking the course.

Murphy added, "This alternative is good for students. It's a different way to discover the flesh and blood behind the text book. It will be just as enjoyable as the Bahamas, if not more." Murphy can't promise a suntan but said, "you'll come back with an inner glow."

Genesis Replies With Grand Style

By SUE BREHM

It appears as if Genesis insists on beating the odds. Throughout the British rock group's history, which began in January 1967, the survival of Genesis has been threatened by key personnel changes. From the time the band started, there have been eight different versions of Genesis. Among the key people who have abandoned the band are Steve Hackett (guitarist) and Bill Bruford (drummer). But no departure was more crucial than Peter Gabriel's, a founding member and theatrically visual frontman who went his own way in early 1975 in search of solo fame. Phil Collins, who had been Genesis' drummer since 1970, became the lead singer and frontman. The resulting album, A Trick of the Tail, demonstrated the beginning of certain alterations in the band's approach. Among these was a de-emphasis of the long, classically-oriented pieces in favor of shorter, snappier songs. This album, along with the departure of Hackett, was followed by And Then There Were Three, a certified gold album that included the hit single Follow You, Follow Me. At this time, Genesis noted the importance of supporting a new album with a hot single release from that LP. They released Duke in 1980, which included the favorites Misunderstanding, Turn It On, and Between the Lines. It was a more direct, easily understood album that did away with the misconception that Genesis could produce only complicated obscure music. Misunderstanding was an airy ballad that was clearly constructed with commercial potential in mind. Genesis' 1981 LP, and thirteenth release, Abacab marks the debut of their first entirely self-produced album. The single No Reply At All reflects Genesis' new experimentation with funk rhythms and features the horn section from Earth, Wind and Fire.

The creative core of Genesis is now Michael Rutherford (guitars, bass and vocals), Tony Banks (keyboards and vocals) and Phil Collins (lead vocals and percussions). To enable Collins to sing on stage, the band added American jazz drummer Chester Thompson to the line-up in late 1976, after a temporary period using Bruford. At the same time, to augment the instrumentation on U.S. tours, the group added guitarist Daryl Stuermer.

Genesis performed at Philadelphia's Spectrum for three consecutive sold-out nights, beginning Wednesday, November 25. Their songlist included a wide variety of seventeen songs selected from their last eight LPs. They opened their two-and-a-half hour set with two songs from Duke — Between the Lines and Duchess, which hint of vintage Genesis with majestic synthesizer sweeps and melodically dynamic tunes combined with a more up-beat rhythm. Other selections included all-time favorites such as Firth of Fifth from the remarkably successful Selling England By the Pound album, which supplied the band's first British hit I Know What I Like, as well as their long-time encore number. Some of the other selections included the title song from the ambitious conceptual double-set Lamb Lies Down On Broadway, along with Carpet

Moodies Embark On Long Distance Voyage

By GREG MIZII

The Moody Blues, the classically-oriented band of rock and roll, returned to the Spectrum with their 1981 Long Distance Voyager Tour on Thursday, November 19 and Friday, November 20. These concerts were their first in Philadelphia since 1978, when the Moodies last invaded the Spectrum.

Their latest album, Long Distance Voyager (also their first number one album in eight years) celebrates the Moody Blues' return to the recording scene by forming a tribute to their ever formidable ability to break down rock's conventional barriers. They are a major creative force on the contemporary popular music scene.

The return of the Moody Blues, (Justin Hayward, Patrick Moraz, Graeme Edge, John Lodge and Ray Thomas) drew various age groups to their concerts. Middle-aged parents came with their children, and even a few grandparents could be found throughout the Spectrum. Also, there were those who seemed to belong to the drug-psychedelic era of the sixties.

The crowd contained many people dressed in 1960'ish garb symbolic of the Moodies heydey. But many young teenagers who are too young to remember the Moodies of that era, cheered throughout the performance.

The Moody Blues took their first step toward rock and roll superstardom as a blues band with the 1964 hit single entitled Go Now. The original band had lead singer/guitarist Denny Laine, who quit in 1966 and went on to form Wings with Paul McCartney in 1971. Following a personnel change, the Moodies released the album Days of Future Passed. This highly experimental album, recorded with a full orchestra and bits of spoken poetry breaking into the music, caused a sensation. Two songs from the album, Nights in White Satin and Tuesday Afternoon were the first in a succession of best-selling singles and albums.

Though the Moody Blues did not record a studio album as a group from 1973 to 1978, (the members pursued solo careers) they have sold over 35 million records. They have performed in nearly every major city in the world, and are internationally recognized as the pioneers of a new musical style (dubbed classical rock) that combines classical orchestration with rock instrumentation. The Moody Blues have never stopped innovating; painting aural landscapes of grandeur which foreshadowed the art-rock of groups such as Yes, King, Crimson, Genesis, and Emerson, Lake and Palmer.

Moody Blues Who says we look old?

Album Review:

Eikichi Yazawa Emerges

By PAUL H. BERN

Newcomers to the modern rock scene are Eikichi Yazawa and his first album, Yazawa. This record employs many musicians, which include, surprisingly, Paul Barrere, Ken Gradney, and Richard Hayward of Little Feat. Although this record is a new release, it does not do anything new; for the most part, it is good old rock and roll.

The lyrics on this album are almost monotonous, but the music makes amends so far as you are not looking for deep meaning, but just a good time. Eikichi Yazawa writes all of the music on the album except for Kokoro, the only instrumental. The album sounds somewhat like Little Feat, and keeps moving without a stop.

Dance the Night Away has a somewhat mysterious note to it, thanks to Eikichi's vocals. As noted before, the music is the best part of the record, and the guitar on this song is an example. A very fast and hard-hitting rift, unlike many other artists', is not overpowered by the cacophony of only three notes.

Pretty Woman is most likely the best song on the album. However, this may be a slightly subjective statement due to this reviewer's partiality toward saxophones. Even though the sax on this song is more background than anything else, it is still an essential part that makes the song what it is.

Kokoro ends the album on an upbeat, but still not overpowering note. Although it is only one minute long, it is a fine example of the album's musical prowess. Eikichi Yazawa has proven himself a serious competitor in today's rock scene, and certainly with the help of the boys from Little Feat, he is well on his way to leading the pack.

Genesis

Crawlers and In the Cage.

The band, which has developed continuously from the early days, is the British purveyor of sophisticated rock fairy tales. Part of the charm of Genesis is their visual sense of fantasy that goes with their music. The band played a little less slow stuff and used slightly more lights and lighting effects as a dynamic instrument than in previous years. As is usual for Genesis, a certain amount of small talk, story-telling and other visual effects are standard procedures during their performances. Collins possesses the unique ability of relating to the audience and encouraging participation. In addition, he maintains an element of humor in his story-telling (to introduce certain songs) and stage show (performs a "tambourine" dance), as well as in some of the lyrics.

Some of the newer material Genesis presented included the title cut and the following selections from Abacab — Me and Sara Jane, Like It Or Not, No Reply At All, Man on the Corner, DoDo and Who Dunnit? The last two songs reflect a new wave influence and make use of up-beat tempo rhythms. Genesis closed the set with an adventurous instrumental medley featuring parts of Wot Gorilla, Los Endos, Duke's End and The Ravine. The medley exhibited Genesis' distinctive style of unexpected rhythms and majestically melodic tunes. Also, it was enhanced with dynamically composed orchestrations and tightly knit musical complexities. Genesis continues to demonstrate the ability to give consistently professional performances year after year.

Neil Young Gets Back On Track

By GARY DYER

RE-AC-TOR, Neil Young's first album in 13 years, has been recorded with a tinny new wave sound by Young and co-producers David Briggs and Tim Mulligan. The "dirty" sound doesn't spoil anything, certainly not Young's whiny voice, which may be now in its best setting. They also use handclaps, which is not something expected from the man who wrote Harvest. But he sings, "You were born to rock" in this album, which falls the line of a convert, and most of the songs Young has written here are in the rock-and-roll tradition.

Opera Star, a medium-tempo number, features background vocals that sound like either a trio of convoluted coyotes or three backs of David Byrne of The Talking Heads. Suffer Joe and Get the Sleaze is similar — same tempo and an almost identical tune with more effective use of background harmonies, a good riff, and a woodblock and tambourine to cement the beat. The repetitious lyrics add to the song. T-Bone is a song about a restaurant with mashed potatoes but no steaks. Again the producers create a big beat sound, with a lot of drums and handclaps. Get Back on It is a blues number, brief and a throwaway, which most albums have.

Southern Pacific is about a train. Appropriately, it has an inverted, galloping, drums, bass-and-echo beat which sounds like a train. Motor City is a country-style tune, slide guitar and all. It is a light-obituary for the American car. With Rapid Transit Young goes back to rock. This driving song (in two senses) features a distorted pair of guitars and very tinny rhythm tracks, and all elements combine for a good rock song.

Shots is intended as a tour de force (eight-minute songs usually are). The galloping snare drum, the heavy-metal guitar, assorted feedback, machine-gun fire, and Young's lone voice make this tune appealing because of, not despite, the around-the-block delivery.

This album has little use of, sound-builders like organ, horns, and strings. Instead it relies on a big bass, percussion and distortion base to hold a song together. Young works well in this beat-obsessed vein, and Surfer Joe and Shots are very good recordings. His imagination in this style is not consistent, and some stumbling, testing songs (T-Bone in particular) have unfortunately been included. Taken as a whole, this is a good album, from a welcome contributor to the rock revival.

Devo Has Fun With Spuds

By PAUL DURAND

Devo is devolving. Many of their early fans liked them a lot because they were very different, unlike most any band to have previously appeared on the face of the planet earth. However, a lot of people disliked them because they were weird. And yet others considered them just a silly band. Those were the basic divisions that people who had heard early Devo fell into. However, before Whip It (from their third album, Freedom of Choice), they received very little commercial radio airplay, and not "everybody" had actually heard them. In the beginning, their shows were really wild; they were playing to exclusive audiences and they were demonstrating their de-evolution theory on stage. Their new material and their new style represent an attempt to reach a broader audience. Is commercialism a crime? Someone has to be a pop group! Yes, they have softened, "commercialized" their sound, but Devo has always been conscious of the "fun factor." For the early really dedicated Devotees the group may have "sold out," calming down their act, but it's just a matter of a lot more people having fun. Will the masses ever be exposed to a non-commercial, really "fun" act? Can a band be commercial without being "commercial"? (Excuse me — er, enough is not enough) . . . Anyway, so, Devo is now "commercial," so what? This reviewer always thought they were silly.

November 7, 1981 they brought their travelling musical to the Tower in Philadelphia. Devo's show isn't a raw, animalistic, rock 'n' roll concert; it's a choreographed play in the tradition of Beatlemania, actually more of a "play" then Beatlemania. The show began with several film clips of Devo's songs, including Satisfaction, and Beautiful World from their new album New Traditionalists. They went right to live music after the films, starting the set with Race of Doom, another new song. Devo appeared on treadmills, marching to the music (ready for war?) and in front of a colonial-style house with columns, as on the cover of their new album.

Most of the new material came early, Jerkin Back N Forth and Through Being Cool stood out. The lighting effects were neat. They took a break after just over a half-hour of music for a set change. The columns were removed and Devo returned with a visual performance of Jocko Home. They hung like monkeys from a metal frame and Mark went through the audience asking "Are we not men?" All right! Audience participation is always fun! Well it was a good show which everybody enjoyed.

Working In a Coal Mine, the encore song, was also acted out to a tape. And Boogie Boy appeared in Beautiful World, which also an encore and was good live. Unfortunately, they left out a lot, including Freedom of Choice, Satisfaction, Secret Agent Man and Be Stiff! And also unfortunately, Whip It was done as on the original album, not as on their live LP. The show was "a show," entertaining, but short of amazing.

Cats Cruise in Opener

Make Terriers Second Victim

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova Wildcats dis-ed of the Monmouth College wks, 96-48, last Sunday night at Field House to run the Nova on-opener-winning streak to impressive 18 games. The Cats not tasted defeat in their ial contest of any campaign e 1962 when Princeton versity dealt a 68-53 loss to nova.

lor Stewart Granger scored 18 nts in Villanova's 96-48 vic-y over Monmouth College.

Leading the way for the Cats re juniors Stewart Granger and n Pinone with 18 and 17 points pectively, while 13 of the 14 ldcat cagers scored in the team rt.

Monmouth College, a Division power with a record of 25-4 last year, was obviously outclassed by the Wildcats from the outset. Villanova was cruising to an early 15-8 lead when 6'-6" Dwayne McClain took a feed from guard Gary McLain and executed a reverse jam, which sent the Field House crowd of 3,000 into a state of euphoria. The Cats then ripped off a 33-17 scoring spree within the next 12 minutes before closing the half with a comfortable 50-25 bulge.

The second half continued much in the same pattern, with Monmouth's sporadic offense providing no match for the swarming Villanova defense, which stole the ball from the Hawks a total of 21 times. "We broke and defended really well," commented Coach Rollie Massimino. "For opening day it wasn't bad."

Indeed, it wasn't bad at all, especially for Villanova's three prized freshman recruits, Ed Pinckney, Gary McLain, and Dwayne McClain. The trio showed considerable court poise in their first contest of intercollegiate competition. "I thought that the freshmen played really well for young kids, much better than in the Cibona game," said Massimino.

With one victory under their belts, the Cats must now prepare to embark upon one of the toughest schedules in the nation, a task for which Massimino feels the team is prepared. "There's a lot of togetherness on this team. The camaraderie is great."

By BOB CONWAY

The Villanova Wildcats, as expected, cruised to an easy victory over St. Francis College of New York 93-63 Tuesday night. The impressive victory proved the Cats are capable of winning big on the road, just as they demonstrated they could do in the Field House in the season opener.

Freshman Ed Pickney scored 18 points and grabbed nine rebounds in Tuesday night's 93-63 victory over St. Francis College.

The first game played on a foreign court was a homecoming, of sorts, for Villanova's 6-9-1/2 Ed Pickney. Pickney, who came to Villanova from Adlai Stevenson High in the Bronx, did not let his substantial cheering section down. In 24 minutes of playing time, Pickney gathered in nine rebounds, shot 6 of 7 from the field, and was a perfect 6-for-6 from the charity stripe for a total of 18 points.

Coach Rollie Massimino said of Pickney, "He just played really, really well." Massimino added, "I'm not really surprised he's come along this fast. We always knew he was a talented young man."

Pickney, however, is not the only Wildcat who is talented and played well in Tuesday's contest. Another New Yorker, Stewart Granger, never allowed the Terriers of St. Francis to get into the flow of the game. Granger, as is almost always the case, set the tempo of the game. He scored 18 points and added seven assists, displaying, as he has throughout his Villanova career, that very few in the collegiate game can see the entire floor the way he does.

John Pinone, who was the game's leading scorer, logged the most minutes for a Villanova player, seeing 33 minutes of action. Pinone only missed one shot all night long. He shot 9-for-10 from the floor, and made all of his five free throws to net 23 points.

Pickney, Granger and Pinone were not the only players who shined in Tuesday's win. Starters Aaron Howard, Mike Mulquin and Frank Dobbs all played a good floor game. Freshman Dwayne McClain, who saw 25 minutes of action, scored 12 points. No other Wildcat got into double figures.

Harriers Finish in Top Twenty at Nationals

By RAY ENGLER

The Wildcats closed out their l cross-country season with NCAA Nationals meet, held in chita, Kansas, and hosted by chita State University. UTEP as-El Paso) won again, led by reshman from South Africa, thews Motshwarateu, who d the field over the 10,000 r course in 28 minutes 45:6 nds. The next two places were taken by members of the P squad. Mike Musyoki, an-r South African, and Gabriel au finished third and fourth, ectively, Musyoki in 28 utes 46.4 seconds, Kamau in minutes 19.3 seconds. Defend-champion Sulieman Nyambuyi slowed slightly due to injury, finished sixth. The Miners set w record by taking places 1-2-0 for a combined team score of Second in team scoring went to tern power Providence. The American to cross the finish was Alan Scharsu from Penn e, whose Nittany Lions ran relatively poorly. In fact, Villanova beat Penn State in team scoring for the first time in years.

The first Villanova runner to cross the finish line was senior Ross Donoghue, who, although seeming to have trouble in the early going, made it up to 31st place at the end. It is too bad he had early problems in the race, as he had beaten the fourth place finisher (Scharsu) earlier in the season. Donoghue's time was 30 minutes, 15 seconds. The second Wildcat finisher was senior John Hunter, with a time of 30 minutes, 32 seconds. When John realized that Ross was having trouble, he made a valiant effort to keep up towards the front of the pack. At the end, Hunter finished 45th overall. Villanova's third finisher was sophomore Marcus O'Sullivan, who finished in 96th position, in a time of 31:34.

The most surprising performance was turned in by junior Dermot Anderson, who finished 98th in 31 minutes 40 seconds. What makes this surprising is that Anderson is a walk-on (that is, he has no scholarship), yet he was Villanova's fourth finisher.

Senior Kevin Dillon rounded out the scoring for the Wildcat harriers, finishing 107th in 31 minutes, 52 seconds.

Villanova's team score was 31-45-96-98-107 for a total of 377, good enough for 13th place in the Nationals, and the second best placement for an Eastern school, behind second place team Providence. The two non-scoring Nova runners were sophomore Brian O'Keefe, who ran 32 minutes, 7 seconds, not up to his usual high standard, and sophomore Ken Lucks, who suffered a stress fracture while running in the race and will be out for about six weeks, ran the 10,000 meter course in 34 minutes, 2 seconds.

This was the concluding meet for the Wildcat harriers, who got off to a slow start this year, but put it all together in the Regional meet at Lehigh on Nov. 14, and kept it up through the National meet on Monday, Nov. 23.

Watercat Teams Victorious in Openers

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The Villanova women's swim opened its dual season Tues-night with a 78-45 victory over Mawr. The team has been ing extremely hard since the dle of September and have expectations planned for this on, according to coach Chris ee. Both the coaches and mers had been looking for-d to the Bryn Mawr meet to the ice. "It was their first to reap the rewards and show-off," said McKee.

The times were comparatively much better than those swum at this time last year. The freshmen made a good showing and, combined with the efforts of the veterans, were able to win all events but one. Double individual winners of the meet were: freshman Genny Mulderig, 200 I.M. and 200 Freestyle; sophomore Lisa McFadden, 500 Freestyle and 100 Fly; and junior Rita Edge, 50 Freestyle and 50 Fly.

By GARY DYER

On November 23, the Villanova men's swim team soundly defeated Monmouth College, 83-30, winning all events except the diving competitions and the 100-yard freestyle.

The relay team of Dan Ahern, Paul Staley, Bruce Baltera, and John Hallahan took first place in the 400-yard medley relay with a time of 3:42.30. Tri-captain Darrell Linder took the 1000-yard freestyle in 10:12.0. Freshman Dan Nies won the 200-yard freestyle in 1:47.8. Bruce Baltera won the 50-yard freestyle in 23.0.

The 200-yard individual medley was taken by freshman Jose Alvarez (2:03.3), and Nies won the 200-yard butterfly with a 1:58.5. Tri-captain Dan Ahern won the 200-yard backstroke in 2:04.2, and Darrell Linder won the 500-yard freestyle in 4:58.0.

Freshman Paul Staley took the 200-yard breaststroke with a 2:19.0. Hallahan, Mike Gallagher, Matt McKean, and Bob Ackerman won the 400-yard freestyle relay in 3:18.7.

The meet with Monmouth College was the first of 12 scheduled meets for the swim team this season. They next compete at Yale on December 2, and are visited by East Stroudsburg in the Field House at 2:00 p.m. on December 5. They meet Penn State at home at 4:00 p.m. on December 9.

The team is coached by Ed Geisz, with Tim Clark as diving coach.

Women Hoopsters Top West Chester

By MIKE HEALEY

The women's basketball team put on an offensive basketball clinic at the Field House last Tuesday night as they trounced the visiting Rams of West Chester State College, 105-72. Balance in scoring was the key statistic, proven by the fact that six players accounted for ten or more points for the Cats.

Head Coach Harry Perretta, in his fourth season as mentor of the club, was obviously pleased with one aspect of his team's performance. "We were really good on offense, as the score would indicate," says Perretta, "but not as good on defense. We need to work on that."

The Wildcats initiated the game with their usual, effective, pressing defense, but West Chester State was able to avert real damage. It appeared, as Perretta later stated, that Villanova "was just a step too slow."

The full court press eventually took its toll on the Rams though, as Villanova harassed them into committing a subsequent total of 25 turnovers. Many of these turnovers were converted into layups and short jumpers by the opportunistic Wildcats. At halftime, the scoreboard read: Villanova 50, West Chester State 32.

In the second half, the Cats started to flex their muscles, and began to run the Rams right out of the gym. Villanova's superior depth proved to be the determining factor, as all 13 players on the squad saw action and 12 of them scored. "The depth on the bench really helps us to press from start to end," said senior center Lisa Ortlip, who scored 16 points.

Stellar performances were delivered by Stephanie Vanderslice, with 12 points and seven rebounds, Kathy Beisel, with 16 points and six boards, Nancy Bernhardt, chipping in with 14, transfer Noreen Kothemer, netting ten, and finally, freshman Kathy Razler, scoring 14 points and snaring ten rebounds.

Additional high marks go to Mimi Coleman, who played a solid game off the bench as she totally controlled the tempo of the game and ripped down an additional eight rebounds. Also impressive was frosh Sandy Williams, Villanova's own version of the "Human Eraser." Sandy came off the bench and snuffed two of the opposition's shots.

CAT NOTES: Villanova plays East Carolina University on Saturday, which should be its first real test . . . The Pirates were rated as high as 17th in the nation last year, spurring Perretta to say, "We'll find out how good we are real quick" . . . The 105 points scored by the Cats represent the highest total in the Field House by a Perretta-coached team.

Spikers Eliminated in Regional Tournament

By MARIE WOZNIAK

It was a milestone year for the volleyball team, as they achieved some firsts in the history of the women's sport at Villanova while compiling a 25-8 record.

The Wildcats' final record was the best ever for a Villanova volleyball team. They were the first Wildcat team to be invited to the post-season regional tournament and also the first Philadelphia area team to qualify in Division IIA.

The spikers achieved their goal of qualifying for regionals, but once they reached the tournament at Towson Street, things didn't go as well as was hoped. The eight teams that qualified had to play three matches in order to be seeded. The Wildcats lost to Delaware, Courtland and Southern Connecticut, and thus were seeded eighth.

Because Villanova was seeded last, it had to play the number one team, Edinboro State, in the quarterfinals. Villanova lost 15-10, 16-14, and was eliminated. Edinboro eventually won regionals and qualified for nationals.

Commenting on the trip to regionals, Coach Bob Covell said, "It was a good learning experience. The team didn't play to its potential, but they played better against Edinboro. If we had played like that in the previous matches, we would have been seeded higher and wouldn't have had to play the top seed in the first round."

The disappointment of the regional tournament is lessened from the view of the season as a whole. As assistant coach Dennis McGinnis stated, "We did well. We're a young team and there's room for improvement." Covell added, "It was a hard season. We played well, so I'm not disappointed."

"The outlook for next year's team seems very promising. The Wildcats will lose seniors Sarah Holyoke and Lisa Ortlip, but w return nine of eleven players, cluding four of six starters. Co said, "Next year's goal will b qualify for nationals."

Women Run Tenth

The Villanova women's cross country team traveled to Pocatello, Idaho for the AIAW National Cross Country Championships with two things. They took with them a victory crown for the EAIAW Cross Country Championships when they surprised not a few teams with a sound victory. The second thing that went with them was the goal to finish among the top ten in the Division II Championships in the high altitudes of Idaho.

The runners wore the crown with pride and turned the goal into a reality by taking tenth place with 230 points. They were just nipped, however, by the Boston College Team who they had outrun earlier this season at the easterns. Boston finished ninth with 216 points.

First across the line for Villanova was senior Carol Gilsinger. Her time of 19:46 earned her 44th place in her third National Championship performance. Gilsinger was followed by sophomore Eva Marie Berardi who ran 19:52 f 52 place. Other scorers for th Cats were; Suzanne Shea, 57th; Mary Ellen McGowan, 67th; a Amelia Cain, 71st.

First year coach Bob Shou was happy about his first season cross country at Villanova, "I pleased, I feel we had a fi season. All the goals I had set f our squad were accomplished."

This 1961 squad bettered la year's 11th place performan with nearly the same team, e cepting the addition of freshm McGowan, who finished first f the team in the eastern meet.

Lifters Open Saturday

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova University powerlifting team will travel to New Jersey tomorrow to compete in the 1981 Glassboro Open Powerlifting Championships. Head Coach Joe Slabinski will be guiding one of the strongest Villanova squads in recent memory against a field of outstanding lifters, yet the Cats are expected to be in the thick of things.

In the 114 pound class, the Cats main contender will be John Padova, a freshman who is only 5 pounds shy of the national bench press record of 240 pounds. Moving up to 123, the Villanova squad will look towards Jim Venica, while Dan Capece will anchor the team's spot in the 132 pound class. Other Villanova first place hopefuls include Mike Rutowski at 148, Pete Anninos at 165, Vince Sferra, and ex-football player Tony Tracchio at 181, and senior co-Captain John Jefferson at 242 pounds.

Villanova will be represented in the women's division by sophomore Meg Folk in the 114 pound class. Last year Folk finished 3rd in the AAU National Championships.

The Cats placed fifth in the nation last year and hopefully they can improve upon that mark this season. "I think that this year will be one of the greatest ever for Villanova Powerlifting," predicted senior co-Captain Matt Durst. "We will try to use this Glassboro competition as a building block for the National Championship."

The 'Foot' Crushes Moon Unit

By MIKE HEALEY

After roughly two months of pulled muscles, broken bones, and assorted aches and pains, the 1961 intramural football league has drawn to a close. The victor in the championship match-up was powerhouse Athlete's Foot, who defeated Moon Unit by a score of 12-0.

In order to reach the final game, the Foot first had to sneak by the fraternity league champ DKE, 6-0, and Moon Unit, had to oust Wally's Gators 14-0.

The championship game wasn't played under exactly ideal conditions, but it was a dogfight the whole way. The field was slippery and the air misty and cold, but that did not deter the participants from playing a whale of a game.

Athlete's Foot, sponsored by the shoe company of the same title in Rosemont Village, scored on its very first possession of the game, following a poor Moon Unit punt. The Foot moved crisply down field, gaining 40 yards in six plays and capped the drive with a TD run.

From then on, it was merely a battle of the defenses, and neither defense chose to rest. Four times, Moon Unit had a "first and goal to go" situation at the Athlete's Foot goal line and four times they were turned back by a fired-up Foot defense. However, the defensive players of the Moon Unit weren't exactly slouches, as the many Athlete's Foot punts will attest.

Athlete's Foot struck again in the closing minutes of the contest on a broken play, 75-yard touchdown gallop. Foot finished their season at an awesome 10 wins and no losses, and Moon Unit ended up at 8 wins and 2 losses. Basically composed of sophomores, Moon Unit will, rest assured, be heard from in the future.

Chip Suski, a player on Moon Unit, believes that, "There was really no turning point in the contest. They scored first and we knew that we could come back, but it was our failure to execute on offense which prevented us from doing so."

So in the end of this strong defensive battle, it was Athlete's Foot's strong defense, experience, and ability to make the big play which enabled them to capture the coveted intramural championship.

Masters Program Approved

By KIM RUSHTON and MELINDA MUSIAL

Dr. Bernard J. Downey, dean of the Graduate School recently announced that the Board of Trustees has approved the establishment of a new interdisciplinary program leading to a master's degree in liberal studies.

The program is slated to begin the spring semester of 1962, and will take three to five years for a student to complete the program. Dr. John A. Doody, professor of philosophy and director of the honors program, will be the director of the new program. He stated that the program has been in the stage of planning for the past three years.

Also involved in the planning of the program were Dr. John D. Caputo, Dr. Charles I. Cherry, Dr. Bernard P. Prusak, Dr. Michael E. Burke, Dr. Stanley G. Hart, Mr. Edward F. Jaworowski, Dr. Peter H. Knapp, and Dr. Joan D. Lynch.

The program's distinctive feature, according to Doody, is its core course offerings, which are interdisciplinary in nature and team-taught. In submitting an application a student must have a bachelor's degree from an accredited institution with a minimum 3.0 grade point average. In addition, the applicant must also submit three letters of reference and two essays.

The minimum requirements are successful completion of 30 credits of graduate course work with a minimum 3.0 grade point average; nine credit hours in 3 required core courses; 18 credit hours to be taken from regular graduate departmental offerings in the liberal arts and social sciences; and a three-credit, directed reading seminar in which the student will be expected to write a culminating essay relating to his/her major field of interest.

"This is a very unique and innovative type of graduate program," said Doody.

Doody commented that this is a "very unique and innovative type of graduate program." He added, "Programs such as these have only sprung up in the last ten years."

Downey expressed enthusiasm for the program saying, "This is different from other master's programs geared for jobs such as the M.B.A. and Nursing, for this is education in itself — a broad, integrated program."

Commented Downey, "It is education in the finest sense . . . I think it's a great thing, 'pure' education . . . scholarly studies in the liberal tradition."

Commented Downey, "It is education in the finest sense . . . I think it's a great thing, 'pure' education . . . scholarly studies in the liberal tradition." He added that applications thus far have shown a "very broad range of applicants."

The program is expected to draw many older people already holding jobs, and many who are looking to explore the liberal arts for their own enlightment. To this effect Doody commented that it is a good experience directed at adult learners, and Downey commented that it could be a great enrichment for older business people.

Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice-president for academic affairs, said the program must prove itself to be "economically viable" while maintaining a high level of quality. The program's progress will be reviewed in three years. Doody feels the program will attain a high degree of success. He spoke of other major universities that have similar, successful programs, including Georgetown University and John Hopkins University.

V.U. Cited for Violations

By KATHY SCANLON and SHARON McGREEVY

Villanova University is failing to comply with some of the National Health Institute's (NIH) regulations regarding animals used for research purposes, and continued failure to comply could result in a loss of federal funds for both the psychology and biology departments, according to Vice-President of Academic Affairs Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A.

Disputing the University Senate's denial that Villanova is not violating NIH regulations, Gallen recently said, "Animal facilities (at Villanova) do not live up to NIH standards," and that "a shortage of space results in the cohabitation of infectious and non-infectious animals," posing a health hazard.

However, according to Dr. Ingeborg Ward of the psychology department, the department's laboratories are in compliance with the standards set by the NIH and grants are continuing to be received. The grants are used to pay her salary and for research equipment. Currently, Ward is conducting experiments involving the exposure of pregnant rats to hormones and the study of the effects on the offspring.

Dr. Daniel Ziegler, chairman of the department, supported Ward's claims, saying, "The psychology department is definitely in compliance. We have gone to considerable trouble, not to mention expense, to insure this. The problem mainly is not in our department, but elsewhere."

Another psychology professor, Dr. Byron Ward, commented, "The department has spent a great deal of money to bring the facilities into compliance," yet the situation is still "very complex."

According to Ward, some of the laboratory rats are presently "infested with mites," but that this will be solved by "the phasing-out of the animals." By the end of December, all of the rats are expected to be eliminated.

The biology department, however, is still not fully in compliance with NIH regulations and is therefore currently not receiving any money from this source.

"We are in compliance with the Department of Agriculture standards," said Dr. Wilbur Baker. "But the NIH standards are another matter." According to Baker, the past problems have been corrected by various measures such as the installation of new flooring, a cage washer, and a storage room.

Space is also a problem, according to Dr. Norman Dollahon, assistant professor of biology. "We are restricted on the number of kinds of organisms in our experiments, and thus our research is limited."

Also according to Dollahon, the biology department now has quality floors and caging, but still cannot meet the NIH standards because of such problems as air turnover, the non-segregation of mice and rats, and the disposal of dead experimental animals.

In the past, "The animals were simply disposed with other University trash. This is not in accordance with local health standards. Presently, the new method is freezing the animals, carrying them through the building, and transporting them by truck."

"In the future, I hope for a research-grade animals facility through the co-operation of those departments," he added.

Tunnel Improvements Set

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Plans to improve safety at the Villanova railroad station include the construction of an inlet to reduce flooding in the tunnel and the installation of a traffic light on Route 320.

The University plans to construct the inlet along the path leading from Mendel Hall to the station. According to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, there had been some controversy concerning whether Amtrak or the University owned the path, but a blueprint found in the maintenance department in October determined that the path belongs to Villanova.

"We met with Amtrak in early October and it was decided then that our engineers and theirs would get together and they would decide what to do. As an outgrowth we did find that the walkway is on our property," said Neville.

"It was decided that the University should construct the inlet. Amtrak has been doing other work, such as cleaning gutters and working on the parking lot," continued Neville.

"Fr. Rice tells me that our plans are to construct this inlet, and that we have on order a metal basin to run across the pathway, which will collect water and direct it behind the station," said Neville. "The second suggestion made by maintenance is raising the curbs around our parking lot.

Proposed Lecture Scrapped

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

A forum featuring a member of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (P.L.O.) and a former Israel government officer has been scrapped by the Student Activities office for fear Villanova would be subjected to picketing and striking spectators.

First suggested by Dr. Jeffrey Hahn of the political science department, a package lecture involving Sadem Husseini, P.L.O. information officer in the United States, and Menachem Begin's former press secretary would have appeared at Villanova early next year.

According to Andy Trione, lectures coordinator for the Villanova Union, the members of the Union's Executive Board were in favor of the proposed lecture.

"After talking to the American Program Bureau (it programs the lectures), I discussed the tenative lecture with the Union's Executive Board and they were overwhelmingly in favor of it," said Trione. "Because of the nature of the program, I took the idea and the Board's response to Kathy Kilroy, who later told me it was turned down."

Director of Student Activities Lucy Gorski said it was a joint decision involving herself, Program Director, Christine M. Muller and Kilroy, assistant program director.

"Trione presented the idea to Kathy Kilroy and it was discussed among the three of us," explained Gorski. "Because of the threat of possible endangerment and for financial reasons we deemed it best not to hold the lecture. We were worried not so much about the actual lecture inside but what might be happening outside.

"The way it was presented to us, there was the possibility of picketing by people outside the school and the chance of strikes. We were afraid of the danger presented to the people inside and to the place where it would be held. We explained this to Andy."

The format would have featured each speaker appearing on stage separately to present his address, with an intermission in-between the two lectures. None of those involved would reveal the cost of the proposed lecture.

One Executive Board member, who asked not to be identified, expressed frustration at the cancellation. "This lecture would have enlarged the cultural sphere at school. They said it might be 'potentially violent.' The important thing is the cultural interest in the subject."

"I'm disappointed," said Trione. "This lecture would have had a great deal of education value. The Union members are disappointed."

to prevent flooding, and so we are going to take some action on that as well. I hope that will be in the spring."

"My belief and hope is that a basin with a grate on top will substantially lessen the water that gets into the tunnel. Materials must be fabricated and that will take some time."

"The roadway is still a problem, but at least students will have an alternative," said Neville.

Neville also said that Radnor township plans to install a hand operated light between the law school and St. Mary's Hall on Route 320 in the Spring.

"Radnor does have approval to put a light in — the question is where. The University may have to adjust the opening in the fence by St. Mary's depending on where the light is installed," said Neville. "That should make an improvement in crossing the road."

Neville said that, ideally, he would like to see a sidewalk constructed along the Route 320 bridge; but since that is not in the foreseeable future, the construction of the inlet and installation of the light should improve students' safety.

Loan for Renovations Uncertain

By BOB HERMAN

Last year, Villanova University borrowed approximately $1.2 million to finance major improvements at the football stadium.

The improvements were recommended in October, 1979 by the Committee on Athletics. The Committee stated that Villanova needed to improve its sports facilities for club sports, intramural purposes and also general "free play." They felt there were not enough fields during the daylight hours.

The renovations included a new surface for the football field, a new track surface, lighting and a new drainage system.

After initial work started, it was pointed out to Father President Driscoll that the renovations in the stadium might qualify under the Delaware County Industrial Development Authority's (DCIDA) low financing. This was how the steam plant was renovated at the University a few years ago.

The DCIDA provides low financing for companies and institutions that take steps to save energy or provide new jobs. The major intent for the DCIDA is to provide low financing to try to stimulate the economy.

The University submitted an application for the lower financing and received a letter of commitment from Continental Bank which said that if the DCIDA approved the loan, that they would provide it.

Villanova received a preliminary approval from the DCIDA. The authority of the DCIDA then had to go to the state of Pennsylvania.

In August, the University received a letter of approval from the state. By this time all of the work was nearing completion.

Assistant to the President at Villanova, Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A. said, "The Committee also wanted a track facility so that the University could host meets and have adequate practice facilities."

Commenting why a new surface on the football field was needed, Burnell said, "There was no intention then of night football. It wasn't really intended for varsity football."

Describing the financing policy, Burnell said, "Our attorneys noticed that approval had to have taken place before the work started; it was then referred to the State Attorney General's office in Pennsylvania. The request has sat up there for a year now."

Burnell explained that right now the improvements are being financed (as originally planned) through another bank on the University's line of credit.

Estimating how much Villanova would save if it received the loan from the DCIDA, Burnell said that it would be approximately $100,000 to $200,000.

Burnell felt that there was no problem with the financing saying, "Our intent in the beginning was to do it just as we are doing it now."

Tree Lit on Kennedy Mall

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Sixth Annual Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony took place in Kennedy Plaza on Monday. Father President John Driscoll, welcomed the entire Villanova community to the tree lighting ceremony to share "the Advent season, which is a time of the invasion of the Light of God into the world and our lives." The ceremony began with Christmas carols, played by the Villanova Band.

Representatives of the staff, faculty and students greeted the crowd. The Christmas season is a time to reflect upon "Peace on Earth to men of Goodwill," said Personnel Director, Mr. Paul Walker. Walker emphasized the need "to enable peace and cooperation in the community," adding that this is "a time to remember to be kind to one another and work in peace and harmony."

"Greetings to all for the merriest Christmas and the best new year," came from Dr. Justin Green, chairman of faculty assembly. As a representative of the faculty, Green reminded the community that "all people are united and common in their search for world peace and the unity can only be enhanced by our differences."

The Student Government, represented by Bill Monaco, wished to everyone a "cheerful" season and asked all to give "thanks to all we have." These greetings were proceeded by Christmas carols sung by the Villanova Singers.

A scripture reading was read by Rev. Shawn Tracey, O.S.A., from Campus Ministry, based on Christ as the true Light coming into the world to shine upon everyone. Driscoll also spoke of the scriptures, "The scripture spoke of the darkness and light and as human beings we must be reminded of the things most important to us. We look around for all kinds of symbols so we don't miss what we need to remember," said Driscoll.

The symbolism of the lighting, Driscoll explained, is that "deep down we have a pool of darkness, of doubt and uncertainty, a fear of the future and what life means. Christ is the light of the world and so the symbol 'light' shows a burst, like the dawn, of reassurance, joy, and peace." With those words, Driscoll lit the trees in Kennedy Plaza.

The Villanova Band, Villanova Singers, and Glee Club led the crowd in some Christmas songs to close the ceremony. A reception in the Connelly Center was held afterward.

Debate Team Discusses Union Terrorism

The Villanova debate society recently competed in two intercollegiate debate competitions, with one of its members finishing among the top ten speakers in both tournaments.

The first competition, held at James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Virginia, saw members Diann Gallagher and Vincent Pescatore finish 7-1 in the preliminary round, defeating pairs from George Washington University, the University of North Carolina, and George Mason University. They were later ranked second in a field of 25 teams for the elimination rounds, but lost in the semi-finals. Pescatore went on to be named second place speaker out of more than 50 other competitors.

Tom Janisch and Joe Francione finished 5-3 in the preliminary rounds for the Villanova team.

In the second tournament, this time at Towson State University in Maryland, the team of Janisch and Francione finished 4-2 in the competition, while Pescatore placed fifth out of 60 in individual debate.

The debate team's argument for the competitions concerned the need for legislation to curtail labor union violence against employers.

The debate society is coached by Dr. Russell Church of the communications department and Larry Maggitti, a Villanova law student.

Next semester, the team is planning on competing in tournaments at the College of William and Mary and the U.S. Naval Academy, and possibly in the national championships at Florida State University.

Dropping Lecture Deprives Campus

The Lectures Committee of the Villanova Union recently came up with a fairly good idea: it planned to sponsor a joint lecture by a representative of the Palestinian Liberation Organization and the former press secretary to Israel's Prime Minister Menachem Begin. This could have been a quite informative and educational experience, one which could have provided vital understanding of the volatile Middle East situation. It would have been quite a change from the fluff which is usually presented by college lecture committees. Could have been, had not the plan been vetoed by the Student Activities' office.

According to Lucy Gorski, director of student activities, the proposed appearances were scrapped because of "the possibility of picketing by people outside the school and the chance of strikes. We were afraid of the danger presented to the people inside and to the place where it would be held."

This is a rather absurd response, one that is not justified by fact.

Granted, the issues which would have been discussed are quite emotional ones. Many people strongly support one side or the other. However, this is no reason to believe that, had the speakers been presented, violence would have resulted.

Also, Gorski raised the question of picketing and protestors. A point to remember, though, is that when G. Gordon Liddy spoke on campus last year, there were picketers and protestors outside the Field House, and there was neither harm done to the building nor to the people inside.

The purpose of any university is to provide intellectual challenge and stimulation to its students, not only in the classroom, but in all other aspects of campus life as well. Refusing to present a topic because it is controversial is not protecting the school, but depriving it of the vital and necessary free exchange of ideas. The world is not always as idyllic as a Main Line campus; it is foolish on the part of administrators to try to shelter students from this fact.

We urge the office of Student Activities to re-evaluate its decision, and allow the lecture to be presented.

Pre-Registration: Villanova's Edsel

Approximately midway through each semester, Villanova students receive notice of pre-registration for the next semester. This bi-annual process involves trips to one's advisor, consultations with fellow students over choice of professors and classes, and laborious hours spent flipping through the numerous pages of fine print which make up the Master Schedule.

One then forgets about it. Until the week before finals, that is.

Then, the real fun starts.

One finds that the University has instituted a "new, improved" computer system, designed to speed the registration process and make life a little easier for everyone.

This is in theory, of course.

In practice, the new system seems to be worse than it was in previous semesters. What was designed to facilitate turns out only to complicate matters further. One is "dropped" from courses which are absolutely vital to fulfill various and sundry requirements. Professors can no longer allow students to enter closed courses until Drop and Add . . . next semester. Nerves frazzled by imminent finals are frayed even more.

The University should break with bureaucratic tradition and really make the system easier and more efficient, rather than continue to make things more difficult. Of course, we realize how hard it is to admit that something doesn't work, to admit that all the time and money spent on design and implementation produced a true lemon. But it shouldn't be viewed as an impossible task; after all, didn't Ford learn from the Edsel?

Letters to the Editor

Coverage Biased

Dear Editor:

Being a young, black Villanova student I am writing in regard to the article printed in the December 4 Villanovan concerning freshman Adrian S. Ward. I would like to know, why is it that among the many students attending Villanova, the Villanovan always manages to shed light on all incidents that are negative towards its two percent black population, when I know for a fact that the black community isn't the only race that commits crime? Why not print some of the more positive actions of Villanova's black students.

Also, why is it that everyone loves the athlete who is a winner and who helps bring the University titles, but when that athlete gets into trouble no one is around to help and support him?

At this time in Adrian Ward's life he needs more support than ever, instead of incriminating articles printed by your newspaper. Whatever happened to the adage, a person is innocent until proven guilty?

Your version of the incident received more coverage then it did in the Philadelphia newspapers whose articles were printed when the arrest first took place.

Articles such as the one printed about Adrian Ward only help to permeate an air of racial disharmony. In the future, in a show of class your paper should stop insinuating broad based accusations which cannot be substantiated without due justification.

Name Withheld Upon Request

Editor's note:

Many points in the writer's letter merit response. First, the Villanovan is neither racially biased nor out to create "racial disharmony." The story in question was strictly hard news, and there was no mention of the subject's race. Second, the Villanovan did not make "unsubstantiated" allegations against Adrian Ward; he was formally arrested and charged by the Baltimore police. Third, if the writer would take the time to check, she would see that the Philadelphia newspapers, as well as many other media, gave the story much more coverage than we did. And fourth, the Villanovan prints "positive" as well as "negative" stories. However, we are not a public relations organ for the University; for that, the writer will have to look to The Spires.

Vandals Praised

Dear Editor:

I would like to say that I admire those people who vandalized the Mooney statue for showing good artistic taste, though their method of expression was objectionable. To call a sculpture that looks like the work of a demented welder having a nightmare anything but junk is an insult to all true artists in my opinion. I do not believe that this sculpture has any redeeming value artistically except to symbolize the foolishness of many "progressive" individuals who desire to turn every coat rack and clothespin into an "artistic" achievement. The best way to prevent vandalism of this nature is to never desecrate the land in the first place by erecting such tinker-toy dementia.

Correction

Dear Editor,

In the Dec. 4, 1981 issue of the Villanovan, it was stated that the Villanova University Band performed at the Committee to Restore Villanova Football's fund-raising event featuring Bob Hope on Dec. 1, 1981. The Villanova University Band was not there. There were students with musical instruments at the event but the University Band was not present.

Procedure Critized

To the Editor,

In response to the article in last week's Villanovan, "Sculpture Vandalised", let me first say that I do not condone what was done. To me, art is a matter of taste and preference; one person's wasteland may be another person's Utopia. Simply because one does not appreciate that which another does, does not give a person the right to destructive criticism.

I do not, however, agree with Brother Richard Cannuli's statement that this behavior "must ultimately reflect on all Villanova students". He then goes on to say in his letter to the Editor "Defacing Juvenile", he agrees that many students would (did) not condone the act. I sense a contradiction here. It is obvious that most students did not support the act. Why then must it reflect the Villanova community as a whole? To draw an analogy: because one Villanova student is arrested and charged with rape does this implicate all Villanova students are reflective of this one individual? Certainly not. The personalities and attitudes of over 5000 undergraduate students can not be assumed on the immature actions of one or several of those students. Such a generalization is absurd.

Generalizations of this sort are often made hastily and without giving proper thought to the situation. Consequently, many people may end up being offended and/or unjustly condemned. Finally, I feel sorry for Joe Mooney, creator of the vandalized sculpture, who must feel somewhat insulted by his alma mater, but again I must say that this action is in no way indicative of Villanova's community as a whole, only that of a few sick individuals.

A Guide to Survival at Villanova

When you don't play the game, you don't have to follow the rules. But then again, who isn't playing the game these days?

In the game of survival, assets such as intelligence, motivation, and ingenuity are no longer necessary. They have been replaced by such qualities as cleverness and deception.

Even in the academic world of Villanova, where merit was once the sole measure, sheer guile now is the only guarantee of success.

This applies not only to students (who were once assumed to be the only ones low enough to use such tactics), but also to administrators and faculty.

In the interest of fairness, it is time to open the hidden nirvana, and spew forth some of its most treasured secrets. This, my friends, is a guide for survival at Villanova. You will not find it published in the Blue Book, that's for sure.

This guide can best be expressed in a series of rules and axioms. Feel free to catalog them however you wish.

Rule No. 1 — "The Law of Increased Complexity."

Simply put, whenever it is possible to make something more difficult, do it. As someone's work or communication becomes more complex, fewer people will challenge it.

This rule applies across the board of Villanova. For students, make any written reports more voluminous and technical. Because laziness is the mother of invention, few faculty members will take the time to read the entire work, and the technical language will make them think you actually have some knowledge on the subject.

For faculty and administrators, this rule has been tried and proven true. Whenever possible, attach appendices to your reports, preferrably with numbers. For some reason, people are hesitant to disagree with statistics, because they are afraid to admit that they simply don't understand them.

In addition, the required vocabulary for success is slightly different than what is the norm. Instead of solving a problem, you optimize it. Trial and error suddenly becomes the Hueristic process. And, instead of talking about a specific group of people at Villanova, have your problem or idea pertain to the "Villanova community." (That one should bring tears to any God-fearing Augustinian or Blue Key member.)

Rule No. 2 — "The Law of Committees."

Whenever possible, form a committee. When you work in a group, no individual can be blamed for failure.

For students, always request group projects rather than detailed individual work. A faculty member will be more reluctant to give three or four people a bad grade, especially if one of his or her pets is in the group.

Analyzing the political hierarchy at Villanova, it seems that the faculty and administrators have already discovered the "Law of Committee."

Looking at the University Senate and the Board of Trustees, one can see a myriad of committees. Why do you think this is so? These people simply don't want to be called into Father President Driscoll's office and blamed for anything. "It was the committee that did it Father, don't blame me!"

Rule No. 3 — "The Law of Impressiveness

It has been argued that one's impression of power can go a long way. This is certainly true at Villanova.

The area in your office, or around your desk, should be scattered with impressive books about the subject at hand. They should all be opened to strategic pages, and such comments as, "Right on!." "Absolutely." and "Why?" should be significantly displayed in the margins.

Rule No. 4 — "The Law of Randomness"

Nothing is more impressive than sheer inconsistency. You must decide what people expect from you, and do the opposite.

For instance, wear glasses one day, but not the next. Wear a conservative shirt with a polkadot tie. Or wear a three-piece suit and not shave or shower that day.

Try to notice the suspicious look you will receive from your colleagues.

Rule No. 5 — "The Law of Instant Answer"

Nothing is more embarassing that not having a quick response to someone's question. The truly successful person at Villanova is never at a loss for words.

Here are some phrases to try if you are ever stuck: a) "If you are trying to eat an elephant, you've got to take one bite at a time." This statement is appropriate whenever someone is questioning slowness or inaction.

b) "You don't stop to stomp the ants when the elephants are coming." This is useful whenever you are being criticized for proceeding too rapidly or for omitting some analysis from your paper.

c) "This is consistent with Villanova's mission." I am quite partial to this one, myself. Does anyone know what Villanova's mission is? No? So therefore, no one can question an answer like this.

d) "Trust me!" This one can get you out of any jam. The only response to such a bold statement is that the other person indeed doesn't trust you. Few people are willing to go out on such a limb.

As you may have seen, many of these rules are practiced every day at Villanova. And, if you look at the people who are practicing them, they are probably in positions of authority or on their way up the Villanova ladder of success. Remember, you can join them too. And it doesn't require anything more than a few simple rules and axioms. Good luck!

Those Registration Blues

The end of classes at Villanova inevitably brings with it the tedious task of completing registration. Pre-registration was painful enough, but registration means dealing with the problems caused by a computer that dropped you from every course you agonized over choosing in the first place. The system's not much fun, is it?

If you are a freshman, well, that's too bad. You were probably closed out of half your classes, if not all of them. And being a lowly freshman, you had to register on the last day of registration, right? Not many courses left to choose from, were there? Forget about getting any of the instructors you wanted. Everyone else wanted them too, and they got there first. The joke's on you. Anyway, somebody has to get stuck with the unpopular, unchosen teachers around here. And there are reasons why they're unpopular . . . So take heart, you'll have an easier time next year. Next year you'll be a sophomore.

Sophomores do not escape the registration system here unscathed, but chances are good that they were only dropped from one or two courses. Naturally, they included the courses you wanted to take at 11:30. That course had to be replaced by one at 8:30, but hey, you're used to early classes. Remember last year when you were a freshman and got stuck with classes at 8:30 every day all year? And you thought they were a thing of the past for you. Oh well, maybe next year when you're a junior . . .

Juniors at Villanova also encounter difficulties during registration time. Especially if you changed majors at the last possible minute, a task presenting so many problems as to make you fail your finals. But failure is probably why you are changing your major anyway. Otherwise, your worst problem was losing out on your religious studies selection. Yes, it seemed everyone wanted that easy Christian Marriage course, didn't it? Worry not, you won't even need religion when you're a senior!

Seniors should, ideally, have no problems with registration. You've earned the right to get into any course you want, right? You've been to drop and add seven times in the seven semesters. You've been here before, right? You deserve a break, right? Maybe. Until, that is, the computer or the programmer or whatever fool it was dropped you from the required course you need in order to graduate. Your department chairman couldn't understand why only seven people registered for the other section of the course, taught by the other professor. Ha. You could have told him. You did not, however. Instead, you grovelled. You got into the closed section. You will have a happy semester after all. It's great to be a senior.

If you are under the illusion that it really doesn't matter what professor or course you ended up with on your final schedule, well, wrong again. The wrong selection can ruin your grade point average, and your semester. You may have ever-lasting regrets about your final choice, whether it was really your choice or was just forced upon you. No, the registration system is just not fair, but, neither is life, it is said, and at least you'll have something to talk about at lunch. These are such happy college days. See you in drop and add.

On Campus

By ELISE VALADE and PETE WILSON

Since registration activities are taking place this week, the Villanovan decided to ask: "What do you think of the new registration system?"

"It is pretty much the same. There is a new student record system and pre-registration is only one function of this system. The only new variation is the use of the SS number and the numeric of the course number. The pre-registration system and the end result, the scheduling, is following the same format. There are some new forms, but the approach and the advising has stayed pretty much the same. The problems are occurring in the software system, rather than the registration system."

David J. Smith
Registrar,
Villanova University

"I think it is incompetent. They sent me from Tolentine to Bartley and back to Dougherty. They should devise a system that doesn't give the students a run-around."

Lisa Lauten
Junior,
Sociology Major

"It is ridiculous. You have to go through too much. They should have changed the system over the summer, not between semesters. I had five classes scheduled. They forgot to put two of them on my card. That is not the computer's fault. I have to wait until Thursday to fix my schedule when it's the people that left out two of my classes."

Dave Desiderio
Sophomore,
Business Major

"I think the computer system the school had was fine. The administration is making the students feel impersonalized; more like a number. I have not gotten my schedule yet, and I am supposed to go for my appointment today."

Ann Moody,

"It is a hassle having to go through drop and add to get the courses that you want, because half the time you don't get what you want or need. I got dropped out of two classes."

Sections of the Proposed Student Bill of Rights

Sect. 1, Art. 12

"(Since the composition of the faculty is a prime concern to the student), the student shall have the right to participate in the evaluation procedure of faculty members at all levels."

Sect. 3, Art. 6

"Student organizations shall have the right to invite and hear any person or persons of their choosing. It shall be made clear to the public that sponsorship of guest speakers does not necessarily imply approval or endorsement of the views expressed, either by the sponsoring group or the institution; and the University shall never use control of campus facilities as a device of censorship."

Sect. 5, Art. 1

Law Student Elected Tax Collector

By JIM DELORENZO

On November 3, a Villanova third-year law student was elected tax collector for Easttown Township, Chester County.

Joseph Kohn, 24, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, conducted his second campaign for the office. A Democratic candidate, he proposed that he would refuse the salary, set up an alternate tax collection system, and ultimately, abolish the office of tax collector. He defeated his opponent, Republican Shirley DeShonge, by a margin of over 4,000 votes.

Kohn's proposed alternate system is already in use in many areas. "The lock box system allows taxpayers to be billed; then they mail their check to a post office box," Kohn stated. "Then an employee of the bank can empty the box; he's instructed to check the payments, fill out a deposit slip, and deposit that money directly into the township's account."

"This direct system costs 20 cents per bill for 3,000 households," Kohn added, "which amounts to a cost of $600 as opposed to the $12,000 the township and school district was paying a middle man, the tax collecter." Kohn has asked Easttown Township to withhold his $12,000 per year salary in order to save the township, and the taxpayers' money.

News Update.....

Adrian Ward

Villanova freshman Adrian S. Ward, arrested November 27 and charged with the rape and stabbing of a Baltimore woman, remains in jail after being charged with a second rape.

Ward, who allegedly gained entrance to the victim's homes by posing as a Baltimore newspaper employee, was arrested after police said they connected him through fingerprints to a rape of a 40-year-old woman September 19, 1980. He was also identified by the woman who was stabbed in the neck during the assault.

The second rape charge, lodged after the former high school track star was denied bail in the first case, involves the August 6, 1981 assault and robbery of a 35-year-old Baltimore woman, police said.

The suspect, also awaiting trial in Baltimore on December 15 for an unrelated burglary charge, is on a full athletic scholarship.

No trial date has been set for either of the rape charges.

New Programs

Pending approval by the Board of Trustees at its December meeting, Villanova will have two new programs, the Master of Business Administration and a Bachelor of Science in computer science.

The M.B.A. program, if accepted, will begin in the 1982-83 academic year. The program has four years to prepare for accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB). If it fails to meet the requirements, the College of Commerce and Finance undergraduate program will lose its accreditation.

According to Dean Alvin Clay of Commerce and Finance, seventy-five percent of the M.B.A. teaching faculty must be full-time and have doctorates in their areas of concentration. Starting salaries will be approximately $33,000.

The mathematics department is expected to have the computer science program available by the fall of 1982. A graduate program in computer science and an undergraduate concentration in the subject already exist.

Part IV: Abandoning The Sex Roles

Where Do Women Belong?

By PAULA C. GARELL

Where do women belong? Perhaps the question should be: Where do sex roles belong?

Sexual identity is a very necessary and fundamental concept. Maleness and femaleness are everything in one sense, and yet they are almost nothing in another. In one sense, they are our entire lives, most certainly we are either male or female (not recognizing sex changes), and in this distinction, society has set up its respective role expectations. Little girls are taught how to be "lady-like" — on the outside in terms of clothes, hairstyle, make-up and jewelry; on the inside in terms of which feelings should be expressed and which ones should be repressed. Likewise, boys are raised to be "macho" — they are the competitive, emotionally-constipated protectors of society and women.

To change these roles is an almost impossible task, because many men and women feel that it is easier to stay in these roles. Take away their stereotype and you take away their motivation and identity. But where is the motivation to find out what it means to be human? This is the sense that maleness and femaleness means almost nothing.

To be liberated, free from roles, we must take what we are given at birth — ourselves and life. Each of us is born alone and dies alone, and in between we live by integrating ourselves into a society. It is up to us to discover our own sense of selfhood, rather than adopt what society or our parents tell us. Women are not innately nurturers, just as men are not innately aggressive.

We are all individuals, separate entities, bonded together by our humanness. However, society does not recognize the oneness. Society looks in terms of woman complementing men and vice versa. We need each other to complete ourselves. Can't we be complete in our own right? Society says, "no." Men are the rational, thinking parts; women are the emotional, feeling parts, and we fit together to make a whole. This, you see, frees us from ever truly knowing our complete selves. Of course society has been building these roles since the time of Eve and Adam, and years cement belief. Perhaps one should question the origin of societal standards of behavior to which men and women conform themselves so readily.

People have even taken irrelevant phenomenons and fit them into the stereotype: women are the weak ones, it's clear in the passivity of the ovum; men are the aggressive ones, look at the activity of the sperm. Can you believe that? A lot of people do.

The breaking down of these sex roles is going to be a long and painful process; tradition dies hard, but someday it must happen. The destruction of sex roles will bring a wave of release and relief over humanity. It will be a release of all repressed emotion and creative thought, and a relief from all the pressure and tension that any role or prescribed method of conduct evokes.

Where do sex roles belong? Nowhere.

Shop Revives Memories of Christmas Past

By SHARON WINTERS

Tinsel, fir trees and flashing multi-colored lights remind the faithful that a special time of the year has arrived. A time of crowded malls, bulky packages and exhaustive searches creates a feeling of frustration and weariness during a season of "joy."

List in hand, the shopper enters the Christmas-season lottery. Dad could probably use a sweater. What was his size again? Mom likes perfume, the one in the commercial with "Charlie's Angel." The tired buyer searches for all the family, in hopes that the proportions are right and the gifts are not duplications. The shopping becomes a chore.

Every holiday season goes like this. The fault rests with crass commercialism; everybody knows that. This is the new, unsentimental Christmas, right?

Perhaps, if a doorway existed to the past, the old joy might augment the brand-new-mechanical, batteries not included, Christmas. Maybe, beyond that door is a quiet, somewhat musty shop.

Look, turn to the right. Seventy-year-old Christmas cards are stacked neatly in a compote. Penny-post cards of another era are brightly colored and embossed; one quotes Longfellow, "I heard the bells on Christmas day . . ."

A shelf above the cards holds glittery, paper houses, the kind that go with an old fashioned model, steam engine. A little further away stands a row of contemporary, but hand-made, painted wooden houses. Savor the moment; these are factory-made normally.

Walk further back in the little shop. But, be careful; cautiously weave through the narrow, crowded aisle. On the floor is a box with old pennants. One says "I like Ike" in white with a blue background. The former president's face smiles back. Others in the box are from Boy Scout Jamborees, 20 years ago, or Hershey Park in the '60s, or Girl Scout events of another decade.

A little further, on the left, is a pair of black, lace-up, ankle-high, shoes. They are about a size 4; around the turn of the century; a five-year-old wore these, a lot. The soles are so worn that the nails poke through. In a striped hatbox close by, several more pairs of similar shoes rest in tissue paper. These have buttons, instead of laces. Sometimes customers buy just one shoe and use it for a planter or conversation piece; they cost two or three dollars each. Perhaps, they are not very practical; but, they look like something from Oliver.

Above the shoes rests a pile of crisp-white cottons. The first item on the pile is a pair of bloomers with lace at the bottom of each leg. Buttons, rather than elastic, kept these in place. Also, hanging on the left, is a white nightshirt. Ruffles line the center-front that buttons the long-sleeved garment. It looks like something out of The Night Before Christmas: "Mama in her kerchief and I in my cap had just settled down for a long winter's nap."

A unique penny-post card is pictured. It is addressed to Pauline, in 1910, from Harriet with "Best Wishes."

Notice the quiet and calm. It almost passed unnoticed. This seems like another world. And it is. This is a world of memories, history, and fantasies stacked up on shelves. Boxes of "treasures" encroach on the floor-space. Old cigar tins with painted mottos cover display cases, cases that have tiny dolls and bottles and things inside. Cardboard boxes, containing Mason jars, add to the joyous clutter.

The pleasure of "antiquing or second-hand shopping is the delight in finding the treasure that someone else gave away. A store like Antiques and Collectibles on Louella Court in Wayne can give that experience.

"Smoke's" Rooms

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

Your shoes stick to the beer-stained floor as you cross it. You can barely hear what the friend behind you is saying as Frank Sinatra belts out another rendition of "New York, New York" from the jukebox. You are forced to slow your pace as the crowd threatens to crush you against a wall. You check the crowd out for familiar faces as you join a line of people waiting to get beer. You feel at home. You are at Smokey Joe's.

Smokey Joe's, or Smoke's, as it is most often called, is a favorite stomping ground of the college crowd. Any weekend night during the school year means a big crowd at the 40th and Walnut Streets location on the University of Pennsylvania's campus, but Wednesday and Thursday nights are just as popular. Some of the biggest crowds jam their way into Smokey Joe's the night before Thanksgiving and the nights final exams end at the area colleges. But no matter what night of the year it is, Smokey Joe's seems to hold an irresistible attraction for the young men and women who frequent this bar.

Why is this bar so popular? The decor on the first floor, commonly called "downstairs," amounts to wooden booths covered with deeply carved-in names, initials and dates, and brightly painted walls featuring likenesses of everyone from the Beatles to Richard Nixon. Used as a restaurant between 6:00 and 9:00 p.m., the second floor, or "upstairs" is a bit more formal. It is furnished with wooden tables and chairs. Photographs of Penn sports players hang on the walls.

The music downstairs originates from a much-used jukebox, while upstairs patrons are treated to the quieter strains of WIOQ or WMGK-FM. The air is appropriately smoke-filled and the lighting is always dim; upstairs and downstairs.

The secret of Smokey Joe's popularity probably lies more in its reputation as a Penn tradition than in its decor. Many students who turn up there now can boast that their parents frequented the place when they were in college, years ago.

"It's the tradition," agreed Ed Byrnes, a Villanova engineering student. "Sure, everyone likes to be here."

Nicknamed the Pennstitution, Smokey Joe's has been at its present location on Penn's campus since spring of 1978, when it was moved from a deteriorating building at 38th and Walnut Streets. All the original furniture, carved-up booths included, is now at the 40th and Walnut Streets locale.

"Every bar has its cycles. That spring, Smoke's was really the place to go," said a 1978 Penn graduate who still likes to stop in at Smoke's occasionally.

Perhaps the bar became more popular and well-known than ever after changing its location because it had gained national recognition at the time. Tim Masetti, a Penn football player and bartender at Smokey Joe's was drafted to play football as a place kicker with the Atlanta Falcons that spring. After kicking the winning field goal for the Falcons one night, he was interviewed on national television. "The gang at Smoke's must be going crazy," he said; and was then asked to explain exactly what "Smoke's" was to the nation.

"It's the place to come," said one bouncer at Smokey Joe's, although another admitted, "I can't figure out why they come here," as three young women claiming they had driven all the way from New Jersey entered at 1:00 on a Saturday morning.

Though known as a Penn bar, Smokey Joe's nevertheless attracts students from Drexel, Villanova and St. Joseph's Universities. It is a place where college students can be certain of running into friends and classmates. It is a place to drink, relax, and, maybe, meet someone interesting.

Or, perhaps, there is a simpler reason for Smokey Joe's widespread popularity. As Byrnes, said, sitting at a table upstairs, "After a long week of school, I come here to forget that I have homework to do."

Help On Tap Runs Dry

by SCOTT MEYER
and JOHN KEEFRIDER

"Everyone is leaving for Christmas soon and I have nowhere to go. Dad is still stationed in Frankfurt and I couldn't bear to spend three weeks with Mom and that guy she married in Seattle, but the thought of being all alone for the holidays is overwhelming. All my friends are packing and are in great spirits. Nobody wants to hear my problems. If only I could afford to call Dad. I'll just try a collect call. Ring, ring, ring, ring, ring. Oh, no one's answering. I have to talk to someone. I know, I'll call that hotline that's advertised in the Villanovan every week. Hmm, let's see here, 'F.Y.I. . . . Philosophy lecture . . . cultural film series . . . Help On Tap . . . 645-7232'."

Ring, ring, ring, ring, ring. The phone keeps ringing at Help On Tap, a peer counseling hotline for students at Villanova University. There are no "Hello, may I help you's" on the other end of this line. It causes one to wonder why such a group would exist and even advertise if no one answers the phone. Finding out the answer to this question is as difficult as finding the help they offer.

The search for the answer began with a trip to the office of H.O.T., the acronym for Help On Tap. The trip revealed that the tiny, bare office in Dougherty Hall is shared with the newly-formed Legal Information Center. When questioned about the H.O.T. organization's whereabouts, the serious-looking student at the desk said, "What's that?" After a brief explanation of the functions of H.O.T., the law student replied that, "Those guys are only here at night." A perusal of the schedule board on the wall revealed that the H.O.T. phone is answered from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., Sunday to Thursday.

Another call placed to the H.O.T. phone during their regularly scheduled hours also went unanswered. This provoked more perplexity about what students experiencing test anxiety, loneliness, homesickness, or even worse, could do to find help. The next day, a call was made to the Campus Ministry to see if someone there might help. This call was answered by a secretary, who said that the Fathers were not available at the moment, but Father Tracy would be there later in the afternoon.

This call was followed in the afternoon by a visit to the office of the Vice-President for Student Life, Dr. Richard Neville. When asked about the H.O.T. organization, the secretary looked quizzical and replied the same way as the law student had. After another explanation and a few phone calls by the secretary, it was discovered that Professor Thomas Grassey of the philosophy department, is the faculty moderator for H.O.T. There was still a problem, however, because Grassey is not listed in the university phone directory, as he is a part-time faculty member. When his number was finally discovered and called, he was not in.

After three days of searching, and finding out only that the organization does have an office and a moderator, I concluded that if in fact there is Help On Tap at Villanova, it is only a trickle.

"Come on, somebody has got to answer. I feel so totally alone like no one cares. There isn't anything else for me to do, no place to go. I'm just going to get in my car and drive until . . ."

Warmest Wishes For A Happy Holiday

Well friends, (and we use the term loosely), it's that time of year again — the season of giving and good cheer and all that jazz . . . so in the spirit of the season, WKWC proudly presents our annual Christmas gift list . . . Santa, if you would, please bestow the following gifts . . .

To Bob Hope . . . many more appeals with worthwhile causes to generously support with benefits for the small fee of $50,000 (as usual this is)

To the Board of Trustees . . . the dropping of basketball

To Fr. Pedro Presidente . . . the honor of announcing it for the Republic of Ivory and Ace of Vitalis

To Jerry Gorski . . . freedom from Father Martin

To Marc Tuchman . . . a unified sense of identity, so the C-Center never again has both menorahs and a Christmas tree

To the Side Key . . . all the happiness that Mummy and Daddy can buy

To WKVU . . . someone, anyone, who will admit that he is a member

To the RSA . . . the ACS . . . a marriage made in . . . made in . . . Hong Kong?

To the SGA . . . the return of Henry Amoroso and his friends, Vito and Rocko

To the Jewish Student Union . . . another Sasha

To the Belle Air . . . a decent issue for a change . . . (What do you mean they'll have to remove the Villanovan pictures?)

To the IFC . . . lots more near-beer . . . we loved watching you throw up

To Food Services . . . continued successful recruiting from Haverford State

To Maintenance . . . ditto

To Security . . . double ditto

To the Infirmary . . . an outbreak of V.D., so all their penicillin won't go to waste

To the [illegible] . . . boy, the competition for Haverford Field goals is getting tougher and tougher

To the Augustinians . . . each other . . . who else have they got?

To Dougherty Hall . . . an unlimited supply of Airwick fellas

To Bryn Mawr Trust . . . five more tellers who are too busy following General Hospital to wait on the customers

To [illegible] . . . a few more supporters

To [illegible] Derry . . . five people to take his place at the Union

To Bill Clark . . . a spine

To [illegible] . . . an end to comparisons with Villanova

To [illegible] . . . at least one passing grade to an [illegible]

"To Santa...With Love"

Dear Mista Claaaussssss,

Because we, The Great Rolling Stones, have everything you could possibly imagine, we decided to rewrite a song, Jingle Bells, and dedicate it to you.

Jingle Bells
Jingle Bells
Jingle all the way
Oh what fun it was to get
The money from J.F.K.
Hey!
Groupies here
Groupies there
Groupies all the way
Oh what fun they are to use
And then to throw away
Hey!

Dashing through the crowds
In a big black Cadillac
Over the fans we drive
Never looking back
Bells in our heads ring
Driving us insane
But we still can sing
With help from good cocaine.

Empty heads
Empty heads
Empty heads all the way
Oh what fun it is to be Working anyway
Hey!

Love and great big wet kisses,
Mick, Bill, Ron, Charlie, and Keith?

Dear Santa,

We've been away for almost a year now. For Christmas, can we please come home?

Love,
Villanova Football Team '80

Dear Santa,

I am the head honcho at a large university outside of Philadelphia, and I need a few things for Christmas. I know I've been less-than-perfect during the past year and that I should have written sooner. At my university, a problem has developed and you are the only one who can solve it.

It seems that a few of my students have had no trouble at all with their schedules. They got the courses they asked for. They weren't closed out of anything. They got the professors they wanted. They didn't even have to go to course adjustment! So that is why I need you. Can you pretty please bring me a few extra bureaucrats to foul things up for these unfortunately fortunate few? I don't need many . . . about 15 will do. I could make a couple of them Vice-Presidents in charge of this or that. I could pay them huge salaries that don't reflect their usefulness. I could put five or six in the registrar's office to completely butcher-up the students' schedules. I could make some of them into computer workers so that students would never see their mid-term marks. The possibilities are endless!

I promise if you bring me these presents, I will be good as gold and never ask for another thing!

Yours truly
El Padre Presidente

Robert Klein: The Consummate Pro

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Last Saturday evening, the versatile Robert Klein appeared at the Villanova Center. Klein is a comedian who over the years has branched out into other areas of entertainment. In television he has appeared and hosted the "Tonight Show." In movies he has had several roles including a cameo in the popular "The Owl and The Pussycat". Klein also hosts a successful radio program which is syndicated on over 150 stations nationwide. (Of course Philadelphia cancelled the show) Finally, Klein has also made his presence known on the stage where he co-starred with Lucie Arnaz in the Broadway hit, "They're Playing Our Song."

Still, Klein, who has been around for almost two decades, is underrated as a comedian. An example of this fact is the changing of the show from the Field House to the Villanova Center, due to the lack of interest. But for those who did attend, Robert Klein did not disappoint them. His humor is sharp and witty, while his improvisational talents are equalled only by Robin Williams.

Klein, clad in his trademark sweater and saddle-shoes, satirized subjects ranging from Russians to Tom Carvel. Klein (who brought his dog along with him to Villanova because no one was home) spoke of how his wife is an opera singer; "She gives me all her money. I'm an opera pimp." Klein asked the audience if anyone had seen him perform the last time he was at Villanova. Upon one girl raising her hand Klein replied, "That was sixteen years ago! What, were you left back?"

Klein worked the audience well and his delivery was smooth. He voiced his feelings on a gamut of topics. On beer commercials Klein kidded about the two people always found finishing a hard day of fishing and exclaiming "It's Miller Time! You can't tell me those two rednecks didn't bring beer along with them!" On being a Yankee fan, Klein stated that one tragic moment in his life was "seeing Yogi Berra naked!" On Walt Garrison's tobacco commercial: "His wife is going to love the brown muselage between his teeth." On Tom Carvel: "Do you eat Carvel ice cream because you like it or because the man is so pathetic?" Also Klein had an interesting reason as to why he stopped bowling. "I repulsed renting those shoes!" In explaining Slim Whitman: "He's the Rula Lenska of country music. I heard he's been the number one artist in England for four straight years-yes. 1896-1900!" Klein also had something for the physics majors in the audience. "Want to see science?" Klein inquired as he held out a straw which released water when he took his thumb off of it. Klein even took a jab at "The Tonight Show," which he had frequently appeared on. "One time I was on the show and they had the Hudson Brothers and the Pointer Sisters as guests. I moved down so much that I fell off my chair."

As the show came to its conclusion Klein thanked the audience for its warmth and appreciation. He closed the show with two songs: "I Want to Go Back to N.Y.C." and "I Can't Stop My Leg," which had everyone rolling in the aisles.

Overall it was a thoroughly enjoyable evening. Robert Klein is a truly polished performer. He does not resort to endless sex and drug jokes in order to get a cheap laugh. That's what separates Klein from most other comedians. It's called being a professional.

Pick Up The Pieces

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Pieces Of A Dream is a three-piece jazz group with its roots deeply planted in Philadelphia. Late in 1980, Philadelphia's Abundant Sounds Jazz Weekly voted them the City of Brotherly Love's most popular jazz group. Because their debut album, of the same name, has been in Billboard's national charts for the past two months, it would seem that they are branching out and are leaving cult status behind.

The pieces of this dream have yet to leave their teens. Cedric Napoleon, the bassist, and Curtis Harmon, the drummer whose father manages the band, are 19, and keyboardist James Lloyd just turned 17. Raised in Philadelphia's Mt. Airy section, they began playing together in 1975. Cedric and Curtis met as seventh-graders and asked sixth-grader James to join their fledgling combo. They so impressed Milt Jackson that he asked them to support his tour for sixteen weeks, but because of academics, they had to respectufully decline. Another Philly jazz great, Grover Washington, Jr., was so excited about their talent that he made Pieces Of A Dream his first outside production project.

Curtis Harmon

Q: What was it like working with Grover Washington, Jr.?

CURTIS: He let us record the songs as we pleased. He just more or less monitored everything and watched out what we were doing and helped with anything he thought he could improve upon. Next time we go into the studio will probably be in February, with the releasing of the second album sometime in June. No later.

JAMES: He's a real nice guy. He made us feel very relaxed and he pretty much let us have the show. He just helped with a lot of guidance. The group Pieces Of A Dream itself will always remain just the three of us.

James Lloyd

CEDRIC: We're very, very fortunate that we got Grover because Grover is just into the contemporary sound that we're into. There's a lot of musicians you find that are very down to earth, very nice guys. I mean, Grover is truly one of the nicest musicians I ever met.

* * *

The opening track of the LP, Pieces Of A Dream, is the band's signature piece. It is built around a four-note keyboard tickle that would have been a fluffy little guitar dance riff, but the Fender Rhodes sound lends this piece a degree of soft control, kind of like Brian Auger's Oblivion Express covering the Ohio Players. The bass solo slides out from under the melody like some rich, dark liquid.

Cedric Napoleon

Q: How do you guys put your tunes together?

CURTIS: All different ways. Let's see . . . basically, James happens to come up with a lot of ideas as well as Cedric and I. But I think it's put together through equal parts.

JAMES: I might be walking down the street, or washing the dishes, or whatever, and something will pop into my head. I'll just keep thinking of it, and work on it, and then I'll bring it to a rehearsal with the fellows and share the idea and they'll add their little input.

* * *

The cut which opens the second side, a cover of Earth, Wind and Fire's All About Love, stokes this warmth. Lloyd's rippling solo on a Steinway Concert Grand proves how talented he really is. There is little of the rebellion normally associated with youth, and no set-'em-up to mow-'em-down guitar rave-ups anywhere. Instead of flaunting their disregard of established genres, Pieces Of A Dream draw a sense of dignity and

Ballet Co. Triumphs

By GREG ANTON

To successfully adapt a complex and intricate story to the stage is indeed a challenge. The challenge becomes intensified when one tries to recapture the essence and emotions of a story solely through the use of dance. The Philadelphia Civic Ballet Company confronted such a challenge when it chose to perform the Dickens' classic, A Christmas Carol. What resulted was a beautiful and moving rendition that re-created and masterfully depicted all of the diverse emotions and sentiments of the story.

The great familiarity of the story allowed one to more easily interpret and understand the dancers. However, it also placed a burden on the company, for one could have expected too much and been disappointed with the adaptation. The Philadelphia Civic Ballet Company rose to the occasion and performed brilliantly. The gracefulness and expertise of the dancers was a pleasure to watch. Their performances were filled with genuine emotion and did not become maudlin or histrionic. Every movement, though carefully planned, remained carefree and almost effortless. The colorful and lavish costumes depicted the Victorian style and added much beauty to the stage. Although all the dancers performed superbly, Jon Sherman and Melanie Wright were exceptionally good as the beggars. Also, Henry Roy, portraying the ghost of Christmas future, gave a stunning, dynamic, and powerful performance.

The evening was thoroughly entertaining and relaxing. The Philadelphia Civic Ballet Company conveyed the spirit of Christmas to all in the theatre. The atmosphere in the theatre at the final curtain call was festive and exuberant. This was indeed a tribute to the company, and of course to Charles Dickens, whose story probably best captures the true meaning of Christmas.

The quickest way to get emergency money.

These days a trip to the college bookstore can reduce your available funds to some small change. Luckily, that's about all you need to make the one phone call that can replenish your depleted funds in a couple of hours. Here's what to do:

1. Call home. Report the situation, and tell the folks they can get emergency cash to you fast by phone.

2. Ask them to call Western Union's toll-free number, 800-325-6000 (in Missouri, 800-342-6700), anytime, day or night. They charge the money and service fee to their MasterCard* or VISA† card. A Western Union Charge Card Money Order, up to $1,000, will be flashed to the Western Union office or agent nearest your emergency.

3. Pick up your money—usually within two hours—at the local Western Union office or agent. There are 8,500 nationally, except in Alaska. Conveniently, about 900 locations are open 24 hours. It's that easy.

Be sure to remind your parents about our toll-free number. It's all they need to back you up at the bookstore.

Beatty Leads All-Star Cast in 'Reds'

By AMY MACLACHLAN

How can a man fall in love with an ideal so completely that it becomes his whole life and even when it turns sour, how can he still hold on to it with every last ounce of strength he possesses? In the recent Paramount release Reds, directed, co-written, produced and starring Warren Beatty, the answer is clear.

Beatty plays Jack Keen, a journalist who becomes caught up in the fever of the Bolshevik revolution. He dreams of a perfect society where the common man rules. Unfortunately, as the dream becomes a reality, it begins to appear that the idea is very different in practice. The Russia after the revolution is not the happy place envisioned by the revolutionaries. Here a man must give the party his all. There is no room for emotion or individualism. This is a devastating realization for Keen. He did not forsee this unfortunate by-product of his dream. The leaders of the new government have but one objective — to spread their philosophy. Keen is not allowed to return to his homeland and is placed in the ministry of propaganda as a valued speaker and journalist. He accepts this position hesitantly. Isolated from his wife Louise, played by Diane Keaton, and from his country, his spirit is broken.

"The Russia after the revolution is not the happy place envisioned by the revolutionaries. Here a manmust give the party his all. There is no room for emotion or individualism."

The characters are colorful and as complicated as the plot. Louise Bryant-Keen is a journalist in her own right who will not compromise her beliefs for anyone or anything. Jack Nicholson plays Eugene O'Neill, poet and playwright, who falls in love with Louise. He presents the opposing cynical views that contrast sharply to the idealistic Keen.

Beatty uses an interesting device to involve the viewer with the action on the screen. The entire story is narrated by elderly persons who are approximately the same age that the characters would be if they were alive today. Their comments range from sheer gossip to necessary comments needed to explain on-screen actions. This gives the viewer the feeling that all this happened not so long ago and should be given some real consideration.

Reds is the kind of movie that gives the viewer a good feeling; the characters are endearing. Although the film is three-and-a-half hours long it is never dull, due to Warren Beatty's successful combination of adventure, travel, romance, history and every other element that makes up an entertaining movie. Reds is the movie of 1981.

preference on records, Al Jarreau and people of that calibre.

On Body Magic, the closing piece, Harmon cues the others with a simple snare-slap and bass-roll, and then they jump on the funk and refuse to let it go. The percussion break suggests a similar moment in the Average White Band's Person to Person, and the song might sound a little better with a horn chart. Curtis slams it into overdrive right before the squiggly guitar solo contributed by Rich Steaker. Their playing here is at its most energetic on the LP and it is a great closing piece as it leaves the listener wanting to turn the record over.

Q: What can you tell us about the new album?

CURTIS: We have about six tunes. Same perspective in terms of doing something for the older crowd and for the younger crowd and basically mixing it up. A little vocal, mostly instrumental.

JAMES: We're going to keep the format just about the same. We basically try to reach out and touch as many people as we can, all different types of audiences.

CEDRIC: I think I'm singing more on this one.

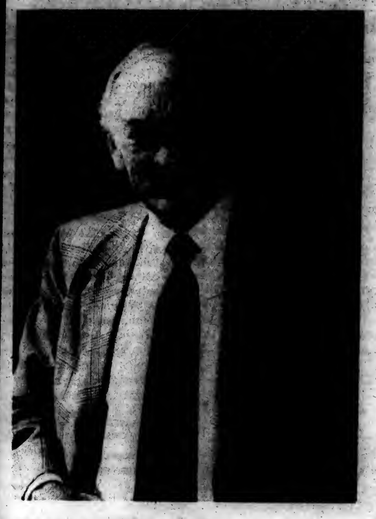
THE YEAR IN SPORTS

Spring



The year of the Cat held many successes but was also affected by some great losses.

On March 22 Jumbo Elliott, long-time track coach, died. During his 47 year tenure Jumbo became much more than a coach; many of his athletes remember him fondly as a man of many kindnesses.

The Wildcat hoopsters deep-sized their opponents all season taking them into a triple over-time versus Syracuse before falling in the Big East Tournament. In the NCAA tournament they soundly defeated Houston before bowing to the Virginia Cavaliers.

The women's basketball team was nationally ranked for the first time, compiling a 22-6 record.

The Villanova swim team upset Syracuse on the second day of competition to take the Big East Championship trophy in their first try.

The Icecats avenged their narrow loss of the Hannigan Cup in 1980 decisively by taking it in a two out of three series versus Delaware.

And as an unsuspected closing to the semester, Father President Driscoll announced the Board of Trustees decision to drop the football program.

Fall

For the first time in 87 years there was no football at Villanova; no blue and white marching band at half-time; no tailgates. The campus seemed to be waiting all fall for the home opener.

The women spikers realized a first in their team's history when they were invited to the AIAW regional tournament.

The women's cross country team was victorious in the EAIAW Championships at Worcester, Ma. In the Nationals the Cats secured 10th place among the high altitudes of Idaho.

Hoopsters Cop Dial Classic

By MARIE WOZNIAK

The women's basketball team of the 23rd Women's Basketball Classic last weekend by defeating host team, Montclair State, in the championship game, 69-58. Villanova reached the finals of the four-team tournament by beating East Carolina in Saturday's game. The Wildcats ran up a 46-26 lead in the first half and never let down as the final score read 72-59.

Lisa Ortlip led the team with 16 points and Stephanie Vanderslice scored 14 and dominated the boards by grabbing 11 rebounds against Carolina. Nancy Bernhardt also chipped in 14 points.

"We played good defense and held them to only 26 points in the first half. We also played well offensively and it helped," said Coach Harry Perretta.

The championship game was a re-match of last year's in which Montclair beat Villanova for the title.

Even though Villanova again held their opponents to 26 first half points, this game was closer as the Wildcats only led by twelve. They eventually pulled it out, 69-58, to win the tournament.

Ortlip, the game's high scorer, poured in 21 points and pulled down 10 rebounds, while Vanderslice played another outstanding game and finished with 12 points and 13 rebounds. Bernhardt and Kathie Beisel each contributed 14 to the victory.

Perretta commented, "We played just as good defensively in this game as we did in the first, but we faltered offensively. Overall, we played good team basketball."

Vanderslice and Ortlip, who was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player, were the two Villanova players named to the All-Tournament team for their performances in the two games.

The Wildcats' next game will be an important one against nationally-ranked Penn State, next Wednesday at the Field House.

Icecats Up MAHC Record

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova ice hockey team upped its record to 10-5 last weekend with a pair of victories over Drexel, 7-4, and the University of Pennsylvania, 11-6. Both were hard-earned, well-fought games with the Wildcat offense continuing at a torrid pace of 6.7 goals-per-game. But more importantly, the Cats boast of a perfect 6-0 record in the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference, the best start in the league's history.

On Thursday, it took the Cats four unanswered third-period goals to dispose of the pesky Dragons from Drexel. Trailing 4-3, the Icecats came out fired up for the start of period three, with junior Chris Mancuso (14-8-22) scoring on a stuffer from behind the net in the opening minute of the period. One minute later, freshman Bill McHugh scored the second of his two goals on a blast from the face-off circle and Villanova led for the first time in the game. Drexel became frustrated and began taking unnecessary penalties as the Icecats went to work on their power-play, scoring on two, man-up situations.

Villanova was looking to avenge an earlier loss to Pennsylvania on Sunday, and disposed of the Quakers in an easy fashion. After streaking to an early 3-0 lead, the Cats held a 5-2 lead after one period. Penn did not quit, however, and came back early in period two to close the gap to 5-4. Villanova's offense then began to gel as the Cats scored three ore unanswered goals to boost their lead to four goals.

Leading the Cats to victory in the Penn game, each with two goals, were Tom Curran (13-14-27), Frank Segreto (7-11-18), Jamie Huston (7-8-15), and Jeff Beck (9-7-16). Getting the game winning goal, in his final game as an Icecat was senior John Huffman. "Huff" tallied three goals and dished out four assists during the first semester.

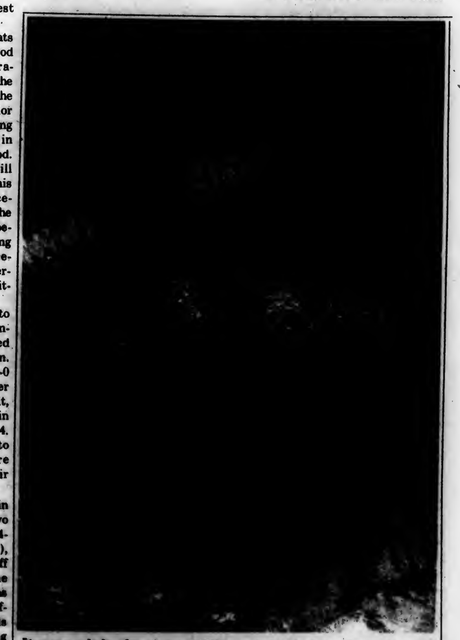
Coach Skip Probst feels that after going through a rough period a few weeks ago when the Cats dropped three straight games, Villanova is finally back on the right track.

"We had a tough semester when it comes to injuries," according to Probst. "We lost four important players and I think it took us awhile to adjust. Winning these last two games helped us mentally but more importantly, having this four-week layoff will allow us to mend our wounded bones. When we return after break, hopefully we'll be back at full strength, for the first time since the second game of the season."

Sophomore goaltender Don Clark has a 10-4 record with an impressive 3.67 goals-against-average.

"Don has been amazing all semester," states Probst. "We've played some poor games defensively but Don has been there in each and every game holding us in there."

Villanova will go on their first road trip this season on Jan. 15-17, when the Icecats travel to play Elmira and arch-rival Penn State.



It was a whale of a victory! Villanova's Men's Swim Coach Ed Geisz takes a victory dip after the Wildcat upset of Penn State in the Field House Wednesday. The national swimming power fell to the Watercats, 71-42. It was the first Wildcat victory over the Nittany Lions since 1977. Freshman Dan Nies got two freshman records while swimming to victory in the 200 yard butterfly and the 200 yard freestyle. Tri-Captain Dan Ahern set a new Villanova record and a pool record in posting a 54.5 split in the 100 yard backstroke leg of Villanova's winning 400 yard medley team. This upset was one of the biggest victories ever for the Watercats.

Nova Outlifts Competition

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

Despite some fierce competition, Villanova's powerlifting team wheezed to a first-place finish in the Glassboro Open, held at Glassboro, New Jersey last Saturday. A total of ten teams from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York and Delaware competed in the meet.

First-place finishes in the women's competition went to Meg Falk and Mary Ann Majoris. Both were expected to win the Pennsylvania State Title in their respective weight classes as well as be competitive in the National Championships.

In the men's competition, John Ostrova won the 114-pound weight class by lifting a total of 840 pounds in the three categories. Ostrova squatted 300 pounds, benched 240 pounds and deadlifted 300 pounds in winning the class. He is also expected to do well in the state and national championships for he has already passed the 750 pound qualifying standard for the nationals.

Jim Venesia and Keith Doyne finished first and second respectively, in the 132-pound weight class.

"Powerhouse" Dan Capece won the 132 pound weight class with a total of 1100 lifted pounds while Chris Wokeim, competing in a higher weight class than usual, finished fourth. Wokeim weighed in at 128 pounds, five pounds above the class in which he usually competes.

In the 181-pound class, Vince Sferra, with his intense style of lifting, attempted a 600 pound squat which, unfortunately, was barely high. He finished with 580 pounds in the squat. Sferra and senior co-Captain John Jefferson, competing in the 242-pound weight class, both expected to dominate the states and the nationals, finished in third place. This was attributed to the intense competition encountered at the meet.

Senior co-Captain Matt Durst, commenting on the exceptional display put on by the Villanova powerlifting team in the Glassboro Open, stated, "This contest was a reflection of the awesome weightlifting prowess Villanova has, and it will continue through the state championships as well as the nationals."

Cats Shred Eagles

By KERRY LYNCH

When Nova's Mike Mulquin came off the bench Friday night early in the first half, it was all over for Boston College. Mulquin immediately hit a lay-up and couldn't be stopped from there. The Wildcats swamped the Eagles with a display of never-miss offense and unyielding defense to hand them a 97-75 defeat at the Brendan Byrne Meadowlands Arena in the season's Big East opener.

Villanova controlled the game from the opening tap when John Pinone got the ball out to Ed Pinckney, who fed it back to Pinone to sink it at 19:47. Boston College answered the first Villanova buckets but never again held the advantage by more than two points or a few seconds. By 11:59, the Cats were on top for good as B.C. lost sight of the leaders, never coming close again.

Mulquin had been replaced in the staring lin-up by freshman Pinckney because, as he observed, "In the first two games I wasn't playing my game." But when he came off the bench at 14:24 he moved right into the flow of the game, scoring his first basket just four seconds later. Mulquin was 5 for 5 from the field in the first half and just as strong under the boards, grabbing four first half rebounds. His momentum continued through the second half and he finished the game with a total of 17 points. Coach Rollie Massimino was thoroughly pleased with his athlete's performance, "Mike is a very tough young man, his goal was to start but it doesn't make any difference who starts, it's who finishes. Mike opened the game up."

Mulquin didn't seem upset with his start on the bench. He stressed the team concept, saying, "Instead of us (Pinckney and Mulquin) fighting each other, we play together."

John Bagley and B.C., who devastated the Wildcats last year in Chestnut Hill, seemed powerless in this year's contest. Boston set up a press the whole game but the Cats were ready, going into the holes and, as Mulquin said, "We got some pretty easy buckets." Bagley rolled up 30 points but sunk less than half his shots from the floor.

Boston College Tom Davis said the Wildcats played as if they had picked up where they left off last year when they were playing so well, adding, "I sure hope they're terrific."

Pinone gathered 22 points for the evening while point guard Stewart Granger hit 8 for 12 and pleased Massimino with his attack on the press. "Stewart controlled the tempo. With the ball in his hands it is easy to attack the press."

And there is no need to wonder where the Nova freshman fit into all this. Dwayne McClain asserted himself on defense, scrapping for the ball. Pinckney put on the best show, running full speed downcourt for a reverse slam that made the fans wild. Massimino said, "Ed gave us the extra spark. At first he was nervous, tentative, then he got the ball off the glass."

If Bagley couldn't do much against the first string Cats the rest of the Eagles couldn't do much. Rich Shrigley, senior forward, got into foul trouble early on and had to take the bench at 12:35 in the second half with only five points. In the second half the Boston College play dwindled to reckless fouling and wild shots which fell anywhere but in the basket.

Massimino said his team played, "An excellent game with a lot of help from a lot of people. I don't know how good we are yet, we have a long way to go but we have great chemistry and a good group of kids."

Nova Downs Friars

By JOE MARUSAK

It's really no secret: get the ball to John Pinone and Stew Granger and you've almost assuredly got yourself a victory. As coach Massimino has explained, "The two people to get the ball to are Stew and John. If we do we're going to make things happen."

That formula worked throughout the second half of Tuesday night's game against Providence College at the Palestra. The minute the two juniors took control, things started to click for the Wildcats.

Control was something they lacked in the first half. The Friars of Providence time after time prevented Pinone from gaining an inside advantage. Their tightly-packed defense allowed VU very few offensive rebounds; the Bear himself could manage only one board the whole 20 minutes.

At the 12:56 mark Villanova held a 12-8 advantage, but the Friars would not surrender. Otis Thorpe's spectacular dunks and Jim Panaggio's ballhandling kept Providence close all the way. Thanks to Ed Pinckney's impressive stuff — his third of the half — at :21, the Wildcats went into the locker room leading by 30-29.

VU came out steaming in the second half. With Pinone pouring in 10 points, they built up a 46-33 lead seven minutes into the second half. Massimino commented, "We changed it in the second half because we stayed within our roles." Each player began contributing in his own special way: Pinone scored (27); Pinckney rebounded (8); and Granger assisted (6).

Most important to the final outcome, 65-54, was Pinone's ability to penetrate the Providence defense. Unlike his efforts in the first half, the All-American candidate was able to bodily intimidate Thorpe and power forward Sean Canty in the final 20 minutes. The Friar's head coach, Joe Mullaney, had high praises for last year's Big Five scoring champ and Player of the Year: "He does a good job ... uses his body well. Pinone's very clever, and gets good position inside."

Rule Revised

By MIKE HEALEY

Picture this scenario, sports fans: Villanova is playing the much-hated Hoyas of Georgetown in a tightly-contested, pressure-filled Big East Conference game. Suddenly, with a few ticks left on the clock, guard Steward Granger dives on a loose ball and is tied up by opposing guard Eric "Sleepy" Floyd of Georgetown.

Normally, you say, this situation would constitute a jump ball. But not this time, or any other, for that matter.

The referee awards the ball to Georgetown, who then in-bound it and preserve the victory by wasting the remaining time with a four-corner offense. Wildcat fans are absolutely livid because their team has been denied a victory. (Purely a hypothetical situation), and they demand an explanation.

Well, here's the explanation.

Starting this current collegiate basketball season, the NCAA implemented a revision in the rule concerning jump balls. Formerly, a tip-off between the two teams initiated each half of play," as well as tie ups between players when a question of possession existed.

But now, there is only an opening tip-off and no other. From then on, the teams alternate possession of the ball in situations where a jump ball would normally be required.

Villanova Head Coach Rollie Massimino has a certain distaste for the new alternating jump ball rule. "I don't particularly like it," says Massimino, "because it takes away from the strategy involved with a jump ball, and also from some of the excitement of the game."

Pitt Panthers Boost Big East

By TOM REUSCHE

University of Pittsburgh, welcome to the "big-time". Big time basketball, that is. After six years in the floundering Eastern Eight Conference, Pitt will become the ninth member of the Big East Conference next season. If you think this is good news for Pitt, it sounds even better to the Big East.

Pittsburgh joins the Big East at a time when Boston College and Syracuse, last year's regular season and tournament champions, respectively, were being pressured to leave the Big East in favor of a proposed all-sports, but football-oriented, eastern conference. The eastern conference would have included Penn State, Temple, Rutgers, West Virginia, Boston College, Syracuse, and Pittsburgh. When Pitt declared its allegiance to the Big East, however, the proposed eastern conference fell through, relieving Syracuse and Boston College of a painful decision.

According to Dr. Ted Aceto, Villanova's athletic director, "Syracuse and Boston College didn't want to leave the Big East, but the suggestion of a football conference certainly put some pressure on them."

Had Syracuse and B.C. left the Big East, the conference would have been dealt a severe blow. Pitt's entrance, however, strengthens the conference, and brings a smile to Rollie Massimino's face. "This move greatly solidifies our conference. What we now have," said Villanova's basketball coach, "are the best basketball traditions in the East."

The Big East is comprised of teams with great basketball traditions, situated in large media markets, with compatible administrations and personnel. These three elements have made the Big East the most televised basketball conference in the nation for the 1981-82 season. Will Pittsburgh fit into this mold? "Certainly," Coach Massimino feels. "Pitt has a great media outlet, and it's a good school. I have a very good relationship with our (Villanova) alumni in Pittsburgh. We have a very good following there because of the Eastern Eight, our old conference."

The Big East may do for Pitt's basketball program what Christmastime did for the toy industry. Both Massimino and Aceto agree that Panther basketball will get bigger and better. "Joining the Big East," said Aceto, "was one of the greatest moves we've ever made athletically. With the television exposure, and the financial rewards, we've gotten more out of one year in the Big East than in four years of the Eastern Eight.

And not just in basketball, either. We won the Commissioner's Trophy last year." The Commissioner's Trophy is awarded annually to the conference school with the best overall performance in basketball, golf, cross country, track, swimming, and tennis.

Questions of long-range expansion goals arise when a new team is admitted to a conference. Nine is not a round number. Is ten the number of teams the Big East seeks? "There are no long range goals for expansion," Dr. Aceto points out. "I'm not saying there will never be a tenth team, but this league can function effectively with nine teams." Aceto added that "More teams will never dilute this conference, though I can never envision the Big East with more than ten teams."

At last week's special convention in St. Louis, the NCAA Basketball Committee established a new rule that all conferences with automatic NCAA bids must play a double round-robin format. Should a tenth team loom on the Big East's horizon, member teams would have to give up the 16 conference [illegible]

V.U. Wildcats Scratch Hoosiers

By BILL CLARK

[illegible]ing into the Madison Square [illegible]n Holiday Festival, the In- Hoosiers stood in the way of [illegible]nova winning the most [illegious of all basketball [illegics. This was Indiana; [illegal champions in 1981, the [illegible] of the Big 10.

[illegible] it turned out, it was not the [illegible]na Hoosiers who prevented [illegible]nova from capturing the [illegible]day Classic. Rather, it was [illegible]her Big East team, the St. [illegible]'s Redmen.

[illegible]ranted, Villanova would face [illegible] John's two more times this [illegible]son, but the 94-89 defeat at the [illegible]ds of St. John's prevented Vil- [illegible]nova from owning Madison [illegible]are Garden, the mecca of [illegible]llege basketball, for a year.

Opneing night saw the Wildcats [illegible]feat Indiana 63-59 in front of [illegible],443 fans. To accomplish this, [illegible]y had to overcome a 12 point [illegible]ficit with 15 minutes remaining. [illegible]cause John Pinone, Villanova's [illegible]ding scorer, was shackled most [illegible] the night by a tough man-to- [illegible]n defense, Villanova was forced [illegible] look to 6-9 freshman Ed [illegible]ckney to dominate underneath [illegible] basket; and he responded.

Pickney scored 11 of his game- [illegible]h 22 points in those final 15 [illegible]nutes, along with blocking three [illegible] shots by Indiana.

"Pickney? What did Pickney [illegible]? He does that all the time," [illegible]d coach Rollie Massimino. But, [illegible] always doesn't do it in the Gar- [illegible]n.

For a while, though, it seemed [illegible]e no one wanted to win the game. With 4:06 remaining, Aaron Howard hit a jump shot to give Villanova a 91-59 lead. That was the last point scored until Stewart Granger's game-clinching dunk with three seconds left.

The final four minutes saw travelling violations, a missed shot, a Pickney reject, and a missed foul shot in a one-and-one situation by Indiana. Villanova, on the other hand, missed three different one-and-one situations which would have clinched the game — one each by Pinone, Garv McLain, and Granger.

Luckily for Villanova, the switching defenses employed by the Wildcats rattled Indiana late in the game, forcing key turnovers and bad shots.

"I thought we deserved to win for about the first 30 minutes of the game, but they really outplayed us in the final 10 minutes when the outcome was being decided," said Indiana's controversial coach Bobby Knight. The following evening, Knight refused to open the locker room for interviews when Indiana was defeated by Kansas in the consolation game.

The nationally-televised final game against St. John's followed the same form as the game against Indiana. St. John's jumped out to an early lead. This time, though, the Villanova comeback fell five points short.

Sparked by guard Billy Goodwin and freshman sensation Chris Mullen, St. John's opened a 40-30 half-time lead. The Redmen shot an amazing 72 percent from the floor in the first half, hitting 18 of 25 shots.

It was more of the same in the second half, and with 7:22 remaining, St. John's had a 15-point lead, 76-61.

Things looked especially bleak when Granger and Pickney fouled out with 5:00 left, and St. John's holding a 14-point lead.

At that point, Villanova brought in senior forward John Sices, and suddenly a press which was being beaten all night began to force turnovers. With Sices, Howard, Pinone, and freshmen McLain and McClain, Villanova began to come back.

A game which had the makings of a blow-out suddenly became a buzzer-beater. Only key foul shooting and the clock prevented Villanova from pulling the game out.

With 1:53 remaining and St. John's holding an 83-79 lead, Sices fouled Goodwin, who hit both ends of a one-and-one. Later, the Cat's fouled St. John's star David Russell. Russell also converted the foul shots, and that was the ballgame.

St. John's got to the final by staging a comeback of its own against Kansas. The Redmen overcame a six-point deficit in the last two minutes to defeat Kansas 76-75.

Reserve guard Kevin Williams redeemed a costly turnover late in the game by hitting a three-point play with 26 seconds left. That gave St. John's its first lead since midway through the first half, and they held on to win when Kansas guard Tony Guy missed a 15-foot jumper at the buzzer.

[illegible]e curriculum fails to meet the [illegible]irements, the undergraduate [illegible]ram of the college of Com- [illegible]e and Finance will lose its ac- [illegible]itation. Villanova is one of [illegible]only 207 accredited business [illegible]ols in the U.S.

[illegible]e're going to take a risk," [illegible] Dean of Commerce and [illegible]ce Alvin Clay. "I'm almost [illegible]ve Villanova will maintain [illegible] undergraduate level accredi- [illegible]n. We've worked hard enough [illegible]." Clay will supervise the new [illegible]uate program.

[illegible]or to the finalization by the [illegible]d of Trustees, the completed [illegible]osal first went to the [illegible]uate Committee of the [illegible]rsity Senate, then to the full [illegible]e for its approval. The [illegible]e unanimously approved the [illegible]n for passing of the M.B.A. [illegible]ram.

[illegible]e proposal was next reviewed [illegible] Academic Committee of the [illegible]d of Trustees and then by the [illegible]dent. The Board of Trustee [illegible] its approval at its December [illegible]ing.

[illegible]ccording to Father President [illegible] Driscoll, the new program is [illegible]ne example of Villanova's commitment to academic excellence. Driscoll said that, "Hopefully, Villanova will continue to be viewed as a great natural resource and we in turn can continue to offer innovative, substantial, and productive academic programs."

At the University Senate meeting in November, one Senate member questioned Clay concerning the program's ability to remain solvent. Clay explained that the tuition will be significantly higher than that for the undergraduate program. "We will definitely operate in the black," said Clay. Tuition for the program will be $160 per credit hour. Revenue for the first year, including summer school, is expected to be $372,500 with expenses totaling $314,850.

"The greatest expense," explained Clay, "will be capital improvements necessary to prepare us. Right now the present office space in Bartley Hall is inadequate; we need more space for the faculty. The library and computer facilities will be moved from the third floor to the basement and up-graded tremendously; the third floor will be used for faculty offices. There will also be faculty computers. Air-conditioning will be put in on the third floor and classrooms will be renovated. Some improvement will come in stages as we evaluate needs."

According to Clay, the program will be self-sustaining, and pay for capital expenditures and faculty salaries. Approximate starting salaries for faculty members will be $33,000. The average salary will increase by ten percent in each of the following four years.

Tentative plans call for the hiring of four new faculty members for the first year and possibly eight more after that. For the M.B.A. program, 75 percent of the faculty must be full-time and doctorally qualified by discipline. The program will also require the faculty members to have a reduced teaching load because a graduate course will count double that of an undergraduate course.

Estimates for enrollment project approximately 150 students per year. Admission will be based on a formula of applying the applicant's GMAT score and his undergraduate cumulative grade point average. Clay expects close to 2,000 inquiries with approximately 1,000 applicants.

"One reason we'll have a quality program is because we intend to stay small," said Clay. "Not everyone will be able to get into the M.B.A."

Dorm Tree, Bulbs Taken

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

Several Christmas decorations adorning the lounge and exterior of Delurey Hall were damaged and others stolen at the beginning of exam week last semester.

In what Rev. John Hagen, O.S.A., called "a combination of theft and vandalism," thieves stole a Christmas tree and three sets of lights from the Delury Hall lounge and cut the cords of three more sets on the front of the building. They then returned later than night and took a string of lights from a tree outside and pulled down another.

Among the decorations stolen was a 25-year-old "heirloom" set of Christmas lights from Italy belonging to Hagen which had been hung from the ceiling of the lounge.

Resident Assistant Steve Davies was walking towards Delurey when he saw "at least a half-dozen people" running from the building carrying a large object which, he said, turned out to have been the missing tree. He began to chase them, but stopped when he heard an unidentified young woman call for help on Rt. 320. When he approached, however, she got into a car and drove off.

Davies and Jerry Ashenbrenner, another Delurey Hall resident assistant, along with other residents of Delurey, then conducted a brief search of several dormitories in the hope that they might find the tree.

Returning to Delurey, they discovered the outdoor lights missing.

According to Hagen, this was the first case of such vandalism to happen since Delurey residents started decorating the dormitory at Christmas in 1979.

"This building never has vandalism." Hagen said. "We don't have charges for vandalism against residents ... It is a small dormitory and rather familial. There is pride in this place and it just doesn't happen."

Hagen continued, saying "It is paradoxical that someone would steal Christmas decorations. The whole season is so ... contrary to the ideas of stealing and vandalism."

Hagen said that the problem of vandalism is one that needs to be treated, and that the University and the Office of Residence Life must make a firm statement against it.

"The Office of Residence Life should have acted in some way" in response to the incident, he commented. "I think that because particular individuals cannot be identified as vandals, there is a reluctance to do anything."

According to Davies, however, the problem is not likely to be easily solved. "You've got all those lights outside," he said. "Unless you have a 24-hour guard, how are you going to prevent damage to them?"

Amtrak, PennDOT Extend Dates

By MICHAEL MANNO

Amtrak and Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDot) officials have failed to comply with a 1981 court order to submit a detailed study containing plans for permanent improvements of both the Amtrak underpass and the Route 320 bridge.

According to one official source, to enforce the deadline set would be like "beating a dead horse." The studies were due to be submitted to the Public Utilities Commission (PUC) by December 26, six months after the court order.

Judge Martin Fountain, who issued the court order, has not received the studies from either Amtrak or PennDot. As a procedure case, Amtrak and PennDot will be given a one-month grace period. If the studies are not submitted by then, Fountain will notify the Chief of Rail Crossing in Harrisburg, who will send a letter of inquiry to Amtrak and PennDot as to the reasons for not submitting their studies by the deadline.

According to Villanova's Maintenance Director Thomas Trucks, some improvements have been made to alleviate the persistent problem of flooding in the commuter tunnel. "The University has installed an inlet across the pathway with a grate over it. This project was completed early December. Combined with the improvements Amtrak has made, it should greatly reduce the chance of flooding.

"We will have to wait for the next big rainfall to see if the improvements are sufficient. If the problem is not completely eliminated, it is still a vast improvement from previous conditions," stated Trucks. Amtrak has constructed a retaining wall between the back of the station and the parking lot and has cleaned out drains and gutters.

As for renovations in the actual tunnel, the responsibility lies with Amtrak. "Some old blueprints were found," said Trucks. "These showed that Villanova's property line runs 1-1/2 feet to the left of the pathway, down toward the station to the second step and across the pathway to the right. Villanova and Amtrak are working toward the same goal: permanent safety for everyone."

Officials from both PennDot and Amtrak hesitated to answer why they had failed to meet the deadline for submittance. Ron Fagel, PennDot District 6 bridge engineer said, "A request for a six-month extension was considered, but I told PennDot officials that a three-month extension would be more than adequate time to complete the study. I'll finish it when I get the time."

Amtrak structural engineer Dick Cooper said that a request for an extension was submitted on the deadline. PUC official Elaine Dikemiller confirmed that PennDot has been granted an extension to March 31 and Amtrak has requested one to March 15. However, both requests were received on January 18, three weeks after Fountain had established the original deadline.

Villanova's lawyer, James Patterson, said he was unaware of any extension requests. "If any request has been filed, I should have been served a copy of it," said Patterson. "This is all news to me." The last action taken by Patterson was to write a letter to Fountain, requesting a time be set aside in early January to discuss the decision to rule the bridge and the pedestrian underpass unsafe.

Master's Programs Merit Applause

This past month, the Board of Trustees, in a quantum leap forward for Villanova's academic enrichment, gave its approval for the implementation of both a Master's of Business Administration and of Liberal Studies. Both of these moves are praiseworthy and, perhaps, are indicative of the university's "intensifying its rededication to its academic mission."

The M.B.A. program was a needed addition to the College of Commerce and Finance. Although long considered to be a top-flight undergraduate business school, Villanova's M.B.A. can only serve to improve the school's quality and reputation by attracting more distinguished faculty members and students.

The program is not without risks, however. If the graduate program is not accredited within four years, then the undergraduate program stands to lose its accreditation. Clearly, Villanova is taking quite a gamble, one which it probably would not be taking unless it planned to expend the time and resources necessary to create a commendable and reputable program.

Another risk that the University is assuming in adding the M.B.A. is that, currently, there is a glut of schools offering the degree, and Villanova could quite easily get lost in the crowd. It will be most interesting to see what the school does to separate its program from the common herd.

The Master's of Liberal Studies program is possibly even more commendable than the M.B.A., in that the recent trend in education has been towards the technical rather than the liberal arts. It is heartening to see that the University is willing to invest in an area which won't be teaching computer programming or how to build a bridge, but one focusing on the humanities and social sciences, nourishing the creative and imaginative resources of the individual.

In expanding its graduate studies, Villanova is making a laudable attempt to further improve itself academically, and we hope that the attempts prove to be successful.

Snow Removal: A Bad Situation

Even though it's a new year, some things never change.

During the semester break, we were fortunate enough to not be here at Villanova when the bulk of the snow fell. However, it is unfortunate to discover, upon our return, that most of that snow is still here, clogging the parking lots and walkways, making walking anywhere on campus a hazardous experience.

Granted, the maintenance personnel did make an attempt to clear away the snow, but couldn't they have done so before thousands of students, faculty, and staff returned for the new semester, thus packing the snow down to where it is virtually impossible to clear?

And leaving the snow to melt by itself is not a very good solution. During the day, it gets warm enough for it to partially melt, but then at night, it freezes, creating a sheet of ice even more impossible to navigate than the ankle-deep snow itself.

This problem certainly isn't a new one; every year, it seems, maintenance appears to be caught by surprise by snow falling.

Well, they shouldn't be.

It is the middle of winter, and one can expect this sort of weather to occur. In the future, there should be a little more preparation for inclement weather.

But, of course, some things never change.

Letters to the Editor

Delurey Vandalism

To the Editor:

It was fairly widely known across campus before the holidays that early in the morning of Sunday, Dec. 20, vandals stole and destroyed Christmas decorations at Delurey Hall. The criminals stole a completely decorated tree and other decorations and lights from the foyer of the building; they cut the wires of exterior lighting and pulled lights down from trees, breaking and tearing branches of mature birch trees in their criminal act. I write this letter not to treat of the anti-social and immoral nature of vandalism, but to make some observations about the non-response of the Office of Residence Life to this vandalism as it related to the dorm decoration competition.

It seems to me that the Office of Residence Life let pass an excellent opportunity to do two things — to make a forceful statement about the University's attitude regarding vandalism and, perhaps even more important, to afford the students the occasion to express their own thinking about such uncivilized activity.

Resident Assistants attending orientation last September heard a great deal about their being "role models" for the residents and about the need for their exercising a fair and consistent authority role for the common good of the dormitory. A fortiori, the Office of Residence Life has a greater responsibility in dealing with matters of a public nature, like vandalism, to represent the philosophy of the University and to do so in a public way. I think the Director should have canceled the dorm competition as a way of making a public, albeit strong, statement that the University views vandalism not only as a crime against society, but also as self-destructive because immoral. Such a cancellation might have been unpopular, but it might also have been seen by thinking students as a reasonable expression of legitimate authority, made in the hope of teaching a fundamental tenet of our society — respect for the property of others.

I think also that the campus Resident Student Association should have been consulted in this matter and asked their opinion regarding cancellation of the competition. Perhaps we might have been surprised to learn that there are students who are capable of generosity and altruism and that they would have preferred to make their own decision about cancelling the competition in order to tell the vandals that competition is least of all what the Christmas decorations are about. The experience of most faculty would agree, I believe, that the majority of students are reasonable and mature and often altruistic. This incident would have been a good opportunity for them to show their mettle, and they should have been allowed to do so. Furthermore, the competition aspect of the Christmas decorations always involved, until this year, the judging of RSA officials. Their exclusion seems to me an arrogation of their responsibliity by the Office of Residence Life.

Finally, it is a commonplace of education that a university exists to serve students. Part of our service is the inculcation of the values this University claims as its own in its Statement of Philosophy. Some of those values might well have been made real for students had the Office of Residence Life exercised its authority in the highest interests (moral-educational) of students and had students been allowed the opportunity to appropriate those values for themselves through their own decision in this matter.

Fr. John Hagen, O.S.A.
Priest-Counselor and Resident, Delurey Hall

P.L.O. Question

To The Editor:

It is nothing less than a tragedy that the proposed lecture on the P.L.O. question has been scrapped. I think it is a disgrace that a University should have so little backbone as to allow the thought of strikes or pickets to undermine the educational benefits of this type of lecture. In reality, the Director for Student Activities and the program directors are shrinking from "potential controversy" not "potential violence."

I might possibly be forced to understand the administration's response if only one side of this volatile issue were to be spoken for. However, both sides of the issue were to be addressed at this lecture. So what it boils down to is the free exchange of ideas. There should be an understood law of free expression of ideas at any university. I am surprised that this administration has so little regard for such a right. (Perhaps this is because I am only a freshman).

Sec. B, Art. 6 of the proposed Student Bill of Rights embraces this right. It reads in part: "Student organizations should have the right to invite and hear any persons of their choosing." I don't think that this is unreasonable, especially with the qualifying statement that the speakers are not necessarily endorsed or supported by the University. I am insulted that this present is carelessly disregarded in the case of the P.L.O. lecture. No administration has the right to shelter students from any issue. Yet this is exactly what this censorship has resulted in. I am amazed and appalled.

The Morris Estate

Villanova's Got It Now

By BOB COUREY

A few years ago Villanova University acquired the Morris Estate. The estate is presently being used mainly by the Augustinians and the seminarians, thus few students seem to know the vast history associated with these grounds.

The history of the Morris family in the United States began about 1683 when William Penn asked Anthony Morris to build a brewery in Philadelphia. Later, the family dealt in steel and iron and rose in wealth and prestige in the Philadelphia area.

In 1840, the Morris Estate began as the summer place of the great-grandfather of F. Bolton Morris. It consisted of approximately 100 acres. "Great grandfather built himself a house which is still standing there. Then he built houses for his three sons on the estate and these sons built houses for their sons and daughters," stated Morris.

The summer place gradually developed into a large operational farm before the turn of the century. A private railroad station and greenhouses were added to the estate. Even oysters were grown in the basement of the main house "quite successfully." Full time farm help lived on the estate and were cared for by the family. "The farmer's children even went to Villanova," added Morris.

The size of the estate changed little until Fredrick Morris started subdividing the estate in the 1930s.

About four generations of the Morris family grew up on the estate. "I like to think of it as an American compound. It was a big patriarchal system started by my great-grandfather," said Morris. Morris lived on the estate until 1965.

"The place always amazed me. It was like an ocean of stability for several generations in a time of a changing society. It seemed like it would never end. All the kids had a big devotion to the place. It was unusual to last as long as it did," reflected Morris. "I remember growing up there. The only kids around were my brother, my two sisters and two cousins to play with."

Some antagonism existed between Villanova students and the family. "My father said the students used to come over and swim in our pond by the train station and my father would sit and wait with his shotgun and rock salt," mused Morris.

The Morris family had been associated with Haverford College for years and only recently has Villanova become associated with them.

'Red' Remembered

By JACK DOODY

As Red Smith told the story, he was working on the copy desk of the St. Louis Star when the managing editor approached him and asked if he had ever worked in sports. Smith said, "No."

"Do you know anything about sports?"

"Just what the average fan knows."

"They tell me you're very good on football."

"Well, if you say so."

Then the editor said, "Are you honest? If a fight promoter offered you ten dollars, would you take it?"

Smith looked at him and said, "Ten dollars is a lot of money."

The editor shot back, "Report to the sports editor Monday."

With such characteristic honesty and insight was born the career of America's most beloved sportswriter, Walter W. (Red) Smith.

He died last week at the age of 76 in Stamford, Connecticut, recognized as the dean of his profession, holder of a 1976 Pulitzer Prize for his work as a sports columnist and honored by his alma mater, the University of Notre Dame, with a Doctor of Laws in 1968. As Dave Anderson put it in The New York Times, "More than any other sportswriter, Red Smith made sports writing important." The Times editorial saw it this way: "Red Smith was not only a great sportswriter; he was a fine writer who wrote about sports."

In reviewing the tributes penned by his peers, three qualities of his stand out above the rest: the style of his prose ("written with a rare literary elegance" said one critic referring to his columns), his wit, and his profound understanding of the simple truths of the human condition.

Although recapturing the pleasures of reading him is futile, an attempt must be made. Here is mine:

In a column on language written in an era of fixes (1952):

"For example, there is a current tendency to refer to any pack of basketball players as a team or squad. This is loose usage. Strictly speaking, a number of basketball players who are just standing bonily around with their knees sticking out are a gangle of basketball players. When they are in action, cognizant of the point spread and the significance thereof, they are a sniggle, or fix, of basketball players."

Again,

"In boxing there are three major groups — a quiescence of fighters, a venality of managers, and a dissonance of commissioners."

On the Joe Louis-Rocky Marciano fight,

"Then Rocky hit Joe a left hook and knocked him down. Then Rocky hit him another hook and knocked him out. A right to the neck followed that knocked him out of the ring, and out of the fight business."

Red Smith enjoyed the world of sports. He wrote of it with eloquence and knowledge. He also knew its limitations and was unafraid to remind others of that reality.

"There's a lot going on in the world today," he told a would-be reporter in 1978. "Go cover some of it while I go to a ball game."

Sports fans owe much to Red Smith. He drew pictures with his words, creating the fantasies we live by in our ritual worship of games. At the same time, he gently prodded our consciences, as a good moralist will, keeping a rightful perspective on the fun and games of sport and the meaning and value of human existence.

"When you go through Westminster Abbey," he once said, "you'll find that excepting for that little Poet's Corner almost all of the statues and memorials are to killers. To generals and admirals who won battles, whose specialty was human slaughter. I don't think they're such glorious heroes."

Though he wrote with extraordinary feeling for his heroes of sport, he never claimed that they and their world were untouched by the grayness of moral judgments, nor did he believe that they escaped the human comedy. As an observer of the sports world, he was, as The New York Times said, "a moralist who met all his own standards with elegance."

n Tour with Go-Go's:

olice Place Spectrum Under Arrest

y DEAN BALSAMINI

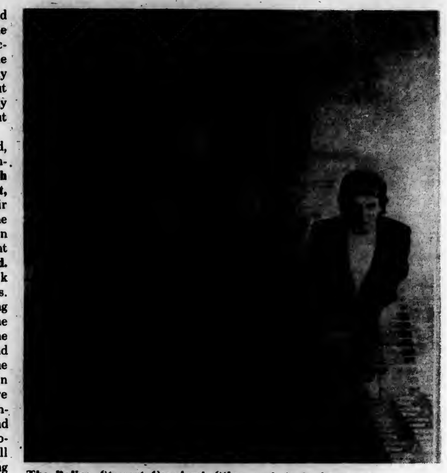
e Police and the Go-Go's made their first appearance Spectrum on Monday night.

ere's no stopping the Go-Go's, is there?

Judging by the reaction of the crowd, it surely won't be their last. In what had to be one of the best concerts in the Philadelphia area in a while (including the Stones' show), both the Police and the Go Go's mesmerized the crowd. Inside, the packed Spectrum was in a frenzied state, while outside scalpers were easily selling tickets for $25 and up. But tickets were scarce for many people were looking to buy, but few were willing to sell.

The Go-Go's, the warm-up band, had the crowd hopping and dancing to such songs as How Much More, Skidmarks On My Heart, and We Got the Beat, all off their album, Beauty and the Beat. The high point of their set was when the group performed their current hit single, Our Lips Are Sealed. The Go-Go's, an all-girl rock group, are based in Los Angeles. The group formed in 1978, coming onto the scene in the wake of the punk movement. Founded by Jane Wiedlin (guitar and vocals) and Belinda Carlisle (lead vocals), the Go-Go's are the ultimate in "cute." Clad in outfits which are reminiscent of a Frankie Avalon-Annette Funicello beach party and often singing in unison, the Go-Go's are a fun band. Only time will tell whether they become anything more than that.

The Police, on the other hand, are the band of the '80s. There can be no question of their longevity, for the Police will continue to excel. Forget punk, new wave, and the blitz movement. When the smoke clears, the Police will still be standing tall. The Police, founded by drummer Stewart Copeland, were spawned out of the punk movement in the late '70s. In fact, the Police were actually in the midst of it all. But they were different than a lot of the punks in that they combined a hard driving sound with a reggae beat. Also, the band continued to progress while punk bands, such as the Ramones, stagnated. Monday's Spectrum performance exemplified this fact. Led by Gordon Sumner, better known as Sting, the Police performed seventeen songs covering all of their four albums, with most of the attention being given to the latest release, Ghost in the Machine. Opening up with Message in a Bottle, off Regatta de Blanc, Sting exclaimed that "It's nice to be back in the City of Brotherly Love. The last time we were here was when we appeared at Grendel's Lair in 1979."



The Police, Stewart Copeland, Sting, and Andy Summers.

Sting, formerly a school teacher, showed great prowess on both the upright bass and the keyboards. His wailing voice defies description and his great range is no doubt attributed to his past opera training. In essence, he is the personification of cool. The powerful trio, which also features Stewart Copeland on drums and Andy Summers on guitar, brought along with them a horn section which helped intensify and add a new sound to the Police's already unique music.

It would be hard to recall all the highlights of the performance because there were many. Roxanne, the band's first hit off Outlandos d'Amour, was one. The two encores which featured Don't Stand So Close To Me, Can't Stand Losing You, and So Lonely were certainly others. But what stuck out in this writer's mind was the chants of "Dio! Dio! Dio!" from the crowd in response to Sting.

The Police are a band that will be around for many years to come. It will be interesting to follow them as they continue to grow and progress. If Monday's Spectrum performance is any indication of what is to come, we have a lot to look forward to.

THE WEATHER

© 1981 JAMES J. DOUGHERTY

A GAME OF STRATEGY AND CHANCE THAT CHALLENGES PLAYERS TO MATCH WITS WITH EACH OTHER AND WITH ONE OF THE MOST VARIABLE FORCES OF NATURE.

The game can be played at two levels. Everyone will enjoy playing with the basic rules and most will want to challenge the effects of Mt. St. Helens. These optional rules introduce the element of extensive volcanic eruptions into the weather patterns. This places the player into the frontiers of a climatic theory that is still being researched. It takes the player beyond the familiar climates and introduces weather patterns that may lie in the future. The challenges are increased as dramatic weather changes then become the norm.

Each game is as different and unpredictable as the weather, providing enjoyment and challenging the imagination.

Adam and Ants Continue to Charm

By STEVEN HELMETAG

Prince Charming, this year's model of "antmusic," solidifies Adam and the Ants' place in the music industry as well as the fashion industry. The album cover pictures the band in their familiar pirate gear, yet this time around there is a strong emphasis on hairdos, dimples, and make-up. In fact, the Ants could almost be mistaken for the Village People. However, there is no mistaking the distinct and innovative music of the Ants.

With the success of last year's L P, Kings of the Wild Frontier (the first Ant disc shipped to the U.S.), Adam Ant could have easily "sold-out" on this album. He did no such thing. Prince Charming, the third Adam and the Ants L P, contains ten solid tunes which are loaded with much diverse instrumentation, ranging from trumpet to vibraphone. The album exhibits just as much creativity as Kings did in rhythm and form, but has much more to offer in the areas of melodies and harmonies. The lyrics, as usual, are virtually impeccable and remain as witty as ever.

Both sides of the album begin with a flare. In Scorpios, the lead track, one is reminded of the type of music that was used for television theme songs in the sixties. Stand and Deliver starts with a trumpet call followed by the invasion of the Ant percussion line. Here, Adam asks you to "throw your safety overboard and join our (Adam's) insect nation." In other words, it's your money or your life. However, the title cut is not as harsh. Prince Charming states that "ridicule is nothing to be scared of, don't you ever stop being dandy, showing me you're handsome." By being yourself and having a good time the Ant-people will always be on your side. Ant has always had this philosophy and often performs only in halls that do not serve alcohol, claiming that it is not needed to have fun.

Throughout the album, haunting vocal chants and African sounding percussion abound. Ant is still the gallant gentleman [illegible] However, the band is now more conscientious of its appearance, claiming to be "so sick easy fashion, the clumsy [illegible] peek-a-boo roots that people th[illegible] so dashing." All the while, Ad[illegible] and the Ants continue to prod[illegible] fine music.

In fact, the Ants could almost be mistaken for the Village People. However, there is no mistaking the distinct and innovative music of the Ants.

Hoop Assistants Play Key Role

By TOM REUSCHE

It's time for Villanova basketball trivia. Question: Who are Mitch Buonaguro, Paul Cormier, and Marty Marbach? The Cat's heralded fabulous freshman? Wrong. The Cat's first three recruits for next season? Guess again. Members of the "Insurance Squad," Villanova's walk-ons who appear when the Cats have easily disposed of another victim? Nope. They are Rollie Massimino's assistant coaches, the men who receive little publicity, but make invaluable contributions to the team.

A common belief is that an assistant coach comes to work around 2:00 p.m., watches practice, logs statistics during games, and, in general, just hangs around until a head coaching job pops up. Not so — especially when you work for Rollie Massimino.

A 15 to 20-hour work day is not uncommon to Villanova's assistants. Arriving at the Field House at 7:30 each morning, a typical day might start with watching three hours of game films, followed by planning game strategy, business and recruiting mail-outs, phone calls, talking to the press, long practices, and then hopping into the car for a ride which may be five hours long to scout an opponent or a recruit at a game hundreds of miles away. All of which might bring one home at 3:00 a.m.

With five years of coaching experience at Villanova, Buonaguro has almost become Massimino's right arm. Buonaguro embodies Massimino's intense dedication and hard work. "Coach puts his heart and soul into it," explains Buonaguro. "When I see him work that hard, he motivates me to work harder."

Buonaguro is heavily involved with recruiting. "I feel my main job is to get good student-athletes to come to Villanova. Our program is at a level (nationally) where recruiting is the key."

"I get very involved," says Buonaguro. "I have a whole routine I go through before a game. I work very hard on scouting reports, and watch a lot of film. Then I chart all our offensive plays, and throw out suggestions during the game."

Perhaps Buonaguro's greatest asset is his motivational speaking. "When I was a kid," explains Buonaguro, "I enjoyed listening to motivational speakers. They really moved me. I felt I could do that, talk to kids about life, and really benefit them." All who have heard Mitch speak attest that he has a great impact on young people because of his enthusiasm.

Cormier underscores the assistant coaches' contributions. "The exposure Villanova basketball now enjoys," he comments, "is because of the hard work of past assistant coaches."

As a second-year assistant, Cormier understands the importance of total involvement. "You must be willing to give of yourself for the betterment of the program." How much does he give of himself? "Next to my family," he states, "the program is next."

Marbach personifies the word dedication. Being a part-time assistant, his financial rewards are not as great as Buonaguro's or Cormier's, but his does not deter him from giving 100.

"Marty is part-time only in title," says Cormier, "And he gives of himself as much as any-

Wildcats Set Back Irish

By MIKE HEALEY

The men's basketball team ended its four year winless drought against Notre Dame by eking out a heart-stopping 48-46 decision over the Irish at the Athletic and Convocation Center. As has been the custom for Villanova in the last few games, the contest was nip and tuck the whole way, and was not decided until late game heroics by senior Aaron Howard.

And in Coach Rollie Massimino's opinion, there couldn't have been a more appropriate hero than the steady, unsung Howard.

"I feel that Aaron's winning the game for us was poetic justice," says Massimino. "Aaron Howard was the one who Tracy Jackson shot over to beat us two years ago (70-69)," he added, "and for him to win it tonight is just great."

The game was played before the usual 11,345 enthusiastic fans in the A.C.C., a building the Cats have had little success in. Until now, that is.

The Fighting Irish pretty mucn controlled the tempo of the first half, behind the strong play of John Paxson (12 points). They led, 28-27 at the half, and had it not been for the perfect three-for-three shooting by Mike Mulquin, the Cats might have been in dire straights.

Second half played was initiated by John Pinone canning Villanova's first shot and before long, the Wildcats were up 39-33. Irish Coach Digger Phelps called successive time-outs as Villanova boosted the lead to 45-35 with six minutes left.

It was then that the fun began.

The throngs in the stands started chanting in deafening fashion. All it took was a John Paxson jumper and the place exploded.

Eddie Pinckney hit one of two foul shots for 'Nova, but Paxson struck again, bombing in two more deep jump shots. The scoreboard read: Villanova 46, Notre Dame 44.

Villanova then employed the four-corners stall successfully for one minute, but an errant Stewart Granger pass sent the ball over to Notre Dame.

The Fighting Irish stalled following a time-out and, subsequently, Bill Varner attempted a running hook shot in the lane which was snuffed by Pinckney. In the ensuing moments, Gary McLain was fouled and missed a one-and-one opportunity.

With 24 seconds left, Paxson, who ended up with 20 points, let fly with a 22-foot rainbow jumper which tickled nothing but the twine. A V.U. timeout with :06 remaining set the stage for the final act.

Granger inbounded the ball to a wide-open Aaron Howard. Howard took two dribbles to his favorite spot, the baseline, and cooly dropped in a 15-foot jump shot.

"We weren't expecting Howard to get the ball, we were expecting Pinone," Phelps later explained. "Just give him credit for making the shot."

All the credit in the world, Digger, all the credit in the world.

"Mr. Clutch," senior forward Aaron Howard hits a jumpshot with thr seconds remaining to give the Cats a 48-46 victory over Notre Dam

Young Sets World Record

While You Were Gone. . .

MEN'S TRACK

Junior sprinter Carlton Young was the Villanova men's track team's outstanding performer over the winter break. Young's 440 clocking of 46.45 was more than a meet record. According to Track and Field News, the time is the fastest ever on a flat indoor track. Young set the world record at the Eastman Invitational Track Meet at East Tennessee State University where he came back later to run a 45.6 relay leg on Villanova's victorious mile relay team.

In the same meet, the distance medley relay team won and qualified for the NCAA indoor meet. Freshmen Craig Morris and John Marshall, also members of the mile relay team, each took individual places. Morris took third in the 600-yard run and Marshall placed 2nd in the 1,000. The team participated in several meets over the vacation, which also marked Charles Jenkin's coaching debut with the Wildcats.

MEN'S SWIMMING

The Watercats suffered a crushing defeat at the hands of LaSalle Sunday in the Field House pool. The final score was 80-33 with LaSalle swimmers setting two pool records. The Cats were only able to claim one victory which was in the 400-yard freestyle relay. The relay team was made up of Bob Ackerman, Matt McKeiin, and Jack Hallihan with Dan Nies swimming anchor.

WOMEN'S TRACK

On Sunday, January 10, the women tracksters participated in the Towson Developmental Meet in Maryland. Junior Peggy Stewart took two individual first places, setting one fieldhouse record and tying another, as well as running the third leg on the winning mile relay team. Stewart captured the 60-yard hurdles in a record 8.2 seconds and won the high jump with a 5-8 jump. Jennifer Whitfield also took two individual firsts when she won the 600-yard dash and the 880-yard run. In nearly all the middle-distance and distance events the Wildcats made a clean sweep of the first three places.

Women Down St. Joe's

By JOE MARUSAK

Going into the second half of Tuesday night's game against St. Joseph's, the Villanova women boasted a 26-point lead. However, aided by a plethora of V.U. turnovers, the Hawks staged a dramatic comeback, falling short by 69-57.

As opposed to the final 20 minutes of play, the first half was a fan's delight. Main Liners Nancy Bernhardt and Lisa Ortlip treated the crowd of 750 to a fine display of passing and outside bombing. Bernhardt, the 5'-9" sophomore right guard, was unstoppable both in her ability to thread the St. Joe's defense with inside passes to Ortlip and with her deadly outside shooting. She finished the half with 16 points.

Villanova dominated the first 20 minutes right from the start. With the score tied at 2-2, Bernhardt hit two straight buckets, Ortlip put in a layup, Stephanie Vanderslice converted off a steal, Bernhardt banged in another jumper, and Ortlip layed one in, was fouled and converted the free throw. Suddenly it was 15-2.

The startled Hawks never could recover from that onslaught. Not even all-American candidate Renie Dunne could keep St. Joseph's close, asV.U held the Big Five team to a mere ten points after 11 minutes of play.

Ortlip was most instrumental in that defense, as she rejected four St. Joe's shots during the first half. More amazing was the fact that Villanova committed only one foul. At the half they maintained a comfortable 48-22 advantage.

Then came the remaining twenty minutes, in which the Cats fell apart both offensively and defensively. In the first half, their field goal percentage had been an impressive 62.5%. As the final seconds ticked away, that figure had dropped to 45.7%. On defense, they allowed St. Joe's 35 points, a marked change from earlier play.

But St. Joe's kept chipping away. From 4:00 mark on, Hawk forward Toni Cooper led an assault that saw the Philly squad outshoot V.U. 13-3. It was too late, as the Wildcats were able to hang on for the victory.

body. Marty is in a difficult position, but he gives his all."

Marbach feels his present position could land him a head coaching job in the future, "Because of the respect everywhere that Coach Massimino and his program have." However, Marbach also senses a deep responsibility to the less fortunate he encounters in his job. "Children look up to athletes and coaches, people with exposure, and I just don't think we do enough for them. If we're lucky enough to have something going for us, we should give something back to those less fortunate."

Women Speak on Discrimination

a total of 409 professors at ...ova, there are ap...imately 68 women professors, ...nly two of these women are ...rtment chairmen, according ...e latest university catalogue. ...re are two women on the ...d of Trustees and about 19 ...en serving as officers of ad...istration, including general ad...istration.

...e women administrators and ...essors here were interviewed ...ently and while they related ...e negative thoughts they ex...ssed mostly positive feelings ...erning their experiences.

...e five were asked if they had ...untered any discriminatory ...ment because they are ...ale, how they feel the ad...istration views the women ... (University) employ and if ... view themselves as role-...els for students, especially ...ale students. They were also ...ed if they believed salary ...crepancies exist between what men and women receive.

None of the women interviewed were certain if salary discrimination does exist here, but several felt it might. "I don't know, but I would like to know," said Dr. Theresa Nance, a professor in the communications department, who has worked here since 1976. "I think those of us who are hired recently are more on a parody with men, while women hired long ago might have taken longer to reach equal pay levels."

Dr. Theresa Nance Peter DiPasca Photo

According to Dean of Nursing, M. Louise Fitzpatrick, who has been here since 1978, she "does not know specifics on salaries outside of nursing, but I believe the administration has made every effort to make salaries equitable. Under the law, they have an incentive to do so. I think it is important to know not only how salaries of nursing professors compare to those of other professors on campus, but also how they compare to other nursing faculties. We do have opportunities to see data of other school's salaries — there are differences, but Villanova is trying to be competitive."

Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk is the department chairman of political science, a field she says has been predominantly male-oriented. Hopkirk said that the only serious problem she has encountered here as a woman did concern pay. "When I was first at the University, there were salary disparities and I was a victim,so I can speak for myself on that, but I do not believe that is a problem anymore." Hopkirk started working here in 1967 and admitted, "I might still suffer from the results — I didn't get back the money I might have earned in those early years; it was not retroactive."

Finally, Diana Pollard-McCauley who is on an administrative level in Social Action, said, "I can't prove it, but I have suspicions there are salary discrepancies. I do know that one time I inquired about salary discrepancy, but I was mistaken. I have heard things that make me think there are discrepancies," but, she said, there is no way to be certain.

All of the women interviewed said they view themselves as role-models within the University. "An advantage I see is that it is an opportunity to be a role-model for women students and that really feels good," said Dr. Joan Greenhouse, who was named director of counseling and career services last summer after working as the associate director since 1976. "Everybody needs role models — someone to identify with. I feel both males and females need them. It is important that women see other women developed beyond what they are."

"I have had a hard time saying 'no' to any activity because I feel a responsibility to students on campus as a role-model," said Nance. The lack of role-models on campus is something Nance views as a significant problem. Nance is one of only two black professors on campus and the only one with her doctorate, and she feels the lack of both women and minorities for students to look up to is a prob-

Fires Hit Stanford

By JAMES DeLORENZO

Three fires in Stanford Hall on ...e morning of Jan. 6 are currently ...ing investigated by the Radnor ...ownship Police and Villanova ...ecurity.

The first fire was discovered at ...0 a.m. by a Stanford resident ...istant on the third floor B-...g. A half-hour to an hour later, ...o more fires were discovered on the fifth floor C and D-wings. All three fires were extinguished by the RA's on duty at the time.

"The major damage was smoke damage to the halls and some rooms," reported Chris Janosik, director of Residence Life, "All three fires were started in plastic trash cans. We don't know how long the fires were going. The third-floor fire was discovered in progress, while everybody was asleep. A student on the fifth floor later discovered the other fires and alerted his RA."

Eight to ten students were permitted to stay in Stanford during the holiday break. These persons have been questioned about the incident, but the speculation is that a student was not responsible.

The maintenance and housekeeping staffs have started to repair the major damage.

"One fire was in close proximity to a door, which was badly charred, and the door was replaced," Janosik said. "Also, some carpeting needs to be replaced."

Maintenance started painting the charred walls, but was unable to complete the job before school resumed. The repairs are being done at no expense to the resident students.

"It's difficult to respond to fires that appear intentionally set," Janosik added, "We would hope students will be attentive and report similar, suspicious incidents quickly."

Tim Donnelly, a resident of the third floor B-wing, commented, "It's obvious someone set these fires. I'm paying to be here, to have a nice place to live, and I find out that even if I stay in, there is some nut running around setting fires so I can't be sure that if I go out, I'll come back to find my room O.K."

Mark Brunn, another resident of Stanford 3-B, added that his door was burnt and, although it was replaced, the carpeting in front of his room still needs to be replaced. He reported that the walls are only halfway repainted.

Said Brunn, "I think I'm going to get on their case. It's been a while and it's a pain in the neck to jump over the carpet hole in bare feet. My roommate feels the same way."

Snow Injures Two

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH and RICH HANNION

Recent heavy snowfalls and freezing temperatures, resulting in sheets of ice adorning the walkways of Villanova, have caused hazardous conditions on campus, producing at least two major injuries.

Dean of Commerce and Finance Alvin Clay slipped and fell on ice in the Bartley Hall parking lot Dec. 21, chipping his ankle bone and breaking his fibula.

Clay said he has been inconvenienced as a result of his fall, but said he now has "a much deeper sympathy and care for the handicapped. While not directly blaming maintenance for his fall, Clay feels the maintenance crew could do a better job.

Pat McGarry, a Villanova student, was walking from Tolentine to Mendel Jan. 25 when she slipped on the ice in front of the Chemical Engineering building. McGarry was taken by a security van to Bryn Mawr Hospital where emergency room x-rays revealed a mild concussion.

"A lot of people have fallen, but I have to hit the back of my head," lamented McGarry, resting at home after the accident. "Yesterday, I experienced a lot of pain and disorientation. Today, I feel pretty good, just achy."

The maintenance department claimed to be unaware of any serious snow or ice-related injuries to students. "There is ice everywhere. Have you seen Bryn Mawr lately?", said Thomas Trucks, head of maintenance.

According to Trucks, "The past two clean-ups were done faster and more effectively than they were in the past five years."

McGarry was asked to fill out a University infirmary report detailing the extent of her injuries. "I saw a lot of people in the emergency room," stated McGarry. "Everyone must have been falling."

McGarry's costs will be covered by her mother's health plan, but McGarry is hoping for compensation.

"I really don't know where to begin to ask," McGarry said. "It's like fighting City Hall."

Joggers

A Villanova student reported that she nearly struck three students jogging on Spring Mill Road near Mendel and Barry Halls. When she swerved to avoid the students she nearly had an accident with another car. Students jogging near the University and especially after dark should wear reflective clothing and be careful to stay off of the right-of-way.

Membership to Omicron Delta Epsilon (O.D.E.) — International Honor Society in Economics is open to all students who satisfy each of the following conditions:

1. Have taken at least 4 courses (not including Statistics) offered by the Economics Department
2. Have an overall Quality Point Average of not less than 3.0
3. Have a Quality Point Average of not less than 3.0 in courses taken in the Economics Department.

Students who wish to join the Society or wish additional information should contact Dr. Thanawala in Room 317, Bartley Hall.

Delta Delta Delta

Tri-Delta, Villanova's only national sorority will be rushing prospective members during the week of March 8-12. Posters and details will follow soon, so don't try the others, tri-Delts!!

Inter. Bus. Society

The IBS welcomes all of you back for a productive Spring Semester. We will have our first General meeting of the semester on Thursday, February 4 , at 3:00 p.m. in Bartley Hall Room 108. Special interest groups will be assigned therefore please attend. Also, summer employment and an upcoming conference on campus will be discussed. Let's all start out this semester together. See you there. Any questions or suggestions please contact Basil at 527-5816 or Box 938 Kennedy Hall.

Beta Gamma Tau

Beta Gamma Tau, the first co-ed fraternity on Villanova Campus, invites everyone, boys and girls alike, to come to their Rush meeting on Monday, February 1 at 6:30 in the Bryn Mawr Room of the Connelly Center. Find out what makes B.G.T. better!!

Bible Study

The University Christian Outreach holds an informal Bible study and Christian fellowship every Wednesday 8:00 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel. This is sponsored by Campus Ministry.

Mid-Terms

Did you ever choke on an exam and forget material you were certain you had learned? Just the fear of choking can prevent you from studying efficiently. This is not an uncommon problem and we have successfully helped many people overcome their difficulty. Best of all, it's free and easy. Come to the University Counseling Center, 106 Corr Hall.

Crew Team

Anyone interested in joining the Crew should attend tomorrow's practice in the field house at 8:00 a.m. Come dressed to work out. All are welcome, male and female.

Poetry Contest

A $1,000 grand prize will be awarded in the upcoming poetry competition sponsored by World of Poetry, a quarterly newsletter for poets.

Poems of all styles and on any subject are eligible to compete for the grand prize or for 99 other cash or merchandise awards, totaling over $10,000.

Rules and official entry forms are available from the World of Poetry, 2431 Stockton Blvd., Dept. A, Sacramento, California, 95817.

Film Buffs

"The Great Santini" is the first film of the spring semester Cultural Film Series. Shown this Sunday, January 29 at 3:30 and 7:00 p.m. and January 30 at 7:30 p.m. It is a striking and remarkably fine film detailed with insight and passion. Michael O'Keefe and Robert Duvall highlight the powerful sleeper that broke house records in New York City.

"The Great Santini" is a vibrant, alternately frightening and funny tale about a fiercely proud father and his family. The film emerges as a film of dignity, force, humor and sensitivity.

On April 22 Campus Ministry will sponsor its annual Balloon Day. For anyone interested in participating in organising the day, a meeting will be held on Monday, February 1 at 4:30 in St. Rita's Chapel. All are welcome to attend and help make this balloon day bigger than ever.

News Update .....

Renovations

The Villanova Field House is undergoing extensive renovations necessary to meet the needs for television coverage of its basketball games.

The University Budget Committee has approved the installation of a new lighting system estimated to cost $45,000 to $50,000. The new lights will be installed over the summer months. Last February's Georgetown game had to be shifted to the Palestra because the lighting was not suitable for NBC's needs.

In addition, two new scoreboards have been installed in the Field House, each costing $3,000.

Villanova recently moved televised basketball coverage to the Big East circuit. Twenty stations from Boston to Puerto Rico will carry games with potential to reach 25 percent of the United States.

Student struck

Susan Pizzi, an 18 year-old Villanova student, was struck by an automobile at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenue Thursday evening, January 21.

According to the official Radnor Township incident report, "The Radnor Fire Company was dispatched to the scene. The pedestrian was struck by a vehicle involved in an accident and was slightly injured."

Pizzi, from Sea Girt, N.J. was treated for injuries at Bryn Mawr Hospital and released.

One eyewitness who saw the accident was surprised that Pizzi wasn't hurt more seriously. "I was standing on the corner of the intersection," said the bystander.

The intersection has been the sight of numerous accidents involving Villanova students, including a three-car collision October 23.

"She appeared to be in a great deal of pain and I could see lacerations on her."

Computer

The computer problem that prevented Villanova from sending mid-term grades to student last semester is solved, according to Tom Scott, director of University computer activity.

"It was a technical problem that came up when the storage devices in the computer were changed from disc to tape," said Scott.

Throughout the semester, small batches of information were run through the computer, but when the entire program for mid-term grades was run, the system could not complete processing the grades.

Tom Scott, UCA director.

Scott commented that, "It was the first time mid-term grades were attempted to be run in a real environment." Scott added that, "The problem is solved now and the final grades went through without problems and on time."

Scott explained that the changes in the computer were caused by increased use of the computer, "Our usage has been growing. We're doing nearly all academic computing, administrative, admissions, registrar use and alumni development."

Female Discrimination

lem.

Fitzpatrick is not sure if other women on campus view her as a role-model, but said, "I hope I'm a positive role-model for faculty and deans; irrespective of gender. In doing my job and carrying out my responsibilities, that reflects positively on women. I don't have the need to pick up feminist causes," noted Fitzpatrick.

"When I first became the department chairperson, I was pleased to be selected because I was the first female department chairperson in a non-traditionally female field," said Hopkirk. "In that sense, I am a role-model for women who might want to become a chairwoman or professor."

Asked about problems she has encountered as a woman at Villanova, Hopkirk said, "I don't know what the experiences of other women are — my own experiences have been good." But, she added, "So many departments are fully-tenured and I think it is too bad the women's movement did not come along ten years sooner because there aren't any teaching positions available. Women last hired are likely to be the first to be let go if there are cuts and that is too bad."

Nance expressed a few doubts about how seriously she, as a woman, is taken saying, "I have the distinction of being one of the few women on campus and one of the few minorities, so I never know exactly what the problem is — my being a woman or being a minority.

"I think there are times when you wonder how seriously you are going to be taken. This occurs not so much in formal circles, but in informal networks around the school. Part of that is my fault because I have not become part of the faculty club and I don't tend to socialize as much as I probably should. That causes me some distance, I feel." said Nance.

Greenhouse expressed complete satisfaction with her job experiences, saying, "I feel very supported by the administration here. It doesn't feel specifically gender-related." The only problems she has encountered concern other people's surprise when they discover the director of counseling is a woman, and she said, "I find curiosity about what it is like to be a woman here."

Fitzpatrick feels that if there is a problem with discrimination at the University, "It probably is the kind that is brought up in larger society." She noted, "I think if you try to analyze every situation for discrimination you'll come up with that kind of thing. I do not feel there is any attempt to hold nursing professors back." Fitzpatrick added, "I'm not suggesting there has never been discrimination, but I can only speak for myself.

"The only times," said Hopkirk, "when I'm aware of the fact that I am a woman is on the phone or when people come into the office and are surprised. After a while, in a predominantly male area, you forget that you are a female."

McCauley, who is another of the few black women here, admitted, "I can honestly say that when I first came here I anticipated some problems with being black, but I had none. Any problems I encountered were because of age or sex.

"When I first came to meetings I was always considered my boss' secretary and that was a problem, so I always tried to be really prepared for meetings — it makes people take notice of you. As a female, one probably feels like an underdog and works harder."

McCauley said she feels a responsibility as a role-model to students, especially since there have only been two black female administrators here. "I try to watch the things I do or say so I project a positive image, mainly for the females."

McCauley, like Nance, wishes there were more of a socialization network here.

Resident Assistant
Positions Available

RESPONSIBILITIES — A Resident Assistant is a student staff member who lives in a residence hall and is available to help other students in their personal and social development. Their role is a varied and significant one involving a number of responsibilities. Some of the roles a Resident Assistant must fulfill are:

A) Community Facilitator - to help create a strong sense of community and ownership among residents on their floor.
B) Disciplinarian - to enforce rules and regulations fairly and consistently.
C) Listener - to be available and assist other students with their concerns.
D) Programmer - to plan activities which provide opportunities for social and personal growth.
E) Administrator - to help with the administrative details associated with residence hall management.

ELIGIBILITY — All undergraduate juniors and seniors, and graduate and professional school students are eligible.

COMPENSATION — Resident Assistants are generally hired for the academic year (9 months) and compensation is in the form of room and board.

THE SELECTION PROCESS — The selection process begins with informational sessions designed to explain the resident assistant job description and the application procedure. These meetings will be held during the weeks of January 18th and 25th. Applications will be distributed at these meetings and will be available from your Resident Assistant and The Office of Residence Life. Upon receipt of the completed application, interviews will be scheduled. All final appointments for the 1982-1983 year will be made from a pool of candidates who successfully complete the process.

Abortion: a Woman's Decision

A week ago today, thousands of people, including members of the Villanovans for Life, marched in Washington to protest the ninth anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, which for the first time permitted legal abortions to be performed in all the states.

In its historic 1973 ruling, the Court held that all women are guaranteed the unregulated right to an abortion during the first trimester of pregnancy, usually defined as the first 13 weeks from conception. During the second trimester, weeks 13-24, state regulations "reasonably related to a maternal health" are permissible. Once the fetus reaches viability, the capability of life outside the womb, a woman can only obtain an abortion when her health or life is threatened.

The decision had a dramatic impact. Previously, if a woman desired to terminate her pregnancy, her only recourse was to have an expensive, foreign abortion, unaffordable to most, or resort to having the abortion performed by a back-alley butcher armed with little more than a coat hanger. In the year following the Court's ruling, abortion-related deaths dropped by 40 percent. Clearly, permitting abortions to be performed in the relative safety of a modern, well-equipped hospital or clinic proved beneficial to millions of women, not as a new means of contraception, but as an alternative to bearing a child who would be neither wanted nor loved.

National opposition to legal abortion has been fierce and emotional. In both the House and the Senate, various proposed bills and amendments have been offered in response to pressure from "pro-life" groups which would outlaw or severely limit a woman's right to have an abortion. Abortion opponents have already been successful in stopping federal funding for abortions, except when the mother's life would be endangered by completing the pregnancy.

In individual states, there has also been tremendous antagonism and protest regarding legalized abortions. Just a few weeks ago, for instance, Pennsylvania Governor Richard Thornburgh vetoed a bill co-sponsored by Havertown State Representative Stephen Freind which would have, according to both proponents and opponents, made it "harder to get an abortion in Pennsylvania than anywhere else in the country." The bill was not designed with any other intent than to under-cut the Roe v. Wade opinion; had the bill been signed, women seeking abortions would have been required, among other things, to be subjected to looking at photographs of fetuses in various stages of development prior to the operation, and women under 18 would have needed parental consent to obtain an abortion. Thornburgh exercised admirable and wise restraint in rejecting the measure.

What "pro-life" advocates are attempting to do through different legislative efforts is impose their particular religious beliefs on the entire female population, thus limiting others' freedom of choice. This is the key issue. The courts have not been advocating abortion, but have been upholding the right of the individual to make personal moral judgment in accordance with her own beliefs. As U.S. District Judge Jon O. Newman wrote in 1972 on the moral certainty of abortion opponents: "(It) must remain a personal judgment, one that they may follow in their personal lives and seek to persuade others to follow, but a judgment they may not impose upon others by force of law."

Ice Follies

Dear Editor:

Attention all winter sportsmen! Villanova University in cooperation with National Sports would like to invite you to their new winter wonderland — the Villanova Ski and Skating Resort. Located on Villanova's exclusive Main Line campus, this resort has one of the largest skating rinks in the nation: the Lancaster Pike Parking Lot and Demolition Derby Stadium. Our hundreds of challenging trails made from the best pedestrian walkways are free from the normal skiing obstacles of salt and snow shovellers and include many student obstacles. Our prices are as inexpensive as a parking sticker because we have so much student funding to maintain the immaculate condition of our slopes. If you act now before the spring thaw, a free Tolentine sauna and pass to the St. Mary's Tunnel and Swimming Complex will be included. Rush out today and join the fun, but watch your step!

Dormitory Improvements

To the Editor:

During the Christmas recess many Villanova students and their parents received a publication called PROCESS from the Student Life Office. The paper speaks about "improvements completed over the summer and early Fall in our Residence Halls."

I am a resident of Delurey Hall and I wonder where the "new fire alarm system," supposedly installed in our dorm, is located. Since the beginning of this year, and even for part of last year, Delurey has been without a working fire Alarm system. I feel this matter should be brought into the open so that students and parents may know that "you can't believe everything you read."

It is true that workmen have started to re-wire the system because only one bell out of eight worked, but around mid-November the workers left and have not been seen again. They left wires hanging from the ceiling, as can be seen on the third floor, and ladders in the hallways.

Living in a dorm without a fire alarm system is evidently very dangerous. If we ever had a fire, as St. Mary's did, the residents of Delurey would never know because there would be no warning. I would greatly appreciate it if the Office of Student Life would remedy our potentially dissatrous situation by doing what should have been done a long time ago, that is, finish installing our fire alarm system.

"Fat Cats"

Dear Editor:

A new year, a new semester, resolutions adopted, a clean slate, but will things really change? Residents will still complain about dormitory life and conditions. A lack of cohesiveness will continue to exist in the student body. Scheduling problems, rising costs, and poor communication will be just as predictable as the "pit's" menu. The power to change Villanova is in the hands of the Board of Trustees, not the teachers' hands, and definitely not in the students' hands.

Through this hierarchy we learn to adjust unquestioningly. Our freedom of thought is shifted into very narrow limits which have been prescribed for us.

Learning, for which Villanova has proclaimed intensified rededication, is something that cannot be done to you. A school needs to have the freedom to establish its own direction.

The Board at Villanova by its very nature is aloof, stirs up nothing but discontent, and settles into an apathetic attitude shar by both students and faculty.

If we would put more power i the hands of the persons direct involved with the learning proce we would breed a good sens diversity, something healthy for as individuals and as a society

The argument can be made th not just trustees govern Villanov but faculty and even students fr each designated college.

I've seen them in action a have discussed issues with a nu ber of senators. Working hard, t senators still must contend wi what seems to be a push-sh match of trite phrases issued complacent, conservative, we fed, well-dressed men.

Oh, but that's democra parliamentary procedure, and i cannot understand that and wo with it, then I am at a disa vantage. The problem is that I u derstand, and that's my bigg complaint. I see too much in t hands of the fat cats and n enough in that of the faculty a students.

Just as the government may getting too large, too impersona maybe too much power rests in t hands of the Board of Trustee

Filter some responsibility, so authority into the hands of t students, for it is us whom y mold into nothing but figuratio of yourselves.

I am not trying to preach radical idea but a conservati ideal originating at the grass-ro level. We will have a strong nati when it is made up of a stro family-oriented society, just as believe we will have a fine, accom plished school when we have strong, cohesive community.

What needs to be remember is that Villanova needs student they are the only future it h

Sidewalks

Dear Editor:

The icy walkways on campus, Jan. 25, were an extreme hazard for all pedestrians. Many people slid and/or fell on the slick surfaces. This was no surprise considering the condition of the paths. However, it was a shock that the walks were not cleared, salted or cindered, under the circumstances.

The weather that created the ice came over the weekend, and not on Monday morning, Jan. 25. Ample time to clear the walks appears to have been present. Therefore, why were they untended?

Sincerely,
Sharon Winters

Security Complaint

Dear Editor:

Within the past week we have been distrubed by two annoying problems here at Villanova. The first concerns the main security gate, located near Bartley Hall, and the second is the lack of snow and ice removal from one end of the campus to the other.

Let us first address the difficulty with security on the east side of campus. Friday night we, along with several O'Dwyer residents, returned my car to campus. We requested permission to enter campus and drive to our dorm due to both the lateness of the hour and heavy snowfall. The guard denied our request, stating that "No one can drive to the west end of campus after 11:00 on the weekend." This may well be, but we watched the car ahead of us drive through the electric gate. What criterion is used to decide who is and is not to enter campus? Student I.D. is never asked for and does not seem to be necessary.

It is understandable that the room does not exist for all students to park their cars on campus. Realizing this we requested a van to drive us to O'Dwyer from the visitor's lot. Again, the guard explicitly stated the van does not run after 11:00 on weekends. This we could not understand. What exactly is the main goal of the security system here at Villanova? Students walking alone, late at night along Lancaster from the main lot to West Campus do not seem to be safe and is certainly not in the interest of their well-being. The van, supposedly a service for the students paid for by our tuition, is not available when most needed, i.e., during late hours and in bad weather.

To further illustrate this absurd system, two male visitors from William and Mary requested admittance to O'Dwyer after visitation hours. Not only were they permitted to drive through campus, but the guard gave them directions to the dorm as well. Girls are not allowed to drive to their own room but strangers are allowed through the gate without question or reason. It seems to us that the priority of security should be to secure or protect the campus and avoid the ridiculous denials of the proper requests park on campus.

In addition, while we have pen to paper, we believe it's important to question the activities that maintenance is "supposed" to perform. Is it not one of their duties to remove the snow and ice around campus? If so, then someone has missed his job, for the entire path leading from the main chapel down to Simpson, O'Dwyer and the infirmary is covered in a solid sheet of ice, as are the pathways to Mendel, both parking lots, the stairs leading to the small lots, and practically everywhere else. These areas of frequent use have not even been salted and they have become hazardous to students and faculty alike.

Maybe if the snow is removed when it falls — or soon after — maintenance wouldn't have to work hours overtime to clear the mess. Does someone have to get seriously hurt before the campus can be normally maintained?

Registrar Complaint

To the Editor:

This letter is about the responsiveness of University personnel to student problems.

When I received my report card for last semester, a course which I had taken was omitted. I immediately telephoned the Registrar's office to inquire about the situation. I was told that they would "take care of it." Since the credits are essential for my graduation, I visited the Registrar's office two times since to make sure my grade was officially recorded.

On my last visit, they notified me that they could not investigate the situation for two weeks, long after the drop and add period. I was worried about the possibility that Villanova would somehow not recognize the course, and it would be too late to enroll in another course.

I then went to Dean Clay's office to see if they could look into it for me. Two of his office workers looked into my records and found I was officially registered. They immediately telephoned the Registrar for me and settled the problem.

I realize that my predicament was nothing extraordinary, but I feel that the difference in attitudes between the two offices is noteworthy. Perhaps if every office could be as responsive as that of Dean Clay's, a student's four years at Villanova might not be so aggravating.

Sincerely,
Robert Bartos

Football

To the Editor:

Many of us witnessed the performance, "Hope for Football" at the Academy of Music. The emcee of the show, Al Meltzer from Channel 10 sports, began by giving some good and bad news. Meltzer said, "I have a partial score — Villanova nothing. That's the bad news — the good news is that it is only the first quarter."

For the first time in a while a majority of people connected with Villanova seem to be unified in a particular effort — that effort is to bring back football to the Villanova campus.

Realistically, when one views the situation, immediate confusion must set in. We were told by the University that the football program was losing money. We were never apprised of exactly how much money was actually being lost. After the Board of Trustees meeting where football was dropped, rumors began to surface that many Trustees had not been present. Then in July, by almost a unanimous vote, the Board of Trustees reaffirmed its earlier decision, this time by a 20 to 1 vote.

The Committee to Restore Division I-A football to Villanova was formed. This committee basically said that if money was the major reason for the dropping of football, then they would raise enough to cover the losses.

Father President Driscoll at the press conference when football was dropped said, "Villanova's planning for the 1980s calls for an intensified rededication to its academic mission as a private, church-related university of the first order. The Board feels that the University cannot, in good conscience, do other than re-evaluate its priorities when a third of the buildings on campus require renovation. . ."

Have we seen any real improvements on this campus or is this just more of the typical Villanova rhetoric that we have all become used to and have accepted?

Are the members of the Board of Trustees blind to the requests of the majority of the students and the alumni? I ask you all — Have you seen any improvements at Villanova this semester?

P.L.O. Question

To the Editor:

It is saddening to read of Miss McShea's moral outrage stemming from what she feels can be termed "nothing less than a tragedy" that an official representative of the P.L.O. was not given an airing of opposing views at the University.

The P.L.O. is seen as the representative body of this underrepresented people who are left homeless by the victimization of an antagonistic Israeli government.

What is distressing is that there are hundreds of thousands of Palestinians who are displaced victims who deserve the right to live in an area free from the abhorrant conditions they are forced to live in. The Israeli government must recognize that the Palestinian people have a right to live as such, but the Arab countries themselves are undermining this because of their animosity towards Israel. These same countries expressed no desire to establish a Palestinian homeland prior to 1967.

King Hussein of Jordan in 1971 expelled tens of thousands of Palestinians from Jordan. President Assad of the ruling Baath party of Syria does not want any progress on the autonomy talks. His troops in Lebanon assure that any movement by Palestinians towards peace is thwarted and any actions which hurt Israel are sanctioned. Colonel Quaddafy of Libya avowedly believes that under any circumstance there should be no peace with Israel. His bankrolling of terrorism is designed to insure that the Palestinians do not deviate from this policy. The Soviet Union fears that if Palestinian autonomy is achieved its interest in the region will decline. The P.L.O. threatens the lives of Palestinians who participate in the autonomy talks. The P.L.O.'s many factions rebel against Mr. Arafat whenever he makes statements they deem to be a peaceable gesture towards Israel. Palestine includes more than the West Bank.

The above paragraph is only part of the complexity of this troubled region, one devoid of attention by the international community. Due to this there will be continual rejection of U.N. resolution 242 and the P.L.O. will continue to adhere to its professed decire to destroy Israel. "It is nothing less than a tragedy" that the Palestinian people will continue to be the pawns of brutal political manipulation and this tragedy will continue to be viewed as solely an Arab-Israeli conflict.

Heyerdahl In CHI

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Noted anthropologist and ocean explorer Thor Heyerdahl is one of three new members to join the Advisory Board of Villanova's Common Heritage Institute (CHI), an organization concerned with ocean law and the reform of the United Nations.

Notre Dame President Theodore Hesburgh and Aurelio Peccei, a prominent Italian business executive, are the other two new members to join the fourteen year-old institute headed by Dr. John Logue of the political science department.

Thor Hyderal and Dr. Logue

Heyerdahl first came to prominence in 1947 after sailing his raft Kon Tiki 4,300 miles from Peru to Easter Island in the mid-Pacific to test his theory that ancient people could and did take long sea voyages.

Heyerdahl, whose documentary film of the adventure won an Academy Award, has also published thirteen books, including Kon Tiki, Ra and Tigris, all detailing his raft voyages.

At a recent CHI reception given in his honor, Heyerdahl explained that he will be a "travelling ambassador" for the organization. "There are a number of items on this planet which no nation can claim ... one of them is the air which is blowing across the border. Another is the ocean which is on the move, like the air, all the time."

At the reception, Heyerdahl emphasized the important role of the ocean in the food chain and in the production of oxygen. "There is something we can all share," said Heyerdahl. "We must find a way of organizing it ... we can all benefit from it."

According to Logue, Heyerdahl, an old friend, is concerned with more than the ocean. "The world knows of Thor Heyerdahl's devotion to peace and a healthy environment. What is not as well known is his committment to building a more effective United Nations."

Heaburg, now in his thirtieth year as Notre Dame's president, has served on a number of organizations, including a tenure as Chairman of the Rockefeller Foundation and of the U.S. Commission on Human Rights.

Peccei was vice-chairman of Olivetti and Company. He is also founder of the Club of Rome, whose first book, The Limits of Growth, considers the possible exhaustion of natural resources.

VFL Demonstrates in Washington, D.C.

By KIM RUSHTON

Twenty-one members of Villanovans for Life (VFL) attended the annual "March for Life" in Washington, D.C. The march was sponsored by the National Right to Life Committee, and police estimated the crowd at 25,000.

The march is held each year on January 22 to protest the anniversary of the historic 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion in some cases.

Tom Delegatto, president of VFL, said the organization feels it is "their responsibility to go to the march."

The theme of the march this year was "Stick with Life Principles" reflecting the recent unity of pro-lifers towards the successful passage of an amendment designed to outlaw abortion.

There was previous disagreement on the "wording" of an amendment to be endorsed by prolifers, according to Janet Horsell, head of education of VFL.

At a church several blocks away, organizations supporting free choice in abortion held a inter-denominational religious service.

"Government has the responsibility to opt on the side of life for the unborn on those rare occasions where the mother's life is in danger," said President Reagan in a message delivered to an anti-abortion rally on the Mall. The message was read by Richard S. Schweiker, secretary of health and human services.

Nellie Grey, President of March for Life, Inc., and other anti-abortion leaders met with Reagan at the White House before the Mall rally. She called the session "very positive" but Reagan made no commitment.

The Senate judiciary committee is expected to vote in the next month on a proposed Constitutional amendment sponsored by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R., Utah). It would let states restrict abortion to a far greater degree than the 1973 Supreme Court decision.

Horsell said, "There were people from as far as Alaska and California, and I felt it was very impressive.

"The march was neat because you meet many new people, and you are all there for the same reason."

Horsell added that people on both sides of the abortion issue who are not aware of all the facts are "not able to properly defend their position, and that is a shame."

"You feel you are doing more than a usual extra-curricular activity because you are involved in a mass effort. When you see 25,000 people, you feel you are fighting for something worthwhile, and feel encouraged to continue," commented Delegatto.

Profs Turn Pro Over-night

By SUSAN WILMARTH

Have you ever wondered what professors do with their spare time? The possibilities are endless, but for Dr. John Doody and Dr. John Stehle, the answer was in the theater.

Doody, an assistant professor of philosophy and director of the honors program, will be appearing in "Death of a Salesman," when it is performed February 10-13 and 17-20 at Vasey Theater. Stehle, an assistant economics professor, who recently earned his doctorate, will appear in Vasey's production of "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying," on March 10-13, 17-20, and 24-27.

Both Doody and Stehle have had previous theater experience, although Stehle "enjoyed only a short career playing in Gilbert and Sullivan plays, as a youngster." Doody's theatrical experience is a little more extensive. His acting "career" began with a walk on part in Summer Shakespeare, seven years ago. Last spring, he played Ring Lardner, a sports writer, in "Say It Ain't So, Joe," a Rosemont Workshop production. Doody enjoyed that role because it complemented his avid interest in sports, and he is very enthusiastic about his current role. He confessed, "now that I've got a speaking part, I'm hooked." Doody's interest in acting led him to take an acting course here at Villanova, and now he's sure "he wants to stick with it."

Stehle's interest in theater is a little baffling. He considers "theater to be a logical extension of economic theory. If you want to know why," he continued, "you have to see the play." Terry Femiano, who directs Stehle in "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying," laughed when she heard Stehle's comment and explained that it was an example of Stehle's "sense of irony."

Stehle's "tongue in cheek humor," as Femiano called it, was one of the reasons she choose him for the part. "How To Succeed..." is a satire on the business world, so Stehle's economics background and talent for irony allow him to "fit well into the part." Femiano continued by pointing out that Stehle is "a good singer, a good dancer, looks right for the part, and is very interested," all factors which led to her choice.

Stehle plays Peterson, a young junior executive in World Wide Wicket Company, who secretly wants to take over the company, but doesn't know how. Stehle claims that his character's problem is that he does "too much thinking and not enough talking."

Doody confessed that his interest in theater is based on the fact that he's "always been a ham." He further explained that his "experience with acting" and the fact that he "knows a lot of people in the theater department," made him interested in "Death Of A Salesman."

Lon Winston, the director of "Death Of A Salesman," "recognized his (Doody's) interest, knew of his previous acting experience and lessons, and wanted him to have the opportunity."

Doody plays Howard Wagner, the man who fires Willy Loman. Doody "loves the part, even though I play the heavy. Some people claim that it is type casting." Whether that is true or not, Winston "felt that John was right for the part. He looked right and was the right age." Winston continued to say that the whole picture fit together visually. Whatever the reasons, Doody is enthusiastic about the part and acting in general. So much so, that he declared, "when I grow up, I want to be a star."

Both Femiano and Winston are glad that faculty members are taking part in the plays at Vasey. Winston especially likes the idea of being able to work with a colleague on campus. Femiano thinks "it's wonderful that he's (Stehle) doing the part, especially since he's an economics professor." Femiano was quick to point out that "the teaching world and the acting world are very separate. When performing, we are all in a different world than academics."

And, if anyone was worried that Stehle's teaching might slip because of the demands of the theater, Femiano gave her assurance that Stehle "reads economic texts during break."

That's Funny?

By J. HART

They said, "Write a humorous essay on the cold weather." Well, I'll tell you, that is not such an easy thing to do. After all, this weather is not so funny.

Think about the preparation we take each morning before stepping out into Jack's frost.

Thermal T-shirt, long johns, tube socks, Grandma's hand-knitted quarter-inch thick wool socks, turtleneck, shirt, shirt, sweater, Grandma's hand-knitted half-inch thick sweater (that's too big), sweatshirt, jeans, chinos, boots (big, big boots), down vest, down jacket, Grandma's hand-knitted three quarter-inch thick muffler (Grandmas never call them scarves), gloves, Grandma's hand-knitted inch thick mittens, earmuffs and Grandma's hand-knitted two-inch thick stocking cap with multi-colored tassel.

By the time you get all of that on, you're an hour late for a 50 minute class, and there's nothing funny about that.

Looking more like a igloo than an Eskimo, you trudge across campus, sweating off five pounds on the way from the Connelly Center to the bookstore, and slide on to class.

Class is probably in Tolentine, with an average room temperature of 106 degrees. So it takes you the first 25 minutes of class to get down to one layer of clothing, and the second 25 minutes to put it all back on again. And there's nothing funny about that.

What about slush? What's so funny about slush? Walking through slush is about as much fun as walking barefoot through fresh dog doo.

It is not that fun.

Let's face it, sub-zero temperatures are no laughing matter. And I'm supposed to write a humorous essay about them? Now that's funny?

So what am I supposed to write about? Am I supposed to write about my car that doesn't warm up and start giving off heat until I'm already in the parking lot? That's funny?

Am I supposed to write about the enigma of modern medicine, the common cold. Agony is funny?

Speaking of the common cold, I'd like to mention those commercials you see on TV. The ones where a man comes home through a raging blizzard with cold capsules for his aching, feverish wife and she says, "You should have gotten me the one that cures sniffles, sneezes, stuffy noses, coughing, sore throat, lumbago, diarrhea and water-on-the-knee so I can rest." And the guy rushes right out into the storm to get it.

What is he, a loon? The end of the commercial comes, and she's sleeping fine, but he's contracted double-pneumonia and has to spend $2000 in hospital bills, as well as the $2.79 it cost him for her cough syrup.

I'm sorry, that is not funny.

To me, nothing about winter is funny. And yet I'm supposed to write a humorous essay on it. Sorry. Try me again in the spring. Maybe I'll be in a better mood.

Summer Program In Italy

For the eleventh consecutive summer, Villanova University and Rosemont College are jointly sponsoring a month-long travel and study program in Italy. For the month of June, students will live in the town of Siena, near Florence, and take courses in history, art history, Italian language and literature, and studio art. They will visit Florence frequently, as well as Ravenna, Padua, Perugia, Assisi, and Monte Oliveto. There will be two days in Venice, and two in Rome, where additional lectures, gallery tours and sightseeing will be conducted. Also planned is a trip to the medieval hilltop cities of Tuscany, where urban civilization first emerged out of the somber gloom of the dark ages.

"Tuscany has been the focal point of civilization since prehistoric times," says Dr. George Radan, director of the program. "The larger cities, such as Florence and Siena, as well as the hilltowns of Tuscany, have an uninterrupted artistic tradition which continues to our day. This is probably the best part of the world," Dr. Radan continues, "for understanding the important role which the arts have played in the development of civilization."

The program is open to college, pre-college, and non-matriculating students and adults for college credit or just for the sheer fun of it. Up to six semester credits are offered for the month of study. In past years participants have come from a wide variety of colleges, geographical locations, and academic backgrounds. One year several students won prizes in a local art show, much to the amazement of the Italian students. An exhibit of the artwork produced by last year's participants will be held in the Villanova art gallery in the Connelly Center from January 25 to 29, 1982, with an information reception and slide presentation on Friday, January 29.

Courses given are: history of Italian cities; art history (the Italian Renaissance); Italian language — conversational, basic Italian, Dante in Italian or in translation; studio art — watercolor and drawing in an inspiring countryside and exciting townscape. The Renaissance is a natural focal point for the coursework, but living and studying in Italy provides a total kind of experience; a special opportunity to learn, absorb, and enjoy Italy's many facets, the warmth and beauty of its people, its history, and its culture.

Courses are taught in English by members of the Villanova and Rosemont faculties. Professor George Radan, chairman of the department of art and art history at Villanova is an archaeologist and art historian who has spent many summers directing excavations at sites in Italy, and who has studied Italian art and culture for many years. He is the director of the 1982 program leaving the United States on May 29. The program came into existence 11 years ago and has since acquired a national and international reputation for excellence.

The 1982 price will be $1,211. Airfare is additional at a low group rate. Participants can spend additional time in Europe after the program ends. The cost includes three meals a day in Siena, which the headquarters for the program, all transportation and transfers in Italy, all hotels on the overnight trips and in Siena, and tuition for 6 credits. (The only meals provided on the side-trips to Florence, Venice, Rome, etc. are continental breakfast.)

Inquiries should be directed to Prof. George Radan, department of art and art history, Villanova University, Villanova, PA 19085, or call 215-645-4610. Deadline for applications is February 15, 1982.

You Bet Your Life

By CAROL WARKOCZEWSKI

Are you a habitual chain smoker? Do you bite your nails down to the nitty-gritty . . . even when there is no nail left to nibble on? Is a snack break planned every hour, even though your stomach is crying that it's full? Does acne vulgaris (technical terminology for "zit") strike when you least expect it? Did you ever experience stress? We all do. The above examples are a few ways that stress manifests itself in our lives.

What exactly is stress? Stress is a term that has been used in so many confusing ways that it seems useful to begin by stating clearly what stress is. Stress is the non-specific response of the body to any demand, whether it is caused by or results in pleasant (a date) or unpleasant (final exams) conditions. Whether a stressful situation is a threat or a challenge, or perhaps both, it is largely a matter of individual perception.

You may be wondering, is stress bad for us? Not at all. In fact, it is necessary for the development of normal adaptive behavior. All stress that we experience, whether

Lounge Redone

By MARISA BOLINSKI

Vandalism causes many problems and costs people money and inconvenience. Sheehan Lounge, located in the basement of Sheehan Hall, had been closed since the middle of last year because of vandalism. Recently, due to the efforts of concerned and enthusiastic people like RSA members, Residence Life, and Maintenance, Sheehan Lounge has been repaired and is now open for the residents of Sheehan to use for studying, relaxing, and entertaining guests.

A major concern of the Sheehan Hall RSA Members this year was to clean up and repair their lounge. Katie Scanlon was elected to be the Residence Life officer and worked diligently at getting all the residents of Sheehan Hall to sign a petition saying that they would like the lounge repaired and would do all they could in helping to make it suitable for use. Scanlon then took the petition to Chris Janosik, head of Residence Life, who spoke to the RSA members about Sheehan's specific problems. Janosik works directly with Ed Meagher and Maintenance in creating better living conditions for the students. Sheehan lounge became a number one priority on the maintenance list.

Over the Christmas holiday, the maintenance men spent time cleaning and buffing the floors, painting the walls, rearranging the salvageable furniture, repairing the light and electrical fixtures and putting up tables. The lounge is small for the approximately 400 girls it services,but is now open for the students to use.

The resident assistants and security guards will be making periodic checks on the lounge. The girls who live in Sheehan Hall are very enthusiastic about finally having the lounge repaired. The RSA is now considering ways to get a television set for use in the lounge.

E-Systems continues the tradition of the world's great problem solvers.

Even given the benefit of historical perspective, it is difficult to fully comprehend the enormous contributions to man's knowledge made by Sir Isaac Newton. His Philosophiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica is termed by many authorities to be one of the most important single works in the history of modern science. His studies of light are the foundation of physical optics and his laws of motion provided a quantitative description of all principal phenomena in our solar system.

Today, scientists and engineers at E-Systems employ Newtonian principles to develop products and systems for satellite communications, exploring space and the development of solar energy, systems which are the first-of-a-kind.

E-Systems engineers are recognized worldwide for their ability to solve problems in the areas of antennas, communications, data acquisition, processing, storage and retrieval systems and other systems applications for intelligence and reconnaissance.

For a reprint of the Newton illustration and information on career opportunities with E-Systems in Texas, Florida, Indiana, Utah and Virginia, write: Dr. Lloyd K. Lauderdale, Vice President Research and Engineering, E-Systems, Inc., Corporate Headquarters, P.O. Box 226030, Dallas, Texas 75266.

pleasant or unpleasant, demands a nonspecific behavioral response for readjustment or adaptation.

Contrary to popular opinion, we must not and cannot avoid stress entirely. We can, however, learn to modify our responses to stress and structure our environment so that we decrease unnecessary stress factors.

The better physical shape you are in, the better you handle stress, and the less likely you are to get stuck in the chronic stress pattern. Seven basic practices which may help you to feel better and combat stress include:

1. Sleeping seven to eight hours each night.
2. Eating three meals a day at regular hours with little snacking.
3. Eating breakfast every day.
4. Maintaining desirable body weight.
5. Avoiding excessive alcoholic consumption.
6. Getting regular exercise.
7. Not smoking.

Remember: "Stress is in the eye of the beholder."

CULTURAL FILM SERIES

'Chariots of Fire' Blazes On Screen

By PETER BERKERY

Of all the films recently released, Chariots of Fire stands in a class by itself. Many new releases which have promised much actually have delivered very little. However, Chariots of Fire meets up to all its expectations. The film is, quite simply, an inspiration. Producer David Puttnam, whose earlier credits include Midnight Express, does not rely on high-paid stars, elaborate special effects, or overt sex and violence to create a stunning film. Puttnam masterfully utilizes new talent and extracts brilliant performances from Ian Charleson and Ben Cross, both of whom are making their screen debuts. Even the director, Hugh Hudson, is a newcomer who is also making his film debut. Prior to Chariots of Fire, he had been involved in British television for many years.

The film is a story of the struggle, courage, determination, and ultimate triumph of two young British runners, Harold Abrahams and Eric Liddell. Chariots of Fire accounts the events leading up to their participation in the 1924 Olympic Games held in Paris. Ben Cross draws on his experience in British theatre and portrays a determined Harold Abrahams. Abrahams uses his running skills to improve his self-esteem and to fight anti-Semitic bigotry. Ian Charleson, a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company, portrays Eric Liddell. Liddell is the best runner in Scotland and aims to win every race for the glory of God. The acting of Cross and Charleson is superb, creating believable, humane characters whom members of the audience can easily identify with.

A major reason that the film is so moving is because of its extraordinary sense of realism. The screenplay, written by Colin Welland, is based on eye-witness accounts and letters written by the major characters themselves. The story is a true one and virtually all of the fine details in the movie remain accurate. The cinematography is extremely vivid and imaginative. The whole movie was shot on location, which adds to the beauty of the film. Most of the major characters are runners and the actors who portray these runners underwent ten weeks of intensive training. Their hard work and dedication paid off, for in the film the actors indeed appear to be great runners and their style is similar to that developed during the early, 1920's. Abrahams' coach, Sam Mussabini, played by Ian Holm, is full of the fire and determination that a great coach, regardless of the sport, always seems to have. These factors lend a natural element of warmth and beauty to the film.

Chariots of Fire may prove to be the year's best film. It moves quickly from one great scene to the next. The acting is flawless and the cinematography is excellent. Even the music is beautifully moving. Although the characters express the naivity and idealism of their age, their story is inspiring and destined to become a classic.

Eric Liddell, portrayed by Ian Charleson, collapses after winning another race.

A Not So Charming 'Prince'

By GREG ANTON

A close look at the recent trend in the film industry reveals that a new genre is emerging which focuses on the human situation in our time of moral and emotional confusion. Realism is "in" and the happy ending, if not on the decline, is certainly no longer a must. The audiences of the Seventies would not settle for anyone riding off into the sunset; however, they were thrilled to see Rocky knock down the champ and Superman turn back time to save Lois in two typically escapist box-office hits of the decade.

The hero of the ighties is of a different breed, a casualty of our modern society, steeped in depression and on or over the edge of emotional instability. Timothy Hutton portrays a character of this type in Ordinary People, as does Meryl Streep in The French Lieutenant's Woman. And now so does Treat Williams in Prince of the City. This contemporary protagonist, hardly worthy of the title "hero," struggles in the muck of our cities with the rest of us, and no one expects or desires to see him still on his feet in the fifteenth round. Yet this new hero is one who demands our empathy as we feel we can identify with the emotional state if not with the specific predicament. itself. A character of this type is Danny Ciello, the tortured protagonist of Prince of the City, the true story of a New York City narcotics detective turned informant. Although the film is stylistically imperfect, the emotional power of the actors and the harsh realism of the story make Prince of the City a worthwhile experience.

Prince of the City is the story of Danny Ciello, a New York City narcotics detective. His career has reached a crucial stage. Ciello is confused and troubled, not knowing how much longer he can continue to compromise himself in order to survive in the tumultuous jungle outside. Perhaps to make amends for the past and to bring about his personal redemption and salvation, Ciello agrees to cooperate with U.S. district attorneys and goes undercover to expose police corruption.

Ciello embarks on his investigation with much enthusiasm and vigor. However, soon his fascination, intrigue, and acute need for retribution create an obsession which threatens to destroy him. Ciello perceives himself to be the errant knight when in reality he is merely a pawn in a much bigger game. His quixotic obsession begins to dominate and control every aspect of his life. Ciello's relationships with his wife, his partners, and his family suffers irreversible damage as Ciello slowly sinks into the muck of the jungle.

The D.A.s use and abuse Ciello. Their concern with police corruption is not as noble as Ciello is led to believe. Ciello's investigation is only a means of "catching bigger fish. The attorneys will stop at nothing to achieve their goals and Ciello gets hurled into the horrifying and deadly world of extortion, racketeering, and organized crime. Soon, the futility of Ciello's actions becomes apparent. The remainder of this three hour film reveals the complex, chaotic, and often catastrophic results of Ciello's investigation.

Prince of the City is a highly intensive and intricate story. Often, the movie is extremely difficult to follow. Prince of the City suffers from a screenplay that at times is too evasive and incomprehensible. Sidney Lumet, who co-wrote the screenplay and directed the movie, deserves commendation for his bold and daring attempt to capture this intricate story on film. However, this noteworthy undertaking alone cannot carry the movie. Perhaps Mr. Lumet became so entangled and entralled in the complexities and the challenge itself that he soon lost sight of the story's direction.

A radiant power and an incessant, though exhaustive, determination exude from Treat Williams' performance, as he masterfully portrays the introspective Ciello. Prior to Prince of the City, Williams was a virtual unknown. His outstanding recreation of Berger in the movie version of Hair was overlooked due to the film's box-office failure. He also had a meager part in another movie house flop, The Eagle Has Landed. After finishing Prince of the City, Williams embarked on another film venture, The Pursuit of D.B. Cooper, a hapless film destined for inevitable failure, or at best for late night showings on a cable movie network. However, Williams' acting prowess was always evident despite poorly chosen roles in second-rate movies. Prince of the City catapulted Treat Williams from the silver screen to the Broadway stage, in the lead role in "The Pirates of Penzance," and to the cover of Newsweek.

Throughout the three hour movie, Williams is on the screen for almost the entire time. His constant presence becomes burdensome and taxing to the audience, like an albatross around one's neck. There is a dire need for emotional relief brought on by the intensity of Ciello's nightmare. However, the break comes only in the form of a brief intermission which barely allows the audience to relax and to unravel the intricate plot before being forced to re-enter Ciello's turbulent world.

Williams was not alone on the screen; rather the plot unfolded in the various relationships Ciello has with the people in his life, especially his partners, the district attorneys and his wife. Ciello's feelings about relationships are made clear by his statement," o one loves you but your partners." This provided crucial information which allowed one to understand a little of what motivated Ciello. However, his feelings towards the other characters were inconsistent and not easily comprehended. This is an idiocyncrasy of the script. It failed to present in-depth and revealing insight to how Ciello was indeed

Dimeola: An Electric Extravaganza

By GREG MIZII

Once again Al DiMeola is back on track with the release of his latest album, Electric Rendezvous. At age 27, DiMeola may well be the best guitarist in the commercial world. His accomplishments include being named to Guitar Player Magazine's very prestigious "Gallery of the Greats." His name is included with such greats as Andres Segovia, Chet Atkins, Roy Clarke, and B.B. King. The innovative Electric Rendezvous proves that DiMeola does indeed deserve this high rating.

God Bird Change, the opening track, starts out with guitars and keyboards wailing away and then breaks into an African percussion section. The song rolls back into some fantastic keyboard and guitar playing for its finale. Electric Rendezvous, the title track, starts slowly with some subtle electric guitar solos and mildly builds up into an electric extravaganza by way of screaming synthesizers and echo devices. This staccato-filled tune, similar to the tight musical arrangement of the Steely Dan hit, Reeling in the Years, makes the best use of guitar and keyboard synthesizers on the album. The song returns to a slower tempo and ends with a laid back feeling. Passion, Grace, and Fire is a complicated flamenco duet featuring DiMeola and Paco deLucia. The song is similar to Mediterranean Sundance on DiMeola's Elegant Gypsy LP. There are many changes in tempo in this piece and it ends with DiMeola and deLucia executing lightening-fast solos that sound like a war of passion between the two flamenco guitars.

Side two opens up with Crusin' which is a progressive fast moving tune in the jazz-fussion mold. The lead guitar has amazing amplified tube distortion which is similar to that of Jimi Hendrix's lead in the song Hey Joe. All types of keyboard effects are used and share lead solos with the lead guitar of DiMeola. Both keyboards and guitars change scale modes along with the rhythm of the tune adding a tasteful appeal that brightens up the song. The high rolling Black Cat Shuffle moves with an incessant repetition while guitars and keyboards share the solos with background ostinatos producing a steady state of rhythmic and harmonic backdrop similar to Pink Floyd's, Money.

The ever-changing Ritmo De la Noche starts out setting a romantic mood and builds up cataclysmically into a fast moving tune. This imaginative and tempo-changing number gently flows back into a mellow serenade. Some other cuts, such as Somalia and Jewel Inside a Dream, are basically slow-tempoed, classly oriented pieces.

The album combines p arrangements, percussion, boards, and guitars and cre some of DiMeola's best tune

Album Review:

The Great White North

By JOHN LYNCH

For you who find yourself in front of the tube late on Friday nights, Second City Television (SCTV) is a sure way to laugh yourself to sleep. The Canadian television show, which has been on the air for over six years, has just recently gained a large following.

From the hit show has come an album on Mercury records called Bob and Doug McKenzie's The Great White North. The LP contains seventeen short comic anecdotes which help piece together the point that Bob and Doug are not "hosers" (a term that is never defined) but downright losers.

Side one of the album starts with Bob and Doug giving an introduction called This is an Album, eh? Here Bob graphically explains the poor personal hygiene habits of Doug, which are much too numerous to mention here.

The following track on the album is The Beerhunter, a party game which is played in the Great White North. The game is played by putting a six pack of your favorite into a box after shaking one of the cans vigorously. Bob goes on to tell us that you take one of the cans out of the box and hold it to your head and pull the tab. If it does not explode and give you a "wet head . . . beer shampoo" then you must drink the beer. Doug confesses that he does not mind the drinking part.

The other track on side one worth mentioning is Bob and Doug's hit single, Take Off, which features Geddy Lee, the lead singer of the Canadian band, Rush. Geddy is helping the boys out because, not only is he from Canada, but he is also getting paid the whopping sum of $10. The song is quite hilarious with Geddy Lee shrieking and Bob and Doug harmonizing like two chickens being shot.

Side two is more of the same with the highlight being a skit called Ernie's Mom. Here the duo tell the trials and tribulations of their friend, Ernie. The McKenzie brothers tell of Ernie's misfortunes which lead to the demise of his character.

Rick Moreais and Dave Thomas are the voices of Bob and Doug, recreating the characters they portray on SCTV. Moreais and Thomas are both quite witty and are versatile comedians. Those who have seen Morais' imitation of Woody Allen and Thomas' Bob Hope need no other explanation or convincing. The Great White North is proof that SCTV has finally attained commercial success. Also, it just goes to show that Canadians can be funny too, eh?

Prince

affected by these characters.

An otherwise exceptional performance by Treat Williams is marred by his perpetual use of vulgarity to emphatically express his emotions. This is hardly necessary, for Williams' portrayal captures the energy and intensity of Ciello which is lacking in the script.

Prince of the City succeeds in depicting the startling realism of Ciello's story. However, the plot never defines the main character's goals and therefore by the end of the movie the audience is left feeling ambivalent, having mixed emotions regarding Ciello.

Book Review:

Good-Bye, Sleeping Beauty

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

r Madonna Kolbenschlag, read your book, Kiss Sleeping ty Good-Bye. Have you ed the little promotional on top of the cover, "At last ok that breaks the spell of ine myths"? I remember ing, "Great. She's gonna an untold number of years in 00 page tabletop psychology er." Now I know. A book undo anything. What it can change the way people think. 's what changes things. ybody who can mix Jung and and Hemingway and toyevsky and the New Testat and effectively make a point e doing so deserves to be more ly read. Your breakdown of myths of Sleeping Beauty, dilocks, Cinderella and Beauty the Beast into traditional chological and sociological es is as impressive as any rary criticism I've ever read, bably because it enables the reader to see these "fairy tales" come alive in their family and friends. Which proves your point that myth is more the story of is authors than its subject.

Actually, the language may be at times a little too technical; you probably won't captivate many readers with phrases like, "paradigm of traditional feminine socialization." But the passages that delineate the turmoil of women afraid to either hold onto or let go of something they're not even sure they want, are all at once humorous and saddening, and most importantly, they hit home.

You should expect more than a little furor over your idea of androgyny and the role you accord it in the reformation of this unsatisfactory societal arrangement, conceived according to the perceived differences between the sexes. Women won't liberate themselves by acting more like men and neither will men help by acting more like women. "Like men" and "like women" will do nothing but continue the very prejudices we need to exorcise. Although this sounds very trite, why not think in terms of "people" again?

In case you haven't guessed by now, I was afforded the luxury of enjoying this book because I am a man. It may be true that I have never been trapped by the conflicts and contradictions of society's demands on women, but I have seen the emptiness and the trauma. I have also seen the sleep. Sometimes I think men need your book more than women, other times the reverse. How do you wake up people who are comfortable where they sleep? You know what they say about waking sleepwalkers. It's supposed to be extremely dangerous.

Pennsylvania Ballet Suspends Performances

The Pennsylvania Ballet announced on January 14 thet it will temporarily suspend production for 90 to 120 days. David W. Brenner, the chairman of the ballet's board of trustees, explained that this action was taken to allow the company to focus its full attention on its fundraising campaign. The suspension will allow the company to substantially reduce its current cash obligations. Brenner noted that it had become evident that the burden of the company's ongoing operating deficit would not allow the company to continue current operations and still achieve their financial goals.

In the past few years, the combination of inflation and the reduction in available governmental grants has put a great financial burden on the company. Ticket revenues, even if all performances are sold out, cannot possibly provide all of the necessary finances so the ballet must rely heavily on contributions in order to remain solvent.

Charles Rannells, who joined the company on January 1 as president and chief executive officer, will assist and coordinate the fundraising campaign. He will be instrumental in restoring the financial stability of the company as well as maintaining its artistic strength.

The Philadelphia performances between February 11 and 21 and February 25 and March 7 will be cancelled. Subscribers who have already purchased tickets for these performances will receive credits for future performances. Although the Pennsylvania Ballet realizes that their audiences will be disappointed in not being able to attend the ballet this winter, it looks forward to resuming performances shortly.

McKee Goal: Team Camaraderie

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Along with the new school year, the fall of 1981 brought a new face to the Villanova coaching staff. Chris McKee became the new head coach for the Villanova women's swim team. His experience in coaching has developed over the past six years in which he has enjoyed various levels of coaching. McKee began coaching part time for the Hurricane Swim Club and the Epiphany School, both of Miami. Upon returning home to Delaware County, he became coach for the Nolton Summer Swim Club, leading them to the league champs' title and emerging as the best team in Delaware County, with a 26-0 record. Then, appointed as the head swim coach for Temple University, McKee became the youngest college coach in the nation. Coaching both the men's and women's teams, he sent six swimmers to nationals, one an All-American. He reversed the existing record of 5-9 to a new record of 9-5.

McKee, describing some reasons for entering college coaching said, "Coaching college swimmers adds a contrast and an interesting blend to the age-group coaching that I do in the summer. Also I like having a productive influence over a critical period in their lives. It's a chance to breed goal-oriented and positive-thinking individuals."

When asked why he came to Villanova McKee answered, "Villanova offered more opportunities in coaching, and was closer to home. The suburban school also extended a more comfortable atmosphere than that of the city."

Although the women's team had already established an impressive name over the past few years, McKee felt he could contribute to the team's future accomplishments. "My first goal in coming here wasn't to predict a record winning season nor an all time national team, but to create a close, tight-knit, team-oriented group." While coaching at Temple University before coming here, he had encountered the Villanova team many times, "I noticed that the team did lack in team camaraderie."

A former All-American, at the University of Miami, McKee has accumulated many years of swimming experience. To begin, he comes from a large family with an outstanding swimming record. Three of his five sisters have been high school M.V.P.'s, and four brothers, including himself have attended prestigious colleges on swimming scholarships. The most famous of them all was his brother Tim McKee, who was a member of the U.S. Olympic Team. McKee believes that his father was a big influence in the family's swimming, and a big instrument in his brother's accomplishments. The father himself had made the Olympic team in 1936, but the war cancelled hopes of competing. Although he had been coaching for the Suburban Swim Club for years, getting his son to the Olympics was one of his greatest accomplishments.

For McKee, his father had another important contribution; his pride in coaching and his philosophies for success. "My father always tried to ensure that we were happy swimming. He motivated us, but also made it fun. I've tried to incorporate this into my coaching, by blending light humor with hard work, in hopes of creating a positive atmosphere."

The women's swim team has been training since September. It has incorporated all types of physical conditioning, including running and the ATRA equipment. Over Christmas vacation the team traveled to the University of Miami for two weeks to engage in the most intensive training period of the season. It returned with common goals for good times and a winning season. So far the team has established a 3-2 record, with positive outlooks on the future meets.

"For the past five months the girls' efforts and improvements have been very pleasing to both assistant coach Mr. Edge and I. We're also impressed with the camaraderie and the spirit of the team. We hope to have a winning season and to finish in the top five at nationals. We'd also like to see all the individuals achieve success in their efforts," commented McKee.

nuclear energy
take on the challenge...
realize the future

The Challenge
Imagination, courage, leadership and engineering expertise of the highest order... these are the traits you need to meet the challenge of our technology. Our leadership position at the forefront of commercial nuclear power systems will provide you with unique professional experience.

The Commitment
General Public Utilities created an independent organization, GPU Nuclear, to centralize its nuclear capability and provide safer, more reliable generation of electricity with nuclear energy. GPU Nuclear has the strongest commitment to the flawless safety of our plants.

The Opportunity
GPU Nuclear is responsible for the operation of Oyster Creek Nuclear Station in New Jersey, start-up and recovery of two Three Mile Island units located in Middletown, Pennsylvania; and an off-site design and engineering group in Parsippany, New Jersey. We offer you: • Top benefits • Advanced educational opportunities and a chance to live in beautiful North Central New Jersey, the New Jersey Shore or the Pennsylvania Dutch Country.

We are seeking entry level and experienced professionals in the following categories:
■ Mechanical ■ Nuclear & Health Physics/Radiation Protection
■ Electrical ■ Chemical

For more information about job opportunities at GPU Nuclear, fill out the coupon below and send it to: J. Troebliger, P.O. Box 480, Middletown, PA 17057. We seek men and women from all ethnic backgrounds and the handicapped.

With the exception of the shor...st and the longest races, the 60-...rd dash and the two mile run, ...e Cats have high caliber com...etitors in every event. The rest of ...e indoor season, however, will be ...pent channeling that talent to ...eak at the championships.

The Cats began the meet slowly. ...urdler Rodney Wilson failed to ...ualify for the 60-yard hurdles final. "I've been off my race lately," Wilson said. "I haven't fallen into my groove yet. I didn't really feel like myself at the Meadowlands (for the Olympic Invitational) or here at the Track Classic. I hope to do better at the Dallas Track Classic next week. (Renaldo) Nehemiah will be there to push me."

Wilson did fare better later in the night, though, as he led-off for Nova's victorious mile relay team. The rest of the relay team, Carlton Young, and freshmen John Marshall and Craig Morris, had their own stories. Earlier, Young finished a disappointing fourth in the 440-yard field with a 49.51 clocking. The two freshmen, Marshall and Morris, both had memorable nights. Marshall destroyed most of the field in the 880, lowering his time from last year, when he ran as a high school senior, to 1:53.5.

"John is in a period of transition," stated Coach Charlie Jenkins. "He has to learn the strategy of running in college. He's having a good transition though. He learns very quickly."

The other rookie, Morris, led his entire leg of the Jumbo Elliott Distance Medley Relay in which the Cats finished in second place. Nova's track rival to the south, the University of Richmond, snapped up the coveted event though Villanova still holds the world, American and meet records in the distance medley relay.

In the mile run, John Hunter's time of 4:04.57 crushed a usually strong John Gregorek of Georgetown. Hunter also excelled on the winning two mile relay team with teammates Ross Donoghue, Marcus O'Sullivan and Mike England.

England was nothing short of spectacular. Having not raced in 18 months, England was ready for a comeback when he injured himself during Christmas break. "His parents bought new carpenting and he slipped on it," Jenkins related. However, England put Villanova into the early lead in the distance medley against the superior Richmond team.

"I would have liked to win my first race but (Sosthenes) Bitok (of Richmond) was great," England said. More memorable, though, was the junior single-handedly holding on in the anchor position of the two mile relay to give Nova the victory. Trouble brewed early in the event as an official confused a handoff and nearly cost Villanova the race. The cooler hands of Donoghue and O'Sullivan prevailed though, and England ran his tremendous anchor leg, beating Richmond's final man by a tenth of a second, the team-clocking 7.40.4. "Winning the two mile relay, after such a long layoff, is a nice homecoming," he said.

Rut...rs increased it to 54-45 with six minutes left, but the Wildcats weren't about to quit in front of a crowd of 1200.

Lisa Ortlip hit a field goal and Stephanie Vanderslice scored the team's next six points to bring Villanova within one point with two and a half minutes left. That was as close as Nova would get because Rutgers scored with 24 seconds to go and led by five. Time ran out on the Wildcats' bid for an upset and Rutgers upped their record to 12-2.

Bernhardt was the high scorer for Villanova with 20 points, 14 of them in the second half. Vanderslice scored 12 and grabbed ten rebounds. Ortlip was troubled by fouls and was held to eight points.

The Wildcats have two important Big Five games coming up. They'll meet Temple on Saturday, January 30, and LaSalle on Thursday, February 4th. Both games will be played at the Field House.

Ortlip Honored

Lisa Ortlip has achieved many things during her four year basketball career at Villanova, but none may be as prestigious as the honor she received this week. The co-captain of the women's team was nominated for the 1982 Wade Trophy Player of the Year Award.

This annual award honors the outstanding collegiate woman basketball player in the country. Ortlip was selected as one of the 30 final nominees, chosen from women players all over the country.

This honor has never been given to a Villanova women's player before, but then again, this has been no ordinary season for Lisa Ortlip. She is the team's leading scorer, averaging 15.9 points per game, and currently has the fourth highest field goal percentage (66.1) in the nation. She was named the Most Valuable Player in both the Big East and Dial Classic Championships, The Eastern Basketball Magazine's Player of the Week (Jan. 9).

"Except ... a few good individual performance, all in all we played very poorly. They forechecked us to death and beat us to the puck consistently."

Villanova did manage the games' first goal on a turn-around rebound shot off the stick of junior Jim Ragold. Minutes later, Delaware took advantage of a Villanova penalty and converted a passing power-play goal to tie the game at 1-1.

The only goal in the second period belonged to Delaware. The Hens once again took advantage of a Villanova penalty and converted another power-play opportunity.

Five minutes into period three, senior Tom Curran tied the game at 2-2 on a great individual rush. It was Curran's tenth goal in three games which included five goals against Elmira College and all four Cat goals against Penn State.

With only forty-five seconds left, Delaware pushed one across in a goal-mouth scramble for the 3-2 victory. Sophomore goaltender Don Clark appeared to have the puck within reach, but it slipped under his pad for the game-winner. "Don was once again outstanding," according to Probst. "He has been fantastic all season." In Villanova's 7-4 loss to Penn State, Clark kicked aside thirty-eight of State's forty-four shots kept Villanova in the game throughout.

$ecurity for Gretzky

By DEAN BALSAMINI

Picture This: The Flyers are leading the Edmonton Oilers 1-0. Wayne Gretzky is making one of his familiar last minute rushes. He jukes around Bill Barber and winds up to take one of his patented slapshots — but stops. Gretzky bends down, picks up the puck and walks off the ice mumbling "Hockey isn't fun anymore."

Earlier this month Wayne Gretzky of the Edmonton Oilers was given a 21 million dollar contract (spanning 21 years) rewarding him for his outstanding play. Gretzky, who turned 21 this past Tuesday, is the National Hockey League's premier player and probably the most gifted athlete in sports.

Last season Gretzky scored an amazing 164 points in 80 games. He was the first player in NHL history to average more than two points a game. This year Gretzky has so far amassed 136 total points and is on his way toward a seemingly impossible 200 point season. The Sporting News just named him their Man of The Year, the first time a hockey player has won the award. His accolades and achievements go on and on.

Unquestionably Gretzky deserves the money given to him, but it is the structure of the contract that bothers this writer. Gretzky is only the latest "superstar" to receive this type of long-term contract. Athletes such as Dave Winfield and Mike Schmidt have similar ones. The problem lies in that the player knows he will be around for a long time and so much money is "invested" in him. Therefore he feels he can do what he pleases when he pleases.

If you remember, Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Los Angeles Lakers was a bright young phenom who last year was rewarded with a long-term contract similar to that of Gretzky's. "Magic" delighted the fans and was the personification of enthusiasm, also like Gretzky. But earlier this year he didn't like the way Paul Westhead was coaching. "The game wasn't fun anymore. I wanted to be traded," Johnson said. Before long Westhead found out why Johnson's nickname is "Magic" as owner Jerry Buss made Westhead disappear.

In essence the question in point is How will these lifetime contracts affect the overall harmony of a team and for that matter sports? Should an athlete be able to control what happens not only on but off the field? With cable television now competing for sports coverage, how long will it be before players want a percentage of the revenue? Today's "incentive" clauses which include more money for awards and "team goals" achieved are ridiculous enough. Superstar athletes deserve as much money as they can get because they are selling a product, but not at the expense of the team or coach. Fans who spend good money to escape from life's daily problems will not take much more of this. Until the owners wake up and stop giving out these types of contracts, similar tantrums such as that of Earvin "Magic" Johnson's will continue to occur. And that Mr. Johnson, is when you will make the fans disappear.

Freshmen Boost Cats

Cats Sting La Salle

By JOE MARUSAK

His command could not have been put any simpler: "Have fun, play hard, and get some easy baskets." Rollie Massimino said those words to his Villanova men's basketball team prior to Wednesday's matchup against Big Five member LaSalle, and his players listened.

Nova had just come off two heartbreaking Big East Conference losses at the hands of Connecticut, 53-51, and Georgetown last Monday, 72-56. They were in a slump of sorts.

Then Massimino put the magic words to his squad. Too bad for the Explorers of LaSalle. The Wildcats came out roaring against the Philly team, eventually destroying the Explorers, 117-82.

After LaSalle, 8-9, dropped in the first two buckets of the game, the Cats started a blitzkrieg. Stewart Granger, exhibiting complete control over his team's offense, baffled Lefty Ervin's Explorers with uncontested drives to the hoop and key inside passes to John Pinone. The 6-8 Pinone, who reached double figures for the 18th consecutive game this season, was unstoppable inside. He ended up with 22 points — 18 in the first half.

The massacre actually began when, with 14:28 to play in the first half, Granger's driving jumper in the lane gave the Cats a 15-10 lead. Ed Pinckney followed with a baseline jumper, and Pinone made a 15-foot shot. Pinone scored Villanova's next seven points, and the slaughter was on. VU's incredible offensive display helped give the Main Liners a 58-31 halftime lead.

Second half play proved no differently. Granger, currently leading the Big East in assists (5.8 p.g.), had four early on to seal LaSalle's coffin.

Commented Massimino on his point guard's play, "Stewart had an excellent game, and was especially effective on the break. We let him go the second half (because) he has to do that in the big game."

Villanova, 14-4, opened up its biggest margin of the night, 48 points, when Mike Mulquin sank a top-of-the-key jumper with less than seven minutes remaining. In came the bench, who did well by keeping the margin of victory at 35 points. The Wildcats' 117 points broke the Big Five scoring record of 113.

At the conclusion of the game Coach Massimino seemed relieved especially after having suffered those two Big East defeats. "We knew we had to regroup," he remarked. As a result, the head coach continued, "We ran as well as we did all year." With the win Massimino chalked up his 150th victory at Villanova.

LaSalle head coach Ervin, whose team last year nipped VU in a triple overtime thriller, greatly admired Villanova's performance. "Villanova is a terrific team. They exploited all our weaknesses. They didn't do anything wrong."

MAIN LINERS: Freshman Dwayne McClain missed the entire UConn contest because of a sprained ankle, and played just four minutes against Georgetown. He was back against LaSalle and had some spectacular dunks. . . . The Wildcats take on archrival St. Joseph's this Sunday at the Palestra. Gametime is 7:30 p.m. . . . According to last week's NCAA statistics, Villanova ranks 2nd in team field goal percentage (55.9%), trailing only Cal-Irvine.

Hoyas Surge Past Nova

By LARRY GOANOS

Clutching a carton of milk in one hand and a sweat-soaked towel in the other, Georgetown Head Coach John Thompson appeared to be quite relieved as he made his way through the crowd at the postgame press conference following his Hoyas' 72-56 defeat of the Villanova Wildcats on Monday night. The win snapped Georgetown's three game losing skein, the team's longest since the 1976-77 season, and kept the Hoyas right in the thick of the Big East title chase.

"We've been playing two opponents every game — the other team and ourselves," he explained. "I couldn't figure out what was wrong so I showed the team a film of the St. John's game (a 72-42 G.U. victory) and said, 'This is the way we used to look.' I guess it worked."

If the film was indeed an inspiration for the Hoyas' triumph, they did a poor job of reenacting what they saw in the screening room during the first half. After breaking out to an early 10-2 advantage, the Hoyas were forced into several turnovers by the Wildcats, who roared back to grab a 16-12 lead at the 8:17 mark. The Cats lead was short-lived however, as they fell back into their own turnover syndrome which allowed Georgetown to cling to a 23-20 advantage as the teams headed into the locker rooms.

The second half began with the Cats closing in on Georgetown as John Pinone hit a lay-up off of his own rebound to move Villanova to within three at 27-24. Stewart Granger followed that up with a jumper from the top of the key to close the gap to one at 27-26 with 17:15 left in the game. The roof began to cave in for Villanova after that however, as the Cats could not manage to hit two consecutive baskets again for the remainder of the evening.

Thompson's Hoyas employed a swarming press on defense which was anchored in the middle by 7 foot Patrick Ewing, whose imposing presence was always apparent when Villanova had the ball. At the other end of the floor the Hoyas were led by a pair of Erics, Smith and Floyd, who combined for 35 points.

One bright spot for the Cats was the play of 6-9 Ed Pickney (12 pts. 7 rebs.) who held his own against the much-heralded Ewing. Granger canned 12 points for the Wildcats and Pinone chipped in 10 in the losing effort.

Coach Massimino, visably exhausted after Villanova's fourth game in ten days, felt that Georgetown's press hurt the Cats. "We threw the ball away three or four times on the press. They double-team well."

The Villanova-Georgetown rematch is slated for Feb. 3 when the Hoyas will play in the not-so-friendly confines of the Palestra. "It's going to be tough as hell when we go to Philadelphia," predicted Thompson. "That's the way this league is."

Watercat Team Victorious

By LAURA FORTUNATO

This past weekend the Villanova women's swim team swam a close and exciting meet against a star-studded Navy team, winning 71-69. The final efforts of Mary Maier, Kathleen Rooney, Beth Metzger and Rita Edge were the determining factor in the outcome of the meet. "The fact that the meet was a come-from-behind victory made success all the sweeter," commented Coach Chris McKee.

Navy may have a star-studded roster but it was quality of depth which enabled the Villanova team to capture the victory. Its combined efforts were very important and most of the girls recorded their season-best times.

Genny Mulderig accumulated three individual records, one in the 100-yard backstroke, the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard individual medley. The latter two were both top nationally recorded times. Joining Mulderig were Beth Metzger, Ann Vaughn, and Maier to set a new pool record for the 200-yard medley relay. Metzger also established a pool record in the 50-yard butterfly.

McKee summed up the weekend by saying with a smile, "Not only was the weekend very successful, we also had a lot of fun. These 18 beautiful women were received at the academy mess hall by a standing ovation from over a thousand midshipmen. To say the least it was a very exciting weekend."

This week's Budweiser Athlete is senior trackster John Hunter. Hunter, a native of Ireland, won the one mile run at the Philadelphia Track Classic on Friday night at the Spectrum in 4:04.67. Hunter also ran on the winning two mile relay team.

Girl Killed In Auto Accident

By CHARLES MOLINEAUX

A Rosemont College freshman was killed in an auto accident at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues early Sunday morning. Catherine Mulvaney, 18, of Sea Girt, New Jersey, died of injures sustained when she was thrown from the back seat of a Plymouth Horizon as it was struck by another car.

John Meyers, 23, was traveling west on Lancaster Avenue in a 1973 Volkswagen station wagon. He hit the Plymouth broadside when he ran a red light at the intersection, police said.

Deirdre Attridge, 18, was driving north through the intersection when her car was hit. The car was thrown into a 360-degree spin before it came to rest on the northwest corner sidewalk against a traffic light standard. The Volkswagon came to a stop 83 feet further down Lancaster Avenue.

Mulvaney was ejected from the back seat of the Plymouth and landed on the embankment on the corner, according to witnesses, 15 to 20 feet from the car. She was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital where she died at 6:30 Sunday morning.

Tom Reusche, a Villanova student, arrived at the scene shortly after the accident happened according to Reusche, he found the Plymouth lodged between two light poles on the corner. Mulvaney was lying in the snow nearby and Attridge was standing at the scene, apparently in shock. "It was like she didn't even know what was happening," said Reusche.

Myers and Attridge sustained "moderate injuries" and were also taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital, according to the Radnor police.

Sources close to Attridge said she suffered a bruised kidney and shock.

"She seems to be taking it pretty well," commented an acquaintance.

Attridge returned to classes at Rosemont on Tuesday.

Last week's student editorial, "Abortion, A Woman's Decision," has provoked reaction both within and without the University. It has been suggested that the stance taken in the editorial is inconsistent with the Mission Statement of the University. Consequently, the University's Publications Board will be convened to make a recommendation as to whether this editorial meets the guidelines established for University supported publications.

Criminal charges are being filed against Meyers for driving under the influence of alcohol, failure to stop at a red light, vehicular homicide and involuntary manslaughter. According to police, Meyers was examined for intoxication shortly after the accident and blood tests revealed a .17 per cent alcohol content.

Meyers injuries from the accident consisted of a broken nose.

"She always looked on the bright side of things and was always happy. She was always there to talk to when you needed someone," said one acquaintance.

Car Damaged by Towing

By KIM RUSHTON

A car, while being towed from St. Mary's parking lot last Monday, was severely damaged, according to owner Jonathan Lee, a resident of St. Mary's.

The 1971 Volkswagen was last used Sunday morning and left in the corner of the back parking lot of St. Mary's.

When Lee heard rumors of cars being towed from St. Mary's, he proceeded to lock the wheels as far to the right as they would go, to prevent towing.

Lee was supposed to get a main lot sticker with the help of his tennis coach, Dr. Robert Langran.

At 4:30 on Monday, Lee discovered that his car had been towed. He immediately went to security, inquired where his car was, and was told his car was at Radnor Garage, the "official towing service" of Villanova University.

When Lee went to get his car later that evening, he discovered the left tire was at a "a 60 degree" angle, and undriveable.

He was told the car had been in that condition in the lot, and they had thought it was an "abandoned car."

"I can't believe they thought my car looked abandoned," commented Lee, "It was in fine shape."

Returning to his dorm, Lee spoke to Kevin Cooke, a third year law student and an R.A. in his dorm.

Cooke told Lee to get pictures of the damages and to have the car taken to another garage.

When found at the garage taking pictures of his car, Lee was harassed. He informed workers that he had been told to have his car removed, and said he would further consult his legal services if not compensated for the damages done to his car.

After being forced off the premises, Lee and his photographer Ralph Foy proceeded to try to take pictures of the car from the outside of the garage. the workers in the garage proceeded to cover the car with a plastic cover, and taunt Lee and Foy.

When Lee consulted the security report, he found that his left tire was described as "damaged" before the towing. "There was a much greater extent of damage, not included in the report," said Lee. "For example, the front axle was ruined and would cost $400 to replace."

Cooke and Lee then asked Charles Austin Garage to remove the car from Radnor Garage. However, when Lee and Cooke returned to the garage to pay for their charges and tell them the car was being moved, they were harassed and the attendants would not give their names.

Lee paid $50, which included a $35 charge for towing, and three days of storage instead of the actual two days it was stored.

Radnor Garage called Charles Austin Garage right after Cooke and Lee left to tell them they had done no damage to the car.

Charles Austin reported to Lee that $400 was done to the axle of his car. Charles Austin said the damage could have been caused by the towing. The total expenses for the two tows was approximately $80, with an estimated $400 damage to be repaired.

Lee plans to sue the Radnor Garage in small claims court.

"I admit I was wrong to park my car at St. Mary's, but I strongly believe security could be dealing with a more responsible towing company," stated Lee.

Logue Declares Candidacy

By MICHAEL CANTWELL

Dr. John Logue, a Villanova University political science professor, will seek the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate this spring.

Logue is seeking the endorsement of the State Democratic Party to run against Sen. John Heinz (R., Pa.) which will come after a February 27 meeting of the State Democratic Committee in Harrisburg.

"The emphasis of the campaign has to be on the domestic problems and the economy," said Logue. Reagonomics is "taking from the truly needy and giving to the truly greedy." Logue expects to be a part of a referendum against the Reagan administration.

Regarding the Reagan administration's tax cuts, Logue said, "I think the tax cuts are loop holes for the oil companies." Logue believes that the government must play a strong role with big business.

Logue is a lecturer on the "law of the sea" which has as one of its concerns, off-shore drilling for oil and gas. Logue will propose a "Law of the Sea Treaty."

Logue, who is director of Villanova's Common Heritage Institute, is one of at least three Democrats interested in the Senate seat but only the second to formally announce.

Cyril Sagan, a chemistry professor at Slippery Rock College, who has announced his candidacy, and Cyril Wecht, an Allegheny County commissioner also are vying for the party's endorsement.

According to State Democratic Chairman Edward Mezvinsky, the committee meeting, which was moved up two weeks, "is eager to do it so we can field a strong ticket. The party is ready now."

Previously, Logue has been a candidate for a congressional seat in 1966 and the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination in the spring of 1980. He is the vice-chairman of the Swarthmore Bourough Democratic Committee.

Logue is a Philadelphia native and was graduated from Central High School. He holds B.A. and M.A. degrees from Yale University and a Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. Logue has taught at Notre Dame, Fordham, Yale, Haverford College, and the University of Pennsylvania. He lives with his wife and family in Swarthmore.

Second of two part series

Lack of Women Defended

By MARY ANNE GRANGER

The lack of available women and jobs for these women is the primary reason cited by Villanova University administrators and professors for the comparatively small number of women employed on campus. However, several professionals interviewed here this week believe women have made great strides at Villanova.

"We certainly have a lot more women on campus now than 15 years ago," said Dr. James Cleary, former vice-president for academic affairs. But, he added, "Fifteen years ago we were hiring quite a few faculty members — men and women. I think the attitude was the same then as it is now — do you have the credentials?"

There are currently no women professors in the college of engineering, and Cleary does not foresee any being hired in the near future. "There is the problem of competition within the industry. It goes way back — engineering was not for women's study. Then, when laws indicated that it should be balanced out, schools needed women but could not pay the salaries to recruit women engineers."

Cleary feels promotions within the University are made with no discrimination towards women. "If numbers show that more men were promoted than women, that is because more men applied for positions than women," he said.

Beverly Schorr, director of adult programs, feels women have made a lot of progress professionally at the university. "Since this administration has been in office, many good things have happened, such as the formation of this office. I think the administration is doing the best they can. Things take time."

"We've come a long way in six years. When I first came here, there was no place for adult women to go," said Schorr, who cited her office as one place women can go for support.

"When I first came on board on here, I was director of programs for women. Being a woman was helpful since I was involved with women," said Schorr, adding that she has had no problems at the university because of being a woman.

Schorr is a graduate of Villanova, and compared her college days to working here now. "When I started college here, it was rare to find a woman in college during the day. I think there have been great strides."

"There will be very little academic hiring in the future, because of decreasing enrollments, so it will be just as hard for women to get jobs now as for men," said Cleary.

Schorr would like to see a day-care center here to further assist working women with families, but realizes there is a space problem here. "I'm sure that given the right time and circumstances, the administration might consider it."

Schorr concurred with Cleary concerning the lack of women working at the university, saying, "There are so few women available to hire in non-traditional fields that everyone is bidding on women."

"I feel the administration has been most supportive to me personally and to the women. That isn't to say everything is perfect, but nothing ever is. If you go from zero to where we are today, in many ways we're ahead of other schools."

The Career Development Center is currently staffed entirely by women, with Rita Wittmer serving as acting coordinator. Wittmer feels this is a positive step, saying, "There aren't that many women in administration here. I think it's good for females to see women administrators, although counseling is a stereotypically female job."

Wittmer has not witnessed any serious discrimination here, but said, "There were times that I felt I was discriminated against because I am female and young, but it was subtle. It was more a few individuals who had personal biases rather than the university. There are still some people who call you girl."

Wittmer is also a Villanova graduate. "I think I only had three women professors the whole time

English Reception

The English department will host a reception for English majors and all students who are interested in the English major program on Thursday, Feb. 11 from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Refreshments will be served. Students will have the opportunity to meet and socialize with the faculty of the English department.

S.S. Benefits Cut

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

High school seniors dependent upon Social Security benefits will lose their government aid if they have not enrolled full-time in college by May 1.

Benefits will not be paid to students who begin attending a college, university, or other post-secondary school after April 1982.

As part of a cutback in federal spending resulting in legislation enacted in 1981, the new law defines an educational institution as an elementary or secondary school.

According to figures released by the Department of Health and Human Services in Norristown, Pa., the change will affect about 600,000 post-secondary school student beneficiaries.

Pennsylvania State University has created a special program starting March 11 to admit high school seniors that would have their benefits stopped if not officially enrolled by the May 1 deadline.

University officials said that up to 2,000 high school seniors could be "provisionally admitted" to Penn State under the unique admissions program.

"We decided to take this action because of requests for help from many high school officials," said Donald G. Dickason, Penn State dean of admissions. "It appears that a large number of young people might lose the chance to attend college if some sort of special arrangement is not made."

The change in Social Security regulations means that thousands of high school seniors in the Philadelphia area could lose benefits that average $259 monthly. These benefits have been paid to students of parents who are dead, disabled or retired. Until now, students were guaranteed the benefits until age 22.

Villanova, which attracts a large number of students from the Philadelphia area, does not plan to set up any special program for admission.

Director of Admissions secretary Mary Long said that Villanova does not plan to initiate any new programs.

"There is no plans for a special program like that," said Long. "Of course, if a student was to attend a college under its provisions for admissions, they could come here and get credit for their courses as electives and take classes here."

One area high school, Marple Newtown Senior High School in Newtown Square, has only six students who would be affected by the benefits elimination.

"It's really not a problem for this area," said Jean Grunberg, counselor for the school. "Villanova doesn't have a program for those students. Yes, of course this eliminates their chances for going to Harvard, Yale or perhaps Villanova."

Social Security benefits were first provided in 1965 with the rationale that students, 18 to 22 years of age, who attended college full-time, were as much dependent on their parents for their support as were children under 18 years of age.

It was assumed at that time that students lost a source of support when a parent became disabled or died.

"The situation today is markedly different from what it was 15 years ago," explained Karen Stellfox, Social Security district manager in Norristown. "Since that time, a number of programs have been established to provide financial assistance to college students based on their own and their family's financial condition."

Among the federally funded educational programs now available are the Basic Educational Opportunity Grants, Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants and the Guaranteed Student Loan Program.

Benefits to students who were entitled as of August 1981 and were attending post-secondary school before May 1982 will be phased out to minimize the impact on students who were dependent upon the aid.

Culture Week Coming

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Black History Month, an annual celebration and recognition of blacks and their achievements, is being sponsored by Villanova's Black Cultural Society.

The society, a cultural and social organization was founded with the purpose of enhancing student life and providing a sense of solidarity among its members.

The activities will begin Wednesday, Feb. 17 at 8 p.m. in Dougherty Hall with the Black Professional Forum. At the forum, recent graduates of Villanova will return to discuss the different personal and professional experiences minority students will encounter upon entering the job market.

On Thursday, Feb. 18, the film "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" will be shown, followed by a discussion of the film's relevance to today's students.

A "Night of Fun and Entertainment" will be featured Friday, Feb. 19 in St. Mary's Hall.

The highlight of the celebration will be the second annual Black Cultural Society Awards Luncheon to be held Saturday, Feb. 20, 1982 in the Connelly Center.

The keynote speaker will be the Honorable Robert N.C. Nix, justice, Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

The luncheon will begin at 1 p.m. in the Villanova Center Room to be followed by remarks by Nix and the presentation to the speaker of the Alumni Award.

Falvey Memorial Library is the site of special exhibits honoring black history.

During the school year, the Black Cultural Society also organizes programs for orphans, talent shows, social gatherings and sponsors Black Student Week.

Systems Inspected

By BONNIE WHALEN AND MARY PAT HENRY

As weary bones were cracking from conditions of this icy blast, heating systems throughout the country and the tri-county area were also suffering similar symptoms due to stress from the weather.

On Jan. 20, 1982, an explosion ripped through the cafeteria of the Spencer Elementary School in Oklahoma. The results of the explosion were devastating, injuring 35 people, killing five children and one teacher. The explosion was caused by a boiler malfunction — the boiler had just been inspected within hours previous to the blast.

Less than five days following the incident, an annex of Camden County Community College had an explosion in the basement of their four-story study/skills facility. Out of the 48 people that were injured, three were reported in critical condition. Kenneth Penn, chief of Camden Fire Department Battalion, said, "All we found was a lot of debris, pieces of walls and glass. There was a strange odor too, an odor I don't recall smelling before." Commenting on the cause of the explosion, Dave Aron, Camden County fire marshall stated, "We're 80 percent certain that it was either a leak from a natural gas line or a methane gas leak from a sewer line." This matter is still under investigation.

Are our heating systems at Villanova susceptible to the same problems of the aforementioned schools?

According to Radnor Township Fire Marshall Bernard Quinn, "Villanova is as prone to these problems, as any other building in the Radnor area." In harsh winter weather the elements dictate how the heating apparatus will function. "Gas leaks occur when the earth freezes and shifts, relocating gas lines which in turn cause cracking," continued Quinn. "Gas lines cannot be inspected due to their depth in the ground," according to Quinn. "Boilers are inspected yearly by the state."

According to Quinn, Villanova's safety record has been flawless. "Mr. Trucks and the Maintenance Department have been 100 percent cooperative in all matters concerning safety at Villanova."

News Update .....

Internships

Eighteen Villanova students are currently serving internships in a number of locations while earning full academic credit for their activities.

According to Dr. Al Dorley, coordinator of the Internship Program, "students are able to put to the test their professional goals and academic competency."

"Besides learning new skills, they soon discover their own abilities, and recognize they are competitive in the professional world."

A Field Preparation Workshop was held on campus Thursday and Friday, January 14 and 15 in the Connelly Center. During the four sessions of the conference, topics dealing with comparative sub-cultures (that of the student and that of the employee), assertiveness, time management and learning to recognize abilities were discussed at length.

Four former interns spoke about their experiences.

Internships this semester include job experience on Wall Street, at the Washington Post, the House Republican Research Committee, and the Smithsonian Institute.

Celebration

Reverend Edward L. Hamel, O.S.A., priest-professor in the religious studies department at Villanova, will travel to Chicago, Illinois to celebrate a special Mass of Thanksgiving on February 20, 1982 on the occasion of the 90th birthday of his mother, Mrs. Flora M. Hamel. Cheryl Seifert, graduate assistant in Villanova's English department, will also attend. She is a grandchild.

Mrs. Hamel, nee Hudon, was born February 19, 1982 to parents who had emigrated from Canada in the last quarter of the 19th century.

The 90-year-old Mrs. Hamel has 22 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. She says that there are over 400 members of the Hamel-Hudon family now living.

El Salvador

The United States plans to lend the Salvadorian government 55 million dollars in military equipment.

The $55 million shipment will be in addition to $25 million in military aid and $110 million in economic aid already scheduled for El Salvador this year. It will go through unless vetoed by the House and Senate Appropriations Committee. "There can be no mistaking that our national security interests are being challenged," Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders told a Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"The decisive battle for Central America is under way in El Salvador," explained Enders. He said the administration decided to provide the equipment to replace the U.S. supplied planes and helicopters destroyed last week in a guerilla attack outside San Salvador.

Lack of Women Defended

I was here and there were times I wished that there were more," she said. "I was raised to think the family was really important and I would have liked to see more women who were balancing careers and families."

Wittmer, familiar only with Student Life, feels promotions have been made on a fair basis in that department, citing the director of counseling services, Dr. Joan Greenhouse, as an example of women being promoted here. But, she feels, "University-wide, women are not as visible as I think they should be."

Wittmer feels she is a role-model for students, noting that the students who are seniors now were freshmen when she graduated. "I can be a role-model, someone to identify with and still command respect."

Finally, Dr. Ingeborg Ward is a professor of psychology, and the first woman to be hired in that department. Her husband is also a professor in that department. Hired in 1966, she was one of the first full-time female professors here.

"I can't say I've been the recipient of discrimination in either a positive or negative sense at any time," Ward said. "Women friends at other universities complain about subtle discrimination. I have not seen that here. There is a very professional attitude. That may have to do with my department. Things vary from place to place."

Ward has not noticed any discriminatory attitudes towards her compared to her husband. "I'm not aware that the administration thinks about people because they are men or women."

"There are more women on the staff than there used to be," Ward said. "It's possible more women are getting Ph.D's."

And, said Cleary, "Women on campus are no longer a novelty — women probably do feel more comfortable now."

Senior Speakers Selection Begun

By SHARON WINTERS

The selection process for commencement speakers has begun.

According to Christine W. Lysionek, assistant to the dean of students, "The letters will be going out, I hope, by the end of this week."

All of the speakers for graduation exercises will be graduating seniors. The "student marshals" are invited to speak on the basis of their cumulative grade point average, explained Lysionek. "Basically, a 3.5 grade average, and above, is the criteria. People with those grades are invited to speak," she continued.

After the letters are received by the potential candidates, they must submit a resume to Lysionek. The resumes should outline the candidates' participation in activities or include information about special achievements or awards associated with the University, Lysionek detailed. "Resumes will be due back on Feb. 19," she said.

The next step in the selection procedure rests with the individual colleges; because each school conducts a separate graduation ceremony. Resumes are forwarded to student speaker selection committees established by the deans of each school, said Lysionek. The committees are comprised of faculty, administration and student members.

Each committee reviews the resumes of students from their college, according to Lysionek. From this pool of candidates, certain people are selected to compete in competitive trials. "Students will be notified by March 18 if they will speak," she added.

Students prepare and develop speeches on topics of their own choosing. Speeches should be about five to seven minutes in length. Also, the material should be suitable for delivery at commencement, Lysionek explained.

The speech trials are conducted between April 1 and 16 by the respective colleges. From the trials, the committees select one speaker and one alternate for each school, with exceptions in the Arts and Sciences. In this case, Arts picks a speaker and alternate, as well as Sciences, which also chooses speakers, Lysionek clarified. Although the University College and Graduate School have a joint commencement, they both select separate student marshalls.

The final decisions will be made between April 22 and 26, depending on when the individual colleges are through with their trials, Lysionek noted.

"Last year, 96 seniors were eligible to compete," recounted Lysionek. Of the 96, 38 seniors responded with resumes and from the 38 respondents, 29 seniors were selected to speak at commencement, she related. This figure includes both the student marshals and the alternates.

E-Systems continues the tradition of the world's great problem solvers.

Unquestionably, Leonardo da Vinci possessed one of the world's great minds. Not only renowned as a painter and sculptor, da Vinci also applied his exceptional talents to the mechanics of flight, to cartography for planning military campaigns, and even astronomy.

Today, scientists and engineers at E-Systems continue the tradition by expanding the practical application of advanced technology. E-Systems uses the principles of flight mechanics as the basis for major modifications to aircraft, expands basic cartography to encompass highly sophisticated guidance and command and control systems, and has designed and built a system that greatly expands man's ability to study the universe.

That's only a small segment of the tough problems E-Systems engineers solve in the area of antennas, communications, data acquisition, processing, storage and retrieval systems and other systems applications for intelligence and reconnaissance — systems which are often the first of a kind in the world.

Drunk Driving: A Tragic Event

Scenario: It is a Saturday night. You've been to a party, perhaps to a bar, having a few drinks with some friends. Maybe you've had too much to drink, but at this point, who's counting? The party breaks up, or the bar closes, and it's time to drive home. You're in no shape to do so, but then again, nor is anyone else who you're with, so you decide to do it anyway. It's quite ridiculous to obey the speed limit or the traffic lights, because after all, it's 2 a.m. Who else would be out on the road? Suddenly, another car appears in your path, but you can't react in time to avoid the collision. The next thing you remember is the pain, and then someone's telling you that you're under arrest . . . not just for drunk driving, but for killing someone.

Sounds pretty preposterous, right? Wrong. It happened early last Sunday morning, on the corner of Ithan and Lancaster, right in front of Villanova. An 18-year-old Rosemont student, certainly too young to die, was killed by a speeding, drunk driver. The other passengers in her car were badly injured, as was the drunk driver himself. It was a tragic ending to a night of partying with friends.

Over and over again, we've heard the warnings about drinking. Yet it is an undeniable fact that most of us ignore them, and think that those horror stories only happen to other people. It's also a fact that you can't stop people from drinking if they really want to. That's up to the individual. However, you can and must stop them from driving while drunk. What happened Sunday morning, an all too common occurrence, could have been prevented had someone been concerned enough not to allow the young man to get behind the wheel of a car.

It's too late for the girl from Rosemont, and we are deeply sorry, but it's not too late to keep this from ever happening again.

A Proud Paper is Forced to Close

Last Friday, the entire Philadelphia area lost an irreplaceable part of its complex fabric. Last Friday, in the middle of the afternoon, hundreds of people were left jobless, and hundreds of thousands more were left without a major source of information. Last Friday, the Philadelphia Bulletin, after 134 years of publication, shut down its presses and closed for good.

Why did the Bulletin die? The simple answer, of course, is lack of money. The paper's circulation had declined from a high of nearly 800,000 in the late 1940s to barely half that number this past year. Ad revenues dropped drastically, as well; the Bulletin badly trailed its major competitor, the Philadelphia Inquirer, in daily ad lineage, and on Sundays, was completely wiped out. That's the economic explanation for its demise.

But money problems alone were not what killed the Bulletin; modern life itself is partially to blame.

It used to be that people, upon returning home from work each day, would sit down and read the afternoon paper. No longer. With the advent of advanced telecommunications, people no longer need to read a paper to find out what's happening in the world around them. They can just plug themselves into a little electronic box and learn of events five minutes after they occur, the events broken down into their simplest components, spoon-fed to them by a local anchor-person or a network "star." It's all so easy — no fuss, no muss, no ink on the hands, no effort required.

This seems to be the trend of our culture. Afternoon newspapers are going out of style faster than can be counted, and probably will soon become extinct. How long will it be before the morning papers start their decline? And how long after that will it be before illiteracy takes over?

Letters to the Editor

Safety Plea

Dear Editor,

All the "What if's" and "If only's" in the world won't change what happened here last weekend, but action to prevent a recurrance will.

As students it is our responsibility as adults to protect ourselves and exhibit concern for each other. Drinking and driving spell nothing but trouble. It is on this point that our plea goes out to the administration.

Don't force students to seek recreation off-campus on weekends. Whether the answer lies in the acquisition of a liquor license or in the alteration of school policy, something must be done. Ignoring the problem won't cure it.

Villanova has so much to offer us academically and spiritually, why not offer us a better chance to live? In times where the cost is often of the utmost importance, let's take a moment to remember the value of the action to be taken. Keep the students on campus — and alive.

Response

To the Editor

It was with great distress that we read the editorial in the Jan. 29 edition of the Villanovan concerning the issue of abortion. A reader may assume that the editorial contents of a newspaper represent the beliefs of the sponsoring institution. However, writers Gerald E. Arth and Anne N. Suydam have, in our opinion, violated the role of responsible journalism in their using an editorial forum to express their own personal beliefs, beliefs that are at serious variance with the beliefs of their sponsor.

Villanova is a Catholic university founded on Christian values. One of those beliefs revolves around the intrinsic value of human life . . . in all forms, shapes, sizes and ages. We feel manipulated by this editorial, deliberately in contradiction to the expressed values of the institution it represents. Provoking a fight the likes of which belong more in the arena of a secular institution.

The Villanovan is a voice of this Catholic community we call University. We think that it is time that all of us understand our implied or stated linkage with the Christian tradition. If one's beliefs are in opposition to the community that he or she represents, then the role of spokesman (which we believe is essential to the editor and advisor's role) should not be exercised or assumed.

To the Editor:

When a major editorial in the campus newspaper of a Catholic University is so incompatible with church doctrine and institutional philosophy, some serious questions must be raised about the erosion of the moral atmosphere on that campus and the people who are responsible for that morality.

Villanova, in its Mission Statement, maintains that it functions an independent institution and "in matters theological it recognizes its obligation to the Magisterium of the Church."

The members of the Executive Committee of the General Alumni Association view, with the deepest possible concern, growing evidence that morality may become a sometimes thing at Villanova.

It may be in the best interest of the university to review in depth the make-up of its religion and philosophy departments and to seek answers why representatives of a Catholic university student body would place civil rights of an individual above the divine right of life. If the student body is being taught to discard the basic foundation of Catholic morality, indeed Christian morality, than perhaps the mission of Villanova has not only been distorted but may even be undesirable.

To the Editor:

In response to the Villanovan commentary column titled "Abortion: A Woman's Decision," I must express that I found this editorial most interesting. While I am not pro-choice, as the writers evidently are, I must admit that their point about religious beliefs should be well-noted.

I, as a Catholic, do not believe that anyone should have the desire to kill a fetus. Yet do I, as a Catholic, have the right to force my religious beliefs on the rest of the United States?

Abortion is a medical procedure. The choice to have one lies in the conscience of each woman contemplating its usefulness for her needs and wants. The editorial brought out some concrete examples of the changes "pro-life" activists desire. Yet these are not, in my opinion, the real solutions.

When the Supreme Court decides that the fetus is a living human from the moment of conception, as is my belief, then they can actively protect the right to all human life.

Limiting the ability to obtain an abortion is not going to educate and influence the American woman that there is life inside the womb which should be respected. When fetal life is respected, there will be no choice.

The College of Nursing: Accreditation Rumors

Rumors are dangerous. They can destroy the excellent reputation of a program, faculty and student body that for nearly thirty years has made a significant contribution to health care in the United States.

It is difficult to understand why untrue rumors are passed among intelligent people on a university campus, with few attempts to check the facts with those in official positions. Such has been the unfortunate experience of the College of Nursing during the last several weeks.

The rumor: The College of Nursing has lost its accreditation and state approval. Untrue, those of us in the College of Nursing are grateful for this opportunity to set the record straight and provide some basic information about accreditation, but we are no less disturbed that this phenomennon has occurred within a university community, which above all things is a social institution dedicated to the exposition of truth.

The facts are:

1. The College of Nursing, now in its twenty-ninth year, is fully approved by the State Board of Nurse Examiners of Pennsylvania. There has been no change in our approval status. Our last routine site visit by the state occurred in the spring of 1981, with continuing approval granted. Faculty, adminstration, students and clinical agencies were involved in the site visit.

2. The College of Nursing's undergraduate program is fully accredited by the National League for Nursing. The next accreditation site visit will take place in spring 1984 or possibly in the fall of 1983, if the faculty has completed the Self Study Report and prefers an autumn visit. We have been on a six year accreditation review cycle. Administration, faculty and student representatives will be involved in the preparation of the report and will jointly plan for the site visit. Only N.L.N. accredited programs are eligible to receive federal funds. The College of Nursing is the recipient of these funds.

3. New Master's degree programs in nursing must graduate students before they are eligible for accreditation review. In the interest of economy and in order to avoid duplication of effort, the initial accreditation review for the M.S.N. program will take place at the same time the undergraduate program is reviewed.

4. The vast majority of Villanova graduates pass all five parts of the State Board Licensing Examination on the first attempt. When a failure occurs, it usually means that the individual had difficulty with one of the five tests and must repeat that section the next time the exams are given. Individuals may continue to work as graduate nurses for a year past graduation, so that a failed test may be repeated without jeopardizing employment status. Usually, in such cases, that individual passes the second time.

No professional school in any field can guarantee that no graduate will ever fail a portion of the examination on the first attempt. What we can and must guarantee is a sound curriculum, a well prepared faculty and appropriate supports for the student, such as opportunities to take review courses and test simulations. The rest is up to the student. Since the licensing examination in nursing samples a variety of clinical content areas, as well as background in the sciences to which students have been exposed throughout their four years of school, the best preparation is to have mastered the content of courses throughout the program, and then to engage in a serious review. Sometimes unchecked anxiety and other undetermined factors influence an individual's performance but it has been the experience of most schools, including ours, that students who do well in courses and meet the level of performance expected in clinical courses, have little difficulty. Those who "just make it" at Villanova are at greater risk when they sit for the licensing exam. But the fact remains the same, the majority pass the entire exam on the first attempt.

5. The State Board licensing examination will change its format beginning this July. The State Board licensing examination is really a national examination which each state administers on the same day. The examination has remained essentially the same in its format - since it was developed in the 1950s. The same examination has been given to all nursing school graduates regardless of the kind of program they attended (hospital diploma, associate degree, baccalaureate). Changes in nursing knowledge and curricula, particularly with the growth of baccalaureate programs, has stimulated the National Commission of State Boards of Nursing to devlop a new examination which will be administered for the first time in July 1982.

The new exam will be one integrated test with one score rather than the battery of 5 individual clinical specialty tests, which has been used for so many years. It will be designed to pose questions related to the processes of assessment, planning, implementation and evaluation of nursing care for individuals of all ages, with a variety of health problems. The knowledge base in nursing to be tested will be essentially the same, but the approach will be process-oriented and more in tune with the way nursing care is taught in most baccalaureate programs. Since no school in the country has had experience with this new examination, it will be novel for everyone. Nursing faculties are not permitted to review test items before or after tests are administered.

6. Villanova's College of Nursing graduates are highly sought after by hospitals and health agencies throughout the country, as well as those in the Greater Philadelphia area. Feedback from employers and an increasing number of graduates entering masters programs in nursing, provides evidence of the excellence demonstrated by our graduates. Unlike many other fields, nursing offers unlimited employment opportunities today. Each of our graduates has a number of positions from which to select. This autumn, as in other years, the Nursing Career Day brought approximately 120 employers to our campus who were eager to recruit our students following their graduation in May.

7. Keen competition has developed among schools of nursing to recruit freshmen students. There are fewer high school graduates entering colleges and more opportunities to study in fields once unaccessible to women. There is much more aggressive recruitment for those who indicate an interest in nursing. Cooperation with our admissions office, the attendance of faculty at high school career fairs, articles in the media such as the feature on our College of Nursing which appeared in the January education section of the Philadelphia Inquirer are evidence of our efforts to recruit. Other schools have actually placed a full-time nursing faculty member in the admissions office to give full attention to recruitment of nursing students.

An interesting phenomenon which is occurring in our college is the increased number of transfer students who are seeking admission to the undergraduate program and a growing number of middle-aged adults, some with bachelor's and master's degrees in other fields, who are entering our program. Limited employment opportunities in some fields are responsible for this.

8. The College of Nursing, although the smallest college on Villanova's campus, has the largest undergraduate nursing program in Pennsylvania and is among the largest programs in the country. Its national visibility and reputation has never been better. The preparation and quality of the faculty, their professional contributions through scholarly publication and professional activities is at an all time high. Despite this, we continue to make efforts to improve and refine what we are doing.

Rumors are dangerous. We can only conjecture about why and from where they emanate. Those of us in the College of Nursing enlist everyone's cooperation in dispelling untruths, in identifying the source of rumors and in circulating the facts. In so doing, we will expose the truth and support a college of nursing within a University that indeed has a tradition of excellence.

This week the Villanovan decided to ask students about their Student Government: "What is the Student Government doing for you? Do you know who the president is? Is he doing his job?"

"Not a hell of a lot as far as I know. The president is Bob Rosengarth. I think that his power is severely limited by the University."

Rob Mattern
Junior,
Economics

"Nothing that I have noticed. I do not know the president. It does not seem like he is doing his job. I had hoped Student Government would aid the students with better meal plans and scheduling problems. I was on Student Government, and we did not do anything. You do not even know there is a Student Government. They should be open to student complaints."

Brenda Walker
Sophomore,
Political Science

"I have no time to even think about a Student Government. I have not been made aware that it even exists. I do not know who the president is."

Gary McLain
Freshman,
Speech Communications

"The president is Bob Rosengarth. I think he is doing a pretty good job, but it is not publicized enough."

Kathy Hemseberry
Junior,
French and Economics

"No, I do not know who the president is. I heard we are allowed to have kegs and parties on campus again, so I guess he is doing his job."

Response to Editorial (continued)

Dear Editor:

Many years ago, our distinguished forefathers set down basic tenets on which our "free" American society was to be built. Such a foundation was established to guarantee to all certain basic rights and liberties; even to those who claim to be exempt from the law because they compose a "Non-profit Catholic Institution."

The situation I wish to bring to every free American's attention is the censorship the University has placed on the Villanovan. One such liberty which is being infringed upon is that which is granted to us in the First Amendment — which insures us the freedom of the press.

The Villanovan has the right and the responsibility to publish any rational opinion and should not fear persecution from the Administration. The matter at hand is the publishing of last week's editorial on abortion. I am not condemning or condoning abortion, but rather condemning the actions taken by the University. The Administration may argue that it is they who fund the paper and therefore, can censor its editorials and articles; however, it is we the students who fund the University.

If the University is allowed to proceed in this manner what will differentiate it from the regime which has imposed martial law in Poland? One thing this world does not need is another "Pravda."

If the University disagreed with an editorial, the just means of rebuttal would be to reply via the editorial section and not to threaten and blackmail the staff of the Villanovan.

Therefore, I urge all free loving Americans to voice their opinion and prevent this travesty of justice from occurring.

Dear Editor:

The final paragraph of your editorial "Abortion: A Woman's Decision" crystalized much of the bad reasoning that permeates the pro-abortionist point of view. That you seem to accept this position indicates to me the need for some further reflection in the Villanovan.

There is no doubt, my dear editor, that some pro-life advocates are trying to impose their beliefs on others. People who believe they are absolutely right feel an obligation toward those who, from all appearances, are laboring in ignorance and accepting not only false but morally reprehensible principles. But, my dear editor, pro-choice and pro-life advocates do this. It has nothing necessarily to do with their religious beliefs or their lack of same. Absolute moralists and absolute amoralists share the same methodologies. There are just as many moral absolutists who are atheists as there are those who call themselves believers.

The "key issue," as you see it, is the absolute right of an "individual to make personal moral judgment in accordance with her own belief." Even the utilitarian ethic John Stuart Mill places the most obvious restriction on submoral relativism. Mill recognized that one's freedom must be denied if in its exercise it would deny the freedom of another. Only a puerile, unreflective soul would isolate the right to act according to one's own moral belief without regard to the rights of others. Mill's position is not a religious one.

Let me suggest, my dear editor, that the key issue is and always has been human life. When does it begin? Is the fetus a person? What is its relative value? Is it worth more than the right to sexual, economic, social, and physical freedom of any woman? Is the right of a probable human being of equal value or of less value than an actual human being?

Are only beings capable of rational thought human? Do we eliminate the unborn insane people and Villanovan editors, on that ground?

Is what is legal the equivalent of what is moral? The entire Third Reich was legal, my dear editor, was it, therefore, morally acceptable?

If a fetus is a human life, the courts are upholding the right of one person to kill another person. Pro-life advocates claim that the courts are in serious error — a very distinct possibility, my dear editor — they are trying through legislation to right this unfortunate decision precisely because there are a great number of unreflective souls who still equate legal with moral.

No court should grant the right to take the life of an innocent person and some absolute "pro-lifes" do not accept the idea of the courts being empowered to legalize the killing of those guilty of capital offenses. Some people place a very high value on human life. Any legal system that does not, they feel, should be changed, for without such a view the "force of law" of which District Judge Jon O. Newman wrote is a force to be repulsed. Human life, I would submit, my dear editor, is the "key issue."

Daniel T. Regan,
Philosophy Dept.

To the Editor:

It seems to me that your pro-abortion editorial which appeared in last week's issue of the Villanovan was both distorted and misleading. Apparently, you are incapable of making the distinction between a religious belief and a moral conviction. To my knowledge, the pro-lifers are not as interested in imposing "their particular religious beliefs on the entire female population" as they are in articulating and supporting their conviction that human life should be cherished and preserved. I believe that they have every right to seek to effect, through established legislative procedures, an alteration in the status quo. If, in fact, such alteration is unconstitutional, it will be struck down by the judiciary.

Your suggestion that most American women, when faced with an unwanted pregnancy, had to resort to "a back-alley butcher" is reflective either of ignorance or of a narrow mentality which often characterizes the efforts of those who obscure alternatives while lobbying for so-called "freedom of choice." A woman does not truly have moral freedom of choice until she has considered all possible options. One of those options is offered when a certain segment of society seeks to advise her not only of all the alternatives but also of the consequences of those alternatives which should inform her decision. Throughout the Philadelphia area, and throughout the country, centers exist which help women with unwanted pregnancies by offering physical and emotional support free of charge. Furthermore, I would much rather see my tax dollars go toward programs like these which support life than toward those which destroy it.

Hopefully, you and the members of your cause will not continue to confuse the issue of abortion (or rather, the issue of life) by painting yourselves as individuals who have been deprived of their inalienable rights, the victims of religious persecution. When the public is allowed to view the issue clearly, I believe that it will indeed choose to support the rights of the individual, whether or not he or she is yet born.

To the Editor:

Your editorial (Jan. 29: "Abortion: A Woman's Decision") stated that the key issue is an "attempt (by pro-life forces) to impose their particular religious beliefs on the entire female population, thus limiting others freedom of choice."

First of all, may I correct the writer's use of the word "religious." The anti-abortionists rest their case not on dogmatic religious belief — witness the hundreds of thousands of different creeds' members in the movement — but on grounds of a commonly held sense of right vs wrong: a moral issue.

Second, the conventionally accepted shibboleth that we as a people cannot "legislate morality" simply does not square with our nation's history. In fact, it is doubtful that a concensus existed for many of our laws enacted with a moral end in mind. Take, for example, the civil rights laws that insured equality of opportunity in public accommodation, education and jobs. These fundamental human rights, which so long eluded the legislative process, were recognized into law because Congress finally realized that it is wrong to deny a person lodging, education and job because of his skin color. Congress, in effect, said racial segregation is wrong: a moral judgment was made. We did not let each white citizen make up his own mind whether he agreed with racial segregation; we forced him to obey. We "legislated morality." We do it all the time. This is exactly what the pro-life movement has in mind in its attempt to outlaw abortion in our land.

Gerald A. Lee, '45

To the Editor,

When a person mentions the term "sex," a very vivid connotation of two people engaging in hedonistic acts is brought to one's mind. Sex is much more than this.

Sexual intercourse in an act of love which only married couples can morally undertake. The Sixth Commandment of God explicitly states "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Along with adultery, fornication is also forbidden.

"Humanae vitae" states that every act of sexual intercourse shall be open to the possibility of new life (procreation). This means that intercourse is not a casual act that we may experiment with at any time of our choosing. Intercourse is an act of love that says two married people are accepting the awesome responsibility of both loving and raising a child, if the women were to conceive.

Then why are there so many abortions? This tells me that there are many adults and adolescents who engage in sex for fun and pleasure, without thinking through the many consequences until it is already too late. Figures show that many of these unwanted pregnancies will be terminated. Killing a human being is in direct opposition to the Fifth Commandment of God.

Only God has the right to take away someone's life. If abortion is a women's decision, then she is playing the role of God. Two others once wanted to "play God." Adam and Eve were then banned from paradise.

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to the editorial, "Abortion: A Woman's Decision," found in last week's issue of the Villanovan.

Abortion is a highly charged issue, which over the past decade has led to much conflict and discussion between members of pro-life thinking, who believe life begins at conception and therefore view abortion as murder, and those who hold an anti-life or pro-choice position.

Those like myself, who advocate a pro-life position, are not attempting to impose their particular religious beliefs on the entire female population, as your editorial stated. Abortion is not a religious issue — it is a human issue. As such it is raised by many people of various religious backgrounds and by those who have no religious affiliations at all.

To agree with abortion as an alternative to bearing a child who would be neither wanted nor loved, as last week's editorial did, is an oft-used argument of those who hold an anti-life position. Obviously, many more babies are unwanted early in pregnancy than is the case later in the pregnancy or after birth. It is the ready availability of abortion-on-demand, when a pregnant women first may have a natural question about how well she can handle a pregnancy, which leads to the tremendous number of abortions. It is important to realize that there are alternatives to abortion. Today, more than 1,000 pro-life pregnancy aid centers exist in this country to help women with problems related to pregnancy. Our society can express its concerns for those women by expanding such services.

Those who take the pro-life position also recognize the cry from those who assume that any attempt to illegalize abortion-on-demand would result in the increase in the number of back alley abortions. This is not necessarily true.

The editorial which appeared in last week's Villanovan failed to recognize the fact that a woman's decision to "terminate her pregnancy" is, in fact, a decision to kill a developing person. And to treat abortion as a private choice for a woman alone to make, also violates the rights of the father.

In essence, the pro-life position, which I support, believes abortion is, indeed, murder. The fetus is a human life within the confines of a tiny body, not simply an extension of a woman's body. As such, the developing fetus is a separate and uniquely irreplaceable human being.

Bernadette Brogan

To the Editor:

Gerald E. Arth and Anne Suydam have given us all a fine example of the insane reasoning behind the pro-abortion movement. Arth and Suydam conveniently by-pass the true crux of the issue that they so ineptly address. That crux that they ignore is this, "Is the fetus a human, with all the rights of humans, or is it a blob of protoplasm subject to the wishes of the women carrying it?"

They would have us believe that this question need not be examined by anyone but the women involved. If we wish to be as truly enlightened liberal-minded intellectuals as they, we wouldn't dare try to make such a decision for society. And heaven forbid that if we did come to a moral decision we try to impose it on anyone else.

This is nonsense. Granted, certain personal matters of morality should be left to the individual, e.g., belief in God. However, when the question at hand is whether or not an organism is human or not, it is no longer a matter of private morality because a possible human life is involved. A life or non-life issue is a matter of collective societal morality. It cannot be so simply reduced as Arth and Suydam try to do to a "particular religious belief."

I'm sure our great freedom loving editors might try to counter that there is no such thing as collective morality — that morality is relative. If this is the case then Hitler could not be condemned. The death camps were simply a part of his personal relative morality. Imagine the result of this logic on a larger scale. Suppose homocide or rape or child abandonment laws were left to the morality of each individual. Absurd, no? Well it is equally absurd to let every individual to decide whether a complex organism is life or not.

Society must make a decision based on empirical scientific data about the human or non-human status of the fetus. It is unthinkable to leave such a decision up to the whims of the individual.

The freedom of choice argument of Roe v. Wade holds no water. It is a cowardly way of side-stepping a social question. It is a decision not to decide that sentences every fetus in this nation to a possible "death until birth."

Aside from the feeble "choice" argument, the only other point that our great editors make is the emotion-charged statement that banning abortions only drives women to back alley butchers. Once again our inquisitive journalists refused to consider the heart of the issue. Yes, tragically they are correct. This will occur, but this is not an argument for the morality or immorality of legalized abortion.

Incidentally, since Arth and Suydam like Judge John O. Newman's opinion that a moral judgment may not be imposed upon others by a force of law, let me remind them of a minor unimportant exception in our history.

In 1863, despite heated moral disagreement about the humaneness of a certain organism, a moral judgment was made by Abraham Lincoln and imposed with the force of law upon a large portion of the American southern population. Pity poor Abe, I bet he didn't know he was such an enemy of freedom.

LIC, Advice For Free

By ANNE N. SUYDAM

After the housing lottery in the spring, many students face the problem of finding off-campus housing. Many of these students turn to local apartment complexes: Bryn Mawr Courts, La Maison, and Sugartown Mews, just to name a few. Almost as predictable as the arrival of a full moon, landlord-tenant problems arise and the students are suddenly hit with possible evictions, for various and sometimes unjustifiable reasons. There is, however, a service on campus which deals specifically with landlord-tenant conflicts and lease interpretations.

The Legal Information Center was started by Dr. Sebastian Rainone. Currently a business law professor, Dr. Rainone arrived in 1976 after an extensive career as a practicing attorney. Although he is still licensed to practice law, Rainone devotes the majority of his time to teaching and the center.

"I do not want the emphasis to be placed on me. The law students should be recognized because they work so hard," said Rainone. He is the faculty moderator and advises the 12-15 law students who run the center. These law students volunteer their free time to hear problems and then advise and aid the person.

"I had to set up training sessions because the law school teaches in very broad, although thorough, terms. These students have to know the specific Pennsylvania regulations and laws if they are to adequately help," said Rainone.

A series of lectures are incorporated into the law students' training program. Substantive and procedural law are taught as is the process of interviewing and counseling. Local lawyers, judges, and even building inspectors give special lectures, so as to insure total preparation of the law students.

Along with the lectures, each semester the law students must go through a counseling workshop. This involves the law student sitting in a room, with a certified lawyer, and hearing "mock problems and questions." The certified lawyer silently rates the law student on his (the student's) knowledge of the substantive and procedural laws, plus the respect that he gives his "client" and the legal system itself. If the law student is considered qualified, he is then approved by Rainone and allowed to counsel the students.

The center is approved by the Bar Association and has its own insurance but is only authorized to handle landlord-tenant cases. Rainone wants to greatly expand the center to cover motor vehicle violations, minor criminal offenses, and liquor offenses. "We need expansion so that we can fully help the Villanova community," said Rainone. "However, additional certification is required for these service offerings."

The Legal Information Center neither represents the students in court nor writes letters or makes phone calls on their "client's" behalf. Rather, they "inform and aid in choosing moral alternatives for action," Rainone explained. He continued, "The two major ideas behind the center are to inform the students of their basic legal rights and to educate them as to their responsibilities." Also, "to make the student more aware of how to deal with the problem but more importantly, how he got there and how to avoid the problem the next time."

"What surprised me so totally when I arrived to teach was the ignorance of the college students in knowing their basic fundamental legal rights," stated Rainone. "The purpose of college is to throw you into the 'game of life' and a student cannot be prepared unless he knows his rights."

In the future, Rainone will be working with Lucyna Gorski, director of student activities, in developing additional workshops concerning contract problems and misunderstandings between campus groups (fraternities, sororities, clubs, etc.) and local restaurants and banquet halls (ie: Inn of Four Falls, Covered Wagon, etc.). "Easily 70 percent of the problems could have been avoided if the students had come to me," commented Rainone. Contract misinterpretations arise often, and Rainone wants to alleviate the problem by getting the center approved in this area.

"The students must check the hours of operation, bring in the necessary documentation, and have patience with the law students. Promptness, preparedness, and patience; these are the essential elements of the person seeking help," added Rainone.

The Legal Information Center is located on the second floor of Dougherty Hall in room 207A.

Cultural Films

By KATHI IANNACONE

In the past, the Villanova Cultural Film Series has proved to be one of the biggest box office attractions that this university has seen in a long time. What seems to be attracting the filmgoers is the combination of classical American films, with recent foreign films and critically acclaimed films. Together, these provide an educationally balanced form of entertainment.

The Tree of the Wooden Clogs, a powerful vision of an ideal — a feeling for family, community, and oneness that is today like a lost Eden, is one film in the series that can be deemed as critically acclaimed. Falling under this category is also the film, The Marriage of Maria Braun. In this story, director Fassbinder mixes soap opera, sexual politics, offbeat comedy, epic romance, current history, social satire and period pieces into an amazingly coherent whole as a metaphor for post-war German society. Both films received high praise for their cinematic techniques, yet received little attention at the box office.

Another distinct category of the film series is the classic American film which people seem to want to see again and again. Three of this semester's films are among this type.

The Elephant Man, the true life chronicle of John Merrick, a man so hideously deformed that his only means to eke out a living was as a freak show attraction, is one of the films in this category.

Polanski's Chinatown is yet another film known as an American classic. In it, everyone collaborates to re-create, for contemporary tastes, the disillusioned version of seedy, sunkissed pre-war Southern California.

And by popular demand, the third of this type is Clockwork Orange. The film shows the intellect and imagination that marks Stanley Kubrick as a true genius of cinema.

This semester, as in the previous one, discussion groups will be employed. "They have proved to be a success," stated Joan Lynch, chairperson of the series. "If the people want to discuss the films after they see them, then that's what we'll do, and this semester we have some of the best known speakers that we've ever had."

After this week's film, La Dolce Vita, the well-known scholar Mira Liehm will lead the discussion on the "Italian Film Director." Liehm has been the co-director of the International Film Festival held in Mannehéim, Germany since 1973 and she is author of The Most Important Art/La Dolce Vita. The book contains some of Fellini's boldest symbolism and Liehm is prepared to take note of these in her talk.

The Stuntman, directed by Richard Rush, is yet another film

Student Goes Airborne

By ANNE McRAE

There weren't many student nurses at the Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps summer camp; four of us to be exact. We spent six weeks at Eglin Air Force Base in sunny Florida during the grueling months of July and August. How did I, a Villanova nursing student happen to be here? I often wondered about it as I tumbled out of my bunk at 5:10 a.m. to the blaring of reveille and the Air Force song over loud speakers outside my room. Well, it all started with an innocent stroll into Connelly Center for lunch one day last March . . .

. . . There was an Air Force recruiter armed with dozens of pamphlets on the "Gateway to a Great Way of Life!" I didn't pay much attention until she started talking about Air Force nursing and the many possibilities and benefits available to me. Coming from a Navy family, I only listened with one ear, but as she continued talking I began tuning in more closely. To make a long story short, she sold me on the Air Force and after lots of paperwork, I found myself on a plane headed for Eglin AFB to complete the required summer training. I'm still amazed at it all.

The first day was maddening. Getting over one hundred students situated wasn't easy. We were shuffled back and forth, getting uniforms, filling out papers, and having interviews. Finally, at midnight I managed to hit the sack after briefly introducing myself to my new roommate, and throwing my luggage all over the floor. Little did I know that it would get worse before it got better.

Five hours later (which felt like five minutes), I was jolted out of a deep slumber by bugles playing reveille. Jumping out of our beds, my roommate, Connie, and I threw on our blue dress uniforms and bolted out the door for formation. We were chagrined to see all the guys in physical training (PT) clothes, sneakers, white shorts, and T-shirts. It was the first of many mistakes to be made during the course of the next six weeks.

That day was hectic. Most of it was spent at briefings (a fancy name for lectures) and Air Force classes. We had ten minutes here and there to ourselves and I did my best to unpack and get situated. I quickly found that I brought much more than I needed and didn't have the space for it. We could only use certain drawers for certain articles, placed in a certain manner. We were allotted ten hangers that meant no room for civvies (civilian clothes).

During that first day I learned a few things about the camp itself. There were 125 students (about 25 were female), divided into five "flights." Each flight lived in a motel-like arrangement. I was in "E" flight, along with four other girls. The main concept was "teamwork." All twenty-four of us in "E" flight would be spending the majority of our time together, we would be living, working, and eating together. The goal was to be "honor flight," by being the team with the fewest demerits, and the highest ratings in drill, academics, and physical training, among other things. You really got to know the people you were living with and, of course, things didn't always go smoothly. Like any family (which we, in effect, grew to be) we had our squabbles. But that was to be expected.

Anyway, getting back to those first couple of days, becoming situated was the hardest part. The Field Training Officers (FTO's) gave out demerits for anything and everything. A wet sink, a piece of lint in the trashbasket, a loose thread on a uniform, or unevenly spaced hangers could get you two or three each. After a couple of days we were given an impromptu inspection of our rooms. I hadn't even had time to finish unpacking. As a result, I picked up 47 demerits that one time around. Every week we were allowed a certain number of demerits. If you went over the limit, you had to work off tours over the weekend which consisted of waxing buses or cleaning the offices, one half-hour for each demerit over the limit. The first week, we were allowed 30 demerits. How discouraging to get 47 in one day!

That first weekend we had a mandatory beach party. The weather was gorgeous, and I collected quite a few rays. At dinner the camp commander announced that he was wiping the demerit slate clean, and we could start all over again. This place was looking better already!

As the days went by, we all fell into a pretty regular routine. Connie and I would sneak out of our beds at 4:30 a.m. to clean our room and get organized — all done in the dark, of course. If we were caught being up before reveille, we would be sure to receive a nice sum of demerits, or "gigs" as they were affectionately called. I became quite adept at making my bunk in darkness, measuring the covers 24" down from the head with a 6" collar. Forty-five degree angles at the corners had to be perfect — no lumps or bulges. My nursing experience was paying off!

At 5:10 a.m. the bugles blared and we darted out of the room for formation and PT (physical training). After roll call we jogged (double-timed) to the PT field for warm-ups and the mile-and-a-half run. Those Florida mornings were usually warm and muggy, and by the time we got back to our rooms, we were ready for the showers. If we were lucky, we got twenty or thirty minutes to wash up and get the room in inspection order. Then it was on to breakfast in the "chow hall." There was always a long line and plenty of gigs if you weren't careful, eyes straight ahead, no talking, feet flat on the floor while eating. Plus, we had to square all our corners when walking. I learned to eat fast, oftentimes we only had four or five minutes to gobble down a meal.

After breakfast we were off to more briefings and classes. This usually went on until dinner. After dinner we had two more hours of PT, playing volleyball and softball. The rules were different, though, and breaking them was bound to get you a couple of gigs.

After the first few weeks, the special events began, and camp started to be fun. A few Army rangers taught us how to rappel. Rappelling (sliding down a rope) is one of the quickest ways to get troops into a combat area. We did some jumping off towers and out of helicopters, which was really exhilarating.

Later we all flew out to Reese AFB in Texas in a C-130. That's a huge, noisy, lumbering transport plane. It was an uncomfortable trip, and we bumped and jolted the whole three and a half hours to Reese, where we planned to take test rides in T-37's which are trainer jets. Eventually we arrived, and after sitting through many briefings on airsickness and flying hazards, we were strapped into parachutes and teamed up with a pilot, one on one. In the plane, it took a little while to get used to breathing through the oxygen mask, and the maze of controls was overwhelming. Once in the air, though, I forgot my apprehensions and when the pilot gave me the stick, I just sat back and enjoyed the ride. I learned to climb, roll, and flip, ignoring the tricks that gravity was playing on my body. For the first time in my life, I was flying a plane. What a wonderful feeling it was!

I also flew the C-130 I mentioned earlier. This was a night mission, and it was a little trickier handling the controls. During this flight, I got to see a mid-air refuelling. A little bit ahead of us was the plane whose job was to fill our fuel tanks. The long elephant-like projection extended from its back and attached to the C-130 with a bang and a shudder. In perfect synchronization the two planes flew together at the same speed, connected like Siamese twins. I could feel the tension — how easily the pattern could have been broken, along with serious consequences!

During the six weeks we had time to squeeze in target practice, as well as land and water survival training. The days flew, and soon I found myself saying good-by to all the new friends I had made. I felt sad to leave. Crammed into those six short weeks were memories I would never forget. I had learned a lot about discipline, teamwork, and relating well with others — things you just can't learn in a classroom. I felt good about myself and what I could accomplish.

Now I take a three-credit course each semester at St. Joseph's University to fulfill my R.O.T.C. requirements. I've made a commitment to the Air Force, and I am proud of that commitment. I look forward to the day of my commissioning, when I will officially become a second-lieutenant in the Air Force Nurse Corps. Things certainly have happened quickly since that one day last March. A whole new, exciting world has opened up before me, and I am just at the beginning of the "Gateway to a Great Way of Life!"

In The Sciences...

By BILL CLARK

Each year, approximately 12 million Americans seek the help of chiropractors. Even though chiropractic is the largest growing health-care profession in the country, it is still beset with the image of quackery and cultism.

"The medical profession has done a great job of making chiropractic doctors second-class citizens," states Joel Klein, a chiropractor in the Villanova area.

For years, the American Medical Association has put out propaganda against the chiropractic profession. Klein claims that chiropractors have survived these attacks by, "taking medical failures and making them healthy."

Chiropractic is based on the belief that if the spinal column is kept in structural alignment, the central nervous system will allow the human body to heal itself.

Chiropractors believe that stress and injuries can cause shifting of spinal vertebrae, which influence nerves throughout the body. To correct the spinal column, chiropractors perform "adjustments" with their hands by moving the vertebrae into their proper position.

"Chiropractors do not treat disease," said Klein. "By adjusting the spine, we try to see if the healing ability of the body will be able to diagnose and treat its own problem."

Contrary to popular belief, chiropractors do not claim that they can cure anything. Klein said that genetic weaknesses and damaged cells can limit a chiropractor's effectiveness. In that case, a chiropractor would refer his patient to a physician.

"Chiropractic does not exclude medicine," added Klein. "If we reach these limits, it is time for drugs and surgery."

Even though many chiropractors are looking for harmony with the medical profession, the American Medical Association refuses to recognize the value of chiropractic care. Even though a recent Supreme Court decision has limited the AMA's criticism of chiropractic, the official statement by the AMA denies the validity of the profession.

"The AMA knows of no scientific evidence to support spinal manipulation and adjustment as appropriate treatment of human ailments such as excessive hypertension, heart disease, stroke, cancer, or infection," said the statement.

Klein sees this controversy in terms of the differences between the two professions. "Chiropractic is a prevention and maintenance system for the body. Medicine, on the other hand, is a crisis care system," said Klein.

Klein also believes advertising by pharmaceutical companies has caused Americans to believe that doctors and drugs can cure any disease or ailment. He claims that chiropractors would greatly eliminate the need for drugs, and therefore reduce these company's profits.

Even though the number of chiropractic patients continues to grow, there is still a shortage of chiropractic doctors. Klein estimates that the need for chiropractors is approximately 30,000 in the United States.

Dr. Ray Malewitz, Villanova's health science advisor, claims that he knows of two Villanova students who were accepted and attended schools of chiropractic.

In order to increase campus awareness of chiropractic, Larry Sinacori, a senior biology and psychology major, is attempting to form a chiropractic club.

"Our goal is to expose chiropractic care to everyone at Villanova," said Sinacori. "We want to show people that chiropractic is another road for people in the sciences."

There are eight colleges of chiropractic in the country which are fully accredited by the Council on Chiropractic Education, which is recognized by the U.S. Office of Education.

The curriculum at these schools is similar to that of traditional medical schools in several aspects. For instance, New York Chiropractic College requires six semester hours of biology, six semester hours of inorganic chemistry, six semester hours of physics, along with three semester hours of organic chemistry, psychology, and social sciences. The degree can be obtained in approximately three to four years of study.

"The curriculum is very similar, except that chiropractors do not take courses in pharmacology and surgery," said Klein. "The major difference is in the focus of our practice. We don't feel that the body works in separate parts."

You Bet Your Life

By CATHIE ALZNAUER

Are you spending spring break in the sun? If you are trading snow and ice for sun and sand — be careful that you don't end up burned and red. Although a tan looks great, the sun can do serious damage to your skin.

The immediate result of overexposure to the sun's ultraviolet rays is sunburn. Almost everyone has spent some time red, sore and uncomfortable from too much sun too quickly.

Another result of long sun exposure is prematurely aged skin. Wrinkles and tough leathery skin are unpleasant effects of frequent sun bathing. With enough time, the sun weakens the skin's elasticity. It can also cause dark patches and gray scaly areas.

Sunburn and prematurely-aged skin are not the worst results of constant overexposure to the sun — cancer is. Skin cancer has visible warning signs including a sore that does not heal and the development of unusually pigmented areas. Fortunately, skin cancer is cureable and rarely fatal.

If you plan on catching some rays this spring break, remember these few, quick facts: the fairer your skin, the more quickly it will burn, the sun is strongest between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. and sunscreen with PABA blocks out harmful rays and allow for gradual tanning. The higher the PABA number the more untraviolet rays it blocks. So cover yourself with lotion, and enjoy the beach!

WKVU Attempts A New Image

By NANCY ALBERICI

WKVU? What is that?

This question has been asked by many students. Well to answer this, WKVU is Villanova's radio station. Located on the second floor of Dougherty, WKVU, managed by Bob Herman, is trying to make students more aware of the station and the student contributions to the station.

Sporting a new look, WKVU's office was recently refurnished with new carpeting and furniture. "We felt that if WKVU had a better physical appearance, people would care more and hold a better attitude toward the station," commented Steve Helmetag, program director and assistant general manager. The carpeting was donated and installed by the students themselves and their new furniture came from the attic above WKVU.

Hoping to increase the number of listeners, two new programming formats have been adopted. "Last semester, people played what they wanted. There was no organization," Steve said.

University Rock, the first format, is similar to the commercial rock stations WMMR and WYSP. This type of programming will be conducted during the daytime, as well as two nights a week. Adventure Music, the second new programming format, will be broadcast Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights from 6 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. New trends of music will be aired at this time such as Blitz and New Wave.

Another reason students don't listen to WKVU is because they can't get it on their radio in a lot of places on campus. Also, static interferes with the reception. Working on changing these problems, Steve commented, "Now we have a graduate student with a first class license working on the maintenance of the station."

Still working towards it s quest to go FM, WKVU hopes Villanova students will listen more often. "Since college-aged students listen to the FM band, it will be easier to find WKVU if it was an FM station," Steve explained.

Professionalism is what WKVU is striving for. In conclusion, Steve voiced his concern, "Students should listen to WKVU because it is the radio voice of Villanova and because their friends handle all the operations. We broadcast all the basketball games and always have news and public service announcements to aid Villanova students."

Steve Helmetag, program director and assistant general manager of the "new" WKVU.

to be followed with a lecture. William Lynch, speaker and chairperson of the humanities division at Newmann College, will follow the story which weaves innumerable and dazzling stunts and impressive performances into a complex story about paranoia and illusion versus reality.

Other speakers in the series are Joan Lynch, a professor at Villanova and Judith Switzer from Bucks County College.

The subject of the Wednesday night mini-series is comedy. "We polled some of the past audiences to see what would really attract the public, and comedy seemed to be the most recurring theme," commented Lynch. Some films featured in the mini-series are: Horsefeathers, a Marx Brothers' film; Road to Morocco, a Bob Hope and Bing Crosby film; and Danny Kaye's The Secret Life of Walter Mitty.

As Lynch stated, "It's a good series, one that I hope will interest the students as well as the community."

Residence Life Survey

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY

Dear Residents:

Over 62% of you responded to the 1981 Residence Life Survey this past December, and we appreciate very much your input. We were pleased that several of you wrote lengthy dissertations and were willing to identify yourselves by name. Where this was the case, we tried to respond in writing with specific comments. Altough we have yet to complete our analysis of and commentary on all the data, the following highlights will give you an idea of what has been documented so far:

Responses from the Office of Residence Life to your comments? There have already been several. Coordinators for Residence Management are discussing your perspective with individual hall staff by way of a performance printout for each Resident Assistant. A plan for the systematic replacement of 40% of room furnishings over the next five years and for the creation and improvement of lounge facilities has been submitted. Solan laundry company is the new vendor for these services. New equipment has been installed this year and plans for expanding current sites and establishing new ones are being investigated. Our relationship with Maintenance and Housekeeping is much better than in years' past and continues to become more effective. As residence hall needs become a higher institutional priority, their success will be that much more improved.
There are no quick or easy answers. The questions you have defined, along with the policy revisions we are investigating may, from your perspective, come too slowly or accommodate less than all of what you want. We are confident however, that progress is and will continue to be made. Your response to our survey was important and will be put to good use. Thank you for your help.
With special appreciation to the staff of the Departments of University Information Systems and Computer Activity we are...

Sincerely yours,
The Office of Residence Life

90% agree or strongly agree that their RA is fair and consistent with policy enforcement. A slightly higher percentage agree or agree strongly that the staff uses discretion and confidentiality when assisting with personal concerns, and that they are usually available when needed.

96% agree or agree strongly that staff encourages responsible behavior and consideration for individuals.

On the less successful side only about 88% agree hat the staff has made an effort to get to know you, or have helped you to get to know others. 74% consider the staff to have had a positive impact on their adjustment to college life.

We are especially interested in improving on these evaluative indicies to those of you who would like to help. Let me remind you that applications are available and our selection process has already begun.

ON FACILITIES AND SERVICES

91% of you indicate that living in a residence hall has enhanced your college experience. 80% agree or strongly agree that your living situation meets your needs and 77% agree that you are proud to invite parents and friends into your hall. An explanation for gradual decline in agreement on these three statements may be found in your perspective on the following variables:

48% agree or strongly agree that furnishings are adequate

43% agree or strongly agree that lounge and recreational facilities in residence halls are adequate.

VARIABLES OF MOST CONCERN

Women most frequently indicate concern over the visitation policy. Laundry facilities, shower and toilet facilities are next most frequently mentioned. The alcohol policy and general maintenance/housekeeping are sighted next as sources of dissatisfaction.

Men indicate that they are most negatively affected by the university alcohol policy. Laundry facilities and the visitation policy also rank high as causes of dissatisfaction. Shower/toilet facilities and lounge space seem next in order of concern.

Absence of Substance Mars Film

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Absence of Malice is a tedious two hour journey through the absurd. Produced and directed by Sidney Pollack (They Shoot Horses Don't They?, The Yakuza and The Electric Horseman), the film stars Paul Newman, Sally Field, Melinda Dillon and Bob Balaban (Midnight Cowboy, Prince of The City) as investigator Rosen.

The story centers around Michael Gallagher (Newman), a liquor dealer who is the son of a deceased mobster. He wakes up one morning to find out that he has made the front page of the newspaper and is being investigated by the law but has no idea why.

In effect what is happening is that a well known union leader has disappeared (ala Jimmy Hoffa). An investigator for the government decides that a phony investigation of Gallagher will entrap the guilty party. A vital part of this charade also includes making a false news story to Megan Carter (Sally Field), who is supposedly a "hip" reporter. She believes the story and has it printed. Later on, to her dismay, she finds the story to be untrue. The twist lies in Gallagher later "turning the tables" on all involved.

The premise of Absence of Malice is interesting in that it tries to present what happens when power, in this case that of a newspaper and its journalists, is abused.

Kurt Luedtke, who wrote Absence of Malice, was a hot-shot reporter and editor before turning to screen-writing. With all this going for it, why is it that Absence of Malice fails? The problem is that numerous scenes are just not believable. An even bigger reason is that Sally Field turns in the worst performance of her film career. She acts as if she's possessed by Sister Betrille. Field is mis-cast as Megan Carter and runs around throughout the film, analagous to a chicken without it's head. She's not the least bit believable and acts like she should be writing for the National Esquirer.

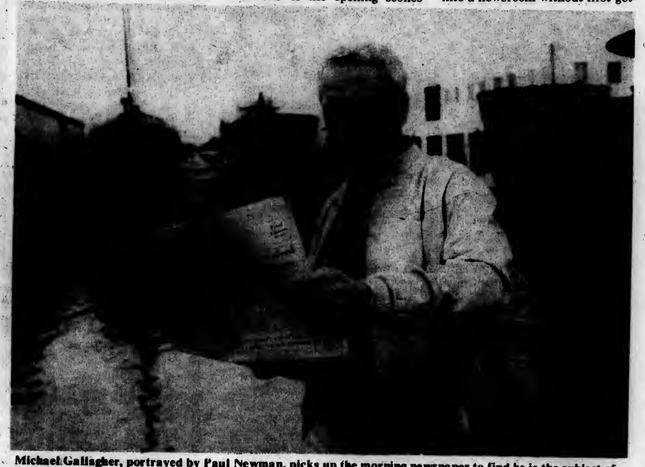
In one of the opening scenes Paul Newman, who turns in another fine performance, storms into the newsroom where Sally Field is working. He demands to know if she wrote the article about him. Field, quite taken back, proceeds to knock her coffee all over her desk. In reality Newman would never be able to just barge into a newsroom without first getting permission.



Michael Gallagher, portrayed by Paul Newman, picks up the morning newspaper to find he is the subject of a damaging headline article.

Also, Absence of Malice is hurt by Field and Newman having a brief romance. There is no need for this love affair because it doesn't contribute anything to the movie. It appears to have been just an after-thought on the part of director Sidney Pollack.

Filmed entirely in Miami, Absence of Malice shifts back and forth from restaurants and bars to banks and government buildings. One character worth mentioning is that of Michael Gallagher's naive girlfriend excellently portrayed by Melinda Dillon (Slap Shot, Close Encounters of The Third Kind). As Teresa Perrone, Dillon confides in Megan about her relationship with Gallagher and how it subsequently ended in an abortion. Carter betrays that confidence and prints the story. Dillon's reaction the following morning (which is the highlight of the movie) is to run from house to house pathetically gathering up all the newspapers in a fruitless effort to prevent the story from being read. Dillon ends up committing suicide out of both frustration and guilt.

Other than this, Absence of Malice is truly unrealistic. What was supposed to be a climactic last 15 minutes wound up being a merry-go-round of cliches and "profound" statements. The scene was so off-base that the audience was laughing, supporting this writer's belief that Absence of Malice is just not to be taken seriously.

Bennigan's Tavern Treats

By STEVE HELMETAG

For the King of Prussia shopping area, the past six months has seen much renovation and expansion. One of the most recent additions is Bennigan's Tavern, located near the Plaza movie theatre at the south end of the complex.

At Bennigan's, food and drink are served in sizable portions in mostly moderate price ranges. The menu is located with categories ranging from finger snacks, to specialties, such as Quiche me Quick, Some Like It Hot, Fruit of the Vine and Bennigan's Champagne Brunch.

The salads, iceberg or spinach, were served in large bowls and arrived promptly. The house dressing, a sweet and sour variety, is strongly recommended.

The choice of appetizers gave my dinner partner and me the greatest trouble, primarily due to the great variety. Besides offering the usual soup fare, Bennigan's serves mushrooms, artichoke hearts, a mixture of deep fried vegetables, zucchini, and fried cheese. Fried cheese ($2.95) is basically on the order of large french fries stuffed with mozzarella along with a tasty marinara sauce, creative and appetising. The French onion soup ($1.95) is also quite good.

Smothered Steak ($6.95) and Beef Chimichanga ($5.65), which both include salad, fresh fruit and choice of potato, are among this restaurant's specialties. The former contains sauteed onions, mushrooms, and provolone cheese and was the most enjoyable item sampled by this reviewer. So what is Beef Chimichanga, you ask. Beef Chimichanga is a tortilla stuffed with chunky beef and spices served deep fried topped with Colby cheese, guacomole, diced tomatoes and sour cream. In short, it is a Mexican extravaganza. A tangerine was included with both meals.

Bennigan's Tavern has quickly gained a loyal following since opening in November. Because of the layout of this restaurant and bar, the place can be very crowded, yet not cramped. The booths are set up to stimulate conversation and although the service is prompt, people are welcome to sit and talk for hours. Full meals are available from 11 a.m. until 1 a.m., and reservations are only accepted for groups of nine or more.

Jazz Classics Echo Through Era

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Echoes of an Era is a collection of jazz classics culled from between the mid-'40s and early '60s. Music written by, among other great Americans, the Gershwins and Thelonious Monk with Coleman Hawkins, is here interpreted by Lenny White, Stanley Clark, Freddie Hubbard, Joe Henderson, Chick Corea and Chaka Khan. Most people would agree that these are musicians' musicians performing classical material; all the makings of an album which musicians and critics will respect but not enjoy, right?

Wrong. It is a joy. It is tastefully done, it is synergic, too: "New faces" don't "breathe life" into "old songs"; nor does the music unravle itself through musicians whose identities are of no consequence. I Mean You isn't this good just because Monk and Hawkins wrote such a great piece (it doesn't hurt though) but also Corea's arrangement and Khan's voice positively sparkle.

Of the album's nine titles (there are two takes of All of Me), five are killers. The instrumental introduction to Take the A Train is among their finest playing of the set, under which Clark's bass pulses like some unobtrusive rhythmic track.

Hubbard plays well here, too. The trumpet riff which takes I Love You Porgy in and out of Henderson's tenor solo rings out clear and strong and, like the material, would be contemporary in any era. Much more hip is his contribution to I Hear Music, where he jumps onto his solo a few beats before the break, to get a running start, and then punches out enough firepower in a few short bursts to put a machine gun to shame.

Along with arranging all of the material, Corea contributes High Wire/The Aerialist. This is an interesting concept for an album of this type. Jazz leaves room for many solos, and here the two solos are balanced against each other, creating the tension in the "high wire" along with Corea's piano lightly runs. The last cut is a duet between Khan and Corea, Spring Can Really Hang You Up the Most. From the introspective, stark piano introduction to the rich, warm tones of her voice, Spring Can Really Hang You Up the Most can be described only as beautiful and well worth the price of the entire album.

It's really tough to say who steals the show here. The material is without fault; this was the popular music before r'n'b and rock took over the marketplace. Lenny White deserves special recognition not only for his solid drumming but because this whole project was originally his idea, as does Corea, who handles the very unenviable task of arranging classics for an audience unfamiliar with them. Kahn's performance is perhaps the biggest surprise of Echoes of an Era. She is not Rufus-ized here. Instead, she shows off her Sarah Vaughan and Ella Fitzgerald licks, cutting through the air in a voice so sultry one can almost smell the smoke and booze. Like most performances to which much-overworked superlatives are applied, she comes across as relaxed, playful and excited. So does the rest of the gang.

Freddie Hubbard, Stanley Clarke, Joe Henderson, Lenny White, Chick Corea and Chaka Khan

'Four Friends' Falls Flat

By JOHN LYNCH

Four Friends, a Filmways production directed by Arthur Penn, is the story of three small-town buddies and the love they share for their female companion. The film centers around the many social changes associated with the turbulent 1960s and the effects these changes have on the four distinct personalities.

Of these friends, director Penn focuses very closely on the character of Danny and his many trials and tribulations. Danny, portrayed by Craig Wasson, is a Yugoslavian immigrant who has grown to love America. Danny enters the 1960s a very confused young man. He feels everything which is moral has been raped by society's dire need for change. Danny tries to escape from his father, his friends, and society by attending Northwestern University. One can quickly sense that Danny is going no where fast.

The character of Davis is a very stagnant one. Throughout the film he does not undergo much change and will always be an overweight Jewish kid who helps run the family business. Davis is the only one of the four who is not influenced or affected by the sociological changes of the times.

Tom, the third of the buddies, is also a flat character. Like David, he never develops into a strong character. One never gets to find out what motivates Tom. However, one learns that Tom goes to Viet Nam and returns with a Vietnamese wife and two children.

Georgia, the sometimes beautiful, sometimes pathetic girl, is the object of Danny's, Tom's, and David's shared love. Georgia

Thanks, But No Thanks, Rod

By GREG ANTON

Time is beginning to take its toll on Rod Stewart. Not too long ago he was the sex symbol of the Seventies and his sensual, raspy voice could enthrall and mesmerize many. Even his music was of high quality.

Today Rod Stewart's music no longer packs the emotional, sensual, and entertaining appeal it once did. Perhaps his voice is beginning to bare the strains of years of performing. Or maybe it has lost all of its magical quality because it has been incessantly bombarded over the AM and FM air waves during the past three years. Whatever the reason, Rod Stewart's mystical, seductive powers can no longer be captured on his albums.

Stewart's latest album, Tonight I'm Yours, is a lackluster project, void of any initiative. It is simply an aberrration of his last two albums. Stewart's music continues to stagnate and has become ridiculously monotonous. Pulsating disco-beats, no matter how they are re-arranged, unfortunately come off sounding obnoxiously alike. The single off the album, Young Turks, is an anthem for frustrated and confused young-lovers who find themselves caught in the middle of an unsympathetic world. Although the song does have much to say, it all seems so trite and stale. Sure the tune gets one dancing in one's seat, but it also sounds exactly like Passion, and even like Do Ya Think I'm Sexy. Stewart's music has lost all of its sophistication that once was abundant in such classics as Maggie May and The Killing of Georgie.

Tonight I'm Yours does stray from the disco-beat occasionally, however once again fail to provide exciting and creative music. Perhaps recognizing his homelessness, Stewart indulges in soft, caressing, ballad-like numbers, reminiscent of his very early music. However, these songs, such as Seesay, aimlessly ramble on to a droning and stumbling beat.

There are two bright spots on the album, despite Stewart's unwillingness to clarify and establish his goals and then commit himself to them. His remake of Bob Dylan's, Just Like a Woman, retains all of the intensity and bitter-sweet sorrow of the original version. Also, Stewart's Never Give Up On a Dream, is a musical tribute to Terry Fox. The song is an eloquent and uplifting statement about strength and courage.

Rod Stewart, hair today, gone tomorrow.

Tonight I'm Yours leaves one yearning for the past. One is confused by the inconsistent and often amateurish style of Stewart. And although Rod Stewart still possesses a vivacious, dynamic, and enchanting stage presence, one is forced to refuse what he currently has to offer on vinyl.

Friends

exemplifies the youth of the '60s, for she has no consistent ideals or values and refuses to conform to the society in which she was raised. Being a free-spirited and confused radical, she bears Tom's child, marries David, and claims to do it all for Danny. Jodi Thelan brilliantly portrays Georgia and adds a touch of realism to a somewhat unbelievable character.

Four Friends fails to develop a believable and credulous storyline. It is hard to picture these four very different people as friends. The film explores the harsher side to the '60s era and depicts a troublesome and tumultuous time. For these young people, the '60s brings upon the loss of innocence, and for Danny, the disfiguration of the America he has grown to love. The film succeeds in creating an emotional attachment towards Danny and Georgia, but this attachment comes from a sense of pity for the two. The way these four friends eventually destroy each other's dreams and stability leads one to ask the old cliche, "With friends like these, who needs enemies?"

"Death of a Salesman" Comes to Vasey

"Death of a Salesman," by Arthur Miller, will be the next production at Villanova Theatre. Lon Winston will direct the production, which will run February 10-13 and February 17-20.

"Salesman" is one of the enduring classics of the American theatre. Winner of the Pulitzer Prize for drama, this tragic portrait of a family betrayed by its own dreams has lost none of its power or relevance. Willy Loman's struggle to regain his place in a world where all the rules have changed is poignant, sometimes humorous, ultimately heart-breaking.

Veteran Philadelphia actor George Spillane will play the part of Willy. Spillane has performed with such companies as Hedgerow and People's Light, and is an instructor in theatre at Delaware County Community College. The combined professional/student cast also includes Maggie Flynn as Linda Loman, and John Lloyd and Richard Lolla as the Loman sons, Biff and Happy. Director Lon Winston, assistant professor of theatre at Villanova University, has had extensive experience teaching and directing throughout the U.S. His production, he says, will concentrate on "treating the play with dignity — remaining true to the play's own intrinsic value." While the play explores issues which are still debated today, Winston intends to preserve the flavor of the period in which the play was written.

"Death of a Salesman" will run Wednesday, February 10, through Saturday, February 13, and Wednesday, February 17, through Saturday, February 20. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. in Vasey Theatre on the Villanova campus, Lancaster and Ithan Avenues, Villanova, PA. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts and group rates available. Free parking is located directly across from the theatre on Lancaster Avenue. The campus is within walking distance from the Villanova stations of the Paoli Local and Red Arrow lines. For tickets and information, call the box office at 645-7474 or the theatre office at 645-4760.

Fondas Sparkle 'On Golden Pond'

By GARY DYER

On Golden Pond tells of Norman and Ethel Thayer, a couple married for forty-six years, spending a summer at their house on a lake in New Hampshire. The players are portrayed by Henry Fonda and Katharine Hepburn, and the use of such well-known stars helps add familiarity to the players, who are in their final years. Norman has heart trouble; his mind sometimes falters. On Norman's eightieth birthday, the couple is visited by their daughter, Chelsea (Jane Fonda), her friend Bill (Dabney Coleman), and Bill's thirteen-year-old son, Billy (Doug McKeon). After a stay in which Norman keeps wittily baiting them, Bill and Chelsea agree to leave Billy with the Thayers for a month while they go to Europe. Billy is uncomfortable at first, but soon begins to enjoy fishing with Norman. The scenes that follow show Billy trusting the older couple more and more, and Norman enjoying the presence of a visitor from the more active part of life. In a brilliantly-done scene, the two have a boat accident and must cling to a rock which protrudes from the water. Soon they are rescued from their predicament by Ethel and the mailman. A week after this episode, Chelsea returns and makes a partial reconciliation with her father before leaving with Billy.

Most of the film's drama deals with two relationships, Norman and his daughter, and Norman and Billy. Over each hangs the sense that time is running out for Norman.

Most of the film's drama deals with two relationships, Norman and his daughter, and Norman and Billy. Over each hangs the sense that time is running out for Norman. Jane Fonda is believable as Norman's daughter, who still feels like a fat, little girl around her father. Doug McKeon is even better as a boy whose primary interest is "cruising chicks," as he says in a Santa Monica surfer-type voice. Katharine Hepburn spends most of the movie being dutiful, saying cute things in a vibrant voice. But her character is not as interesting as the others are, primarily because Ethel does not develop into a unique and personable character. Rather, her job is to iron out the problems between Norman and the rest of the world. There are moments where the problems in this film seem stereotypical and silly (people trying to find themselves often are that way in movies), but the best thing in On Golden Pond, which amends for such lapses in originality, is Henry Fonda. He takes a difficult part, that of a cliched, crotchety old man, and makes it interesting enough for one to get involved and attached to the character throughout the movie.

On Golden Pond has received much calculated media hype, and seems designed to be a hit. It is a crowd-pleaser, for who will not take the family to see Henry Fonda and Katharine Hepburn, or even to see a movie taking place in peaceful summer while one is stuck in snowy January and February? Yet this film deserves to be seen, particularly because of the beauty of director Mark Rydell's slow-paced, storytelling style, which most contemporary film makers scorn. Also, Henry Fonda gives a great performance, which can be appreciated even by those who never liked, or never saw, The Grapes of Wrath.

In a Boston hospital a love affair ends, a new one begins, a Doctor battles his patient, and a man learns the true meaning of courage.

Former Hoop Coach Kraft Named Villanova Man of the Year

By MIKE HEALEY

Philadelphia's Big Five is widely renowned for producing an exciting brand of basketball. But it is equally regarded in another aspect: producing great basketball coaches. Names such as Harry Litwack, Jack Ramsay, and Jack McKinney immediately come to mind when going through the lost list. If one thinks a little bit harder, however, the name Jack Kraft will invariably come up, and deservedly so.

Jack Kraft coached Villanova from 1962-63 until 1972-73 and in that time, established himself as one of the most astute minds in the game. If records, like actions, speak louder than words, then Kraft's is up around the resounding range.

In his 12 years on the Main Line, Kraft posted a phenomenal 238-95 mark for a .715 winning percentage, the highest among six Wildcat coaches since the sport was established in 1920. He guided Villanova squads to five NCAA and five NIT tourneys; and his 1970-71 team (featuring Howard Porter) went all the way to the NCAA finals before losing to perennial champ U.C.L.A., 68-62.

Kraft was highly acclaimed for his "ball defense" and for producing outstanding teams and players. His Wildcat teams won the Big Five crown a total of three times, as well as winning the Holiday Festival Tourney in New York City. Some of the players coached by Kraft include Bill Melchionni, Chris Ford, Howard Porter, Sammy Sims, and Johnny Jones just to mention a few.

Following his tenure at Villanova, Kraft ventured northward to accept the head coaching position at the University of Rhode Island. Success was not a foreign word at U.R.I. either, as Kraft led the Rams to NCAA, NIT, and ECAC tournament berths in his last three years at the helm. His overall record ended at 340-183 (.650%) before being forced out of coaching due to a heart ailment and subsequent surgery.

Plaudits arrived late for Kraft but his winning efforts were rewarded by his being named the Villanova Varsity Club's "Man of the Year." He is only the seventh man so honored. Others include Jake Nevin, Al Severance, the late James "Jumbo" Elliot, Alex Bell, Art Mahan, and John McKenna.

The "Man of the Year Dinner" was held on January 30 at St. David's Inn and was attended by about 125 people, many of whom were players under Kraft.

Jake Nevin, long time Villanova athletic trainer and the original "Man of the Year," was reunited with Kraft at the banquet. "I thought that he looked great," says Nevin, "and I could tell that he was very proud to come back and see many of his old ballplayers."

"If I had to pick one word to describe Coach Kraft," says Sammy Sims, now an attorney in Alabama, "that word would probably be family. I say 'family' because he took the love and understanding that he bestowed on his own family and gave it to us as players."

Kraft was obviously touched by seeing so many old friends and being so honored. "You've been away for nine years," he says, "and you think maybe, well, out of sight, out of mind."

To people who know and love Villanova sports, it is doubtful that Jack Kraft will ever be forgotten.

Congratulations, Jack. Former Villanova Head Coach Jack Kraft was recently voted as the Villanova Varsity Club's "Man of the Year." Kraft posted a 238-95 record for a .715 percentage at Villanova, the highest among six Wildcat basketball coaches since the sport was established in 1920. His coaching tenure at Villanova spanned 1962-63 to 1972-73. Charlie Guida Photo

Intramurals: A Tough Team to Organize

By JOE MARUSAK

Somehow Edward Geisz manages to keep the vast system running smoothly. After all the sign-up sheets were in, 108 teams had expressed a desire to participate in the 1982 men's intramural basketball program.

It's no easy task getting that many teams into a well-organized, balanced league, but Intramural Director Geisz and his assistants have done just that. Consider the fact that league games are spread across the entire campus, and then their efforts can be even more appreciated.

As Assistant Intramural Director Lou Ferry explained, "We have our teams playing in St. Mary's, Alumni and Butler Annex. There's no single location where more than two games could take place at once."

To overcome this obstacle, the intramural office has selected student directors to oversee games at each of the three sites. As part of their job, these men officiate, keep score and time, and generally ensure the success of the league.

Action in the men's program is virtually non-stop. Contests are scheduled for every week night at all three locations. St. Mary's gets in six games each evening, as does Butler Annex. Alumni slates four contests for each night, and they are played between 4:30 and 8:30.

Each team will play a total of six games between now and February 24. After that, it's playoff time, with the top two finishers in each time bracket (3:30 league, 4:30 league and so forth) advancing to the March post-season tournament.

As the league progresses and teams begin battling for playoff spots, play, at times, can get a little physical. This is why Geisz has assigned two referees to each contest. These officials are college students and receive $3 per game.

For the most part, players in the league have no qualms about the set-up. If there is one misgiving, it would concern the clock. As Geisz has it planned, there will be two 20-minute halves, and the timer can only stop after the two-minute mark of the final half.

Remarked Don Pabst, captain of the Dandy Dons intramural squad," (The rule) throws you off if you are used to normal game standards."

Added teammate Mike Piatelli, "The game would be more realistic (without the rule)."

Some players like the idea of a running clock, and especially appreciate the two-minute rule. John Healey, an Alumni Division player, noted," I like the two-minute rule because it enabled our team to come from behind for a victory."

Other than the time clock, there seem to be no complaints. The fact that the players are for the most part pleased has to reflect on the efforts of Geisz, Ferry and the rest. They have made an organization, which could have been chaotic, into a rather efficient operation.

Women Top Temple

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova women's basketball team rebounded from two tough losses to nationally ranked Cheyney State and Rutgers by defeating Temple, 74-67, at the Field House on Saturday night.

The Cats gained an early advantage over their Big Five opponent and managed to keep on top by roughly five points for most of the first half. The Nova squad went into the locker room at the half hanging on to a four-point lead at 35-31.

In the second half Villanova was led by sophomore guard Nancy Bernhardt and senior All-America candidate Lisa Ortlip who joined forces to produce 41 points and 13 rebounds. Also contributing heavily to the Wildcat cause was junior guard Kathie Beisel who pumped in 13 points and hauled down 10 rebounds. Temple was sparked by the impressive play of forward Marilyn Stephens who netted 18 points while managing to grab a game-high 11 rebounds. The loss made the Owls Villanova's second Big Five victim, along with St. Joseph's whom the Cats disposed of earlier in the season.

"Although we were leading by five or seven for most of the game, overall we were pretty flat," observed senior forward Stephanie Vanderslice (6 points, 7 rebounds) concerning the Nova effort. "We'll just be taking it one game at a time from now on."

The Wildcats are currently ranked 13 in the nation but perhaps the effects of the two back-to-back losses at the hands of Cheyney State and Rutgers have not yet been totally shaken. "We were disappointed after those losses," said Vanderslice. "We felt that we could have, and should have, won."

Unfortunately for Villanova there is no time for looking back now as they enter the grueling home-stretch of the season. The team's next test comes tomorrow afternoon when they will be at Seton Hall University in South Orange, N.J. to clash with the

Tracksters Compete in Texas, Post Qualifying Standards

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

The Villanova men's track team travelled to Dallas, Texas last Saturday to compete in Dallas Times Invitational. Although none of the Wildcat tracksters were able to take home a first place finish, three qualified for the IC4A and NCAA Championships. In the 60 yard high hurdles, Villanova's Rodney Wilson took third place with a time of 7.25 to qualify for the championships. First place in that race went to international track sensation Renaldo Nehemiah, who finished the race in 6.28 and set a world mark.

Freshman John Marshall continued to build his reputation as he finished second in the 880 yard field with a time of 1:50.06, also good enough to qualify for the IC4A and NCAA Championships. Marshall was edged by Dave Patrick of Tennessee, who finished at 1:49.79.

Ross Donoghue, Villanova's sensational cross-country harrier also made the national standard as he placed third in the mile-run with a time of 4:01.37.

In the 440 yard sprint, Carlton Young could manage only a fifth place finish despite knocking more than a half second off his time recorded at the Philadelphia Track Classic the previous week. Young was clocked at 48.9.

Swimmers Split

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Last week the Villanova women's swim team was defeated by Drexel, 71-69. Although the meet resulted in a loss for the Wildcats, the score was very close throughout. First place winners for Villanova were: Lisa McFadden — 500 yds. and 200 yds. freestyle; Genny Mulderig — 100 yd. and 200 yd. individual medley; Beth Metzger — 100 yd. and 50 yd. butterfly and the 200 yd. freestyle relay consisting of Metzger, Mary Maier, Rita Edge, and Mulderig. Qualifying for nationals were McFadden in the 200 yd. freestyle, and Metzger in the 100 yd. butterfly.

Over the weekend, the Watercats returned with a victory over Fordham, 72-66. First place finishers for Villanova were: Mary Maier — 500 yd. and 50 yd. freestyle; Ann Vaughn 50 yd. and 100 yd. breaststroke, Genny Mulderig — 100 yd. backstroke and 100 yd. individual medley, and Beth Metzger — 200 individual medley, 200 yd. freestyle and 50 yd. backstroke, and the 200 yd. medley relay consisting of Mulderig, Vaughn, Rita Edge and Kathleen Rooney. Metzger's 200 yd. individual medley and the 200 yd. freestyle events made National qualifying standards.

Other scorers of the meet were: Sue Estep 500 yd. freestyle, Lisa McFadden 200 individual medley, Edge 100 yd. butterfly and 200 yd. freestyle, Rooney 100 yd. individual medley, Laura Fortunato 50 butterfly, Betsy Curtis 100 yd. breaststroke, and Michele Marks — diving.

Sailing Team Hosts Regional Meeting

By ELLEN McCORMACK

On Saturday, January 23, the Villanova sailing team hosted a regional meeting of the Middle Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (MAISA).

MAISA is the largest sailing power with the biggest intercollegiate sailboat racing conference in the country. Because of the power and recognition, MAISA serves as the main body of top collegiate sailors.

Thirty-nine schools are members of MAISA including such sailing powers as Navy, Cornell, Penn, Georgetown, USMA, Suny Maritime and Princeton.

At the meeting, such issues as scheduling for regattas, and deciding on times and dates for races were discussed. Each school was able to give its opinion of the previous semester's races and the manner in which they were run.

At this conference, Richard Hogan of Villanova, who last year served as president of the Villanova Sailing Team was elected as Undergraduate President of MAISA.

On Sunday January 24, the Villanova Sailing Team elected their new officers for this semester. The new President is Greg Gowen and the captain is Tom Robinson.

Watercats Coming Up

After an exciting win two weeks ago over Big East Swimming powerhouse Syracuse, the Watercats went on to win two more upping their record to 6-3. In the last week the swimmers defeated Fordham, 72-66, Penn 83-30 and lost to Maryland, 33-79.

Junior diver Carl Sporano's double wins were his first ever and helped to lead the team to victory over Fordham. Head Coach Ed Geisz was pleased with Sporano's victories in the one meter required dive and the three meter dive, "He's been struggling all year, and he's a dedicated guy."

Senior co-captains Dan Ahern, Matt Rafferty and Darrell Linder posted victories in the Fordham meet. Ahern led the 400 meter medley relay team and also won the 200 yard backstroke. Linder took two firsts in freestyle events winning both the 500 and 1,000 yard races. Rafferty was victorious in the 200 yard butterfly.

In the loss to Maryland, Dan Nies set a freshman record in the 400 yard individual medley posting a 4:19.6. Sophomore Mike Gallagher had double wins in the 200 and 100 yard freestyle.

Hawks Dismantle Villanova

By KERRY LYNCH

On City Avenue, at the Palestra, and yes, even here on the Main Line, the Hawk reigns supreme. Sunday night, the big time St. Joe's-Villanova rivalry ended in a 84-64 Hawk overthrow of the Cats.

Last Wednesday night against LaSalle the Wildcats could do no wrong; but four days later in the same building against St. Joseph's, the Cats could do no right.

Hawk play dominated from the opening tap, and before seven minutes were up, St. Joe's led, 16-4. At the half, St. Joe's led by 12 due to their shooting at a 71 percent clip.

That is the story. Shooting a mere 33 percent at the half, the Cats only upped it to 47 percent in the second half of the game. The Hawks, led by Brian Warrick and Lonnie McFarlan, averaged 67.4 percent for the game. After the game Coach Rollie Massimino admitted, "They played great. Going into the game we were the second leading team in field goal percentage in the country. Every time we tried to get back in it was a struggle."

Pressing from the very first turnover, the Cats never let down their intensity just as St. Joe's never let up on their defensive pressure or offensive scoring spree. Massimino said, "We tried to trap and they made some really good shots. They put everything in the hole."

Early in the second half on a series of Villanova baskets and Hawk turnovers, the Cats sparked by Dwayne McClain and John Pinone, came within seven. But then Tony Costner hit two in a row and McFarlan put one in from the baseline and from there th Hawks continued, in Massimino' words, "To do a good job co trolling the tempo."

Only Pinone and McClain ma it into double figures, Pinone wi 16 and McClain with 18. Stewa Granger and Ed Pinckney we shut down, shooting 2 for 8 and for 8 respectively.

Hawk coach Jim Boyle sai "I'm surprised he (Granger showed such courage. I wouldn want to get into a hassle with Je fery (Clarke). He's a very intens guy."

Boyle also down played the im portance of the game as a cli series rivalry or a grudge match but was more pleased that hi team beat a team with a to twenty ranking. "It was a terrifi team effort, you don't beat a tea like that unless your guys pla progressive."

Hoyas Continue Nova Dominance

Georgetown Edges Cats

By JIM FEMIA

Senior guard Eric Floyd scored 18 of his game-high 29 points in the second half to lift Georgetown to a 83-72 victory over Villanova in a Big East match-up Wednesday night at the Palestra. Villanova and Georgetown now stand atop the Big East with 6-3 records while Connecticut has two games in hand with a 5-2 mark.

"Eric has been playing his best ball of the season," claimed Hoya Head Coach John Thompson. "I told him to go out and do his thing. We needed his outside shooting and tonight we got it." Floyd hit 7 of 13 from the field in the second half and continuously broke the Wildcat zone defense with long-range jumpers from the perimeter.

"We played one heck of game," stated Villanova He Coach Rollie Massimino. "We h just as much of a chance to this thing as they did. But we h tled them every second and play with great intensity."

Coach Thompson praised Vi lanova's hustle, "They were ver aggressive all night. When you play a great team like Villanov the game usually depends on wha happens in the closing minutes We were just fortunate to have th ball at the right time when w were up by a point or two, puttin Villanova in a position where they had to foul."

Junior guard Stewart Grange orchestrated the Villanova offens having one of his top games of th season. "This was Stu's best gam since the Boston College game not the best," claimed Coach Ma simino. "He did all you can as for. He shot the ball well, pen trated the zone and took control our offense." Granger finish with 13 points and passed out assists.

John Pinone chipped in points while Aaron Howard adde 12. Ed Pinkney led the Cats wi nine rebounds and also co tributed 11 points.

Basketball

Although this was an 11 point game, it was a game that could of gone either way. John Pinone converted a free-throw to cap a three point play to pull Villanova even at 65-65 with a little over six minutes to play. Georgetown's defense stiffened causing Villanova turnovers and a dunk by Floyd gave the Hoya's a 75-70 lead with one minute left. But Villanova came right back to close the gap to three with a John Pinone tap in. The Cats chose to foul freshman center Patrick Ewing, but Ewing made two clutch free throws and the lead was back to five.

Women Runners-Up to Big Five Title

By BEVERLY REILLY

The women's track team was runner up to the Big Five Indoor Track Crown this past Saturday at Widener College. It was a combination of first place finishes backed up by a number of other key performances that spurred the Wildcats to a close second place.

The team outscored rivals West Chester, the University of Pennsylvania and LaSalle. However, the Wildcats could not capture the title over the determined Owls of Temple. The final score was 68-54.

Although it is still mid-season, the team produced some individual honors. Junior Peggy Stewart captured first in the high jump along with third in the hurdles and fourth in the long jump. Carol Gilsinger also gained individual honors by placing first in the two mile run. Gilsinger broke the string with a time of 11:11 followed by teammate Beverly Reilly in third.

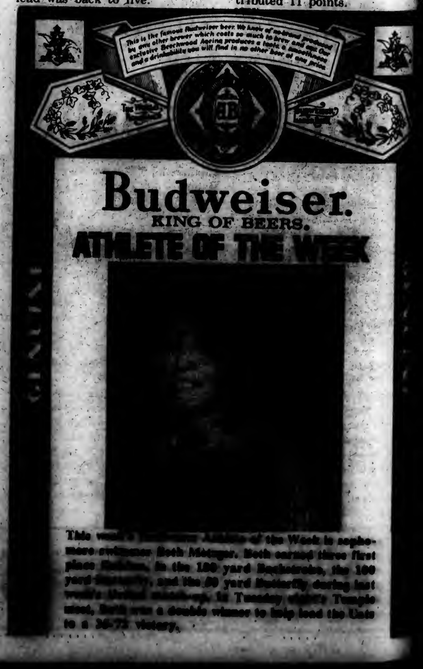
However, the women tracksters weekend competition did not end on Saturday. The Villanova thinclads ran into more competition Sunday against Princeton and Temple at Princeton's Jadwin Gymnasium.

Whitfield highlighted the meet with her performance in the 440-yard dash. Whitfield crossed the line in 57.7 to edge out a Temple runner (57.8) for first place. Other highlights were provided by freshman McGowan, who ran away with a first place in the 3000m, and Peggy Stewart, who jumped to a 5'6" first place in the high jump.

The mile relay (Stewart, Veronica McIntosh, Eva Marie Berardi, Amelia Cain) and the two mile relay (Jane Ashton, Patty Bradley, Mary Ellen McGowan, Jennifer Whitfield) teams also captured the gold.

Second place finishers in the meet were Bradley in the long jump, Whitfield in the 60-yard dash and McGowan in the mile. Other key scorers were Valerie Allen and Jane Ashton placing fourth and fifth respectively in the 440-yard dash. Also, Cain and Berardi took fourth and fifth in the 880-yard run.

The Wildcat women return to Jadwin Gymnasium again this weekend to compete in the Princeton Relays.



This week's Athlete of the Week is sophomore swimmer Scott Mazique. Scott earned three first place finishes, in the 100 yard Backstroke, the 100 yard Freestyle, and the 50 yard Butterfly during last week's dual meet competition in Tuesday night's meet. Scott was a double winner to help lead the Nova to a 56-72 victory.

'82-'83 Tuition Increase Proposed

By KIM RUSHTON

The University Senate Budget Committee has proposed tuition hikes for the 1982-83 academic year ranging from 13.5 to 15.5 percent. The committee also proposed that room and board be raised 12.5 percent.

Should the increases be adopted as proposed, by the Board of Trustees, the tuition for students in the College of Arts & Sciences and College of Commerce and Finance would rise 14 percent, from $4,290 to $4,890, while Engineering and Nursing students would see their tuition fees rise 13.5 percent to $5,040, as compared to $4,435 this year. Tuition for Garey Law School will jump the most, from $4,512 to $5,220, a 15.5 percent rise.

Room and board fees under the recently proposed increases would rise to $3,120, a 12.5 percent increase over the current $2,775.

Vice-President for Financial Affairs Gary Fenner stated that the proposals are one of the first steps of a complex budget planning system. "The first objective of this whole process is to come up with a balanced budget, where expenditures are counter-balanced by revenues," stated Fener. "That is the major goal."

According to Fenner, the major problem at Villanova is that the school is so dependent on tuition for revenue. He explained that approximately 95 percent of the budget comes from "student-generated" revenue.

Student Body President Bob Rosengarth expressed displeasure with the proposed tuition hikes. "The thing that gets me is that the latest reports say inflation is supposed to be lower this year than last year, and yet the tuition rates are going up at a greater rate than inflation," commented Rosengarth.

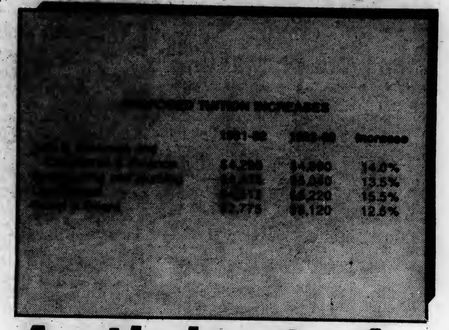
Rosengarth felt that the tuition increases, in addition to the Reagan education cuts, are like "two knives in the backs of students."

He continued to say that people who believe that the monies from tuition increases will be used for funding improvements in classrooms and equipment are mistaken, since all expenditures of this nature come from the capital budget. "These increases do not represent what we are getting," commented Rosengarth.

Fenner stated that the school has no choice but to raise tuition because of the rising costs of running the University. He expressed sympathy for those students who will be faced with the tuition hikes and the Reagan education cuts. He commented, "It is difficult because students are getting caught on both sides, with both tuition and the education cuts, but any tuition increases that are adopted are simply for the purpose of balancing the budget."

Rosengarth stated that he intends to vote against the proposed tuition increases at the presently proposed rates, and hopes the Senate will vote accordingly.

"However, no matter what the Senate decides, I'm sure the Trustees would act on their own anyhow," added Rosengarth.



Education Cuts Anticipated

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

College students will soon find it harder to afford a college education following the Reagan administration budget proposals announced Saturday.

Explaining that the "responsibility for education rests primarily with parents and with state and local governments," the budget proposed cutting $636 million from aid to colleges.

An estimated 247,000 Pennsylvania and New Jersey college students could be affected by the reduction in federal education funds starting 1983-84.

Available financial aid is now budgeted at about $3 billion. The Reagan proposal is calling for a cut to $1.8 billion.

According to the American Council of Education (ACE), the budget cuts could reduce or eliminate $147,000 of the 260,000 graduate and undergraduate students now receiving financial assistance in Pennsylvania.

The administration is also proposing the elimination of all Guaranteed Student Loans for graduate and professional students, the council said.

About five million students receive the aid grants or loans nationwide, with the great majority from families earning under $25,000.

Arthur Switzer of the Financial Aid department said he really doesn't know how students are going to afford college.

"We really wonder how the students are going to afford the cost," said Switzer. "The impact was felt this year by the initial cuts. Whether it really reduced enrollment, we can't tell."

Last year, when the initial cuts were announced and further slashes in aid suggested, Vincent Femia, director of financial aid, told the Villanovan that the situation then was the worst he had seen it in his twenty years at Villanova. "There's going to be a lot of unmet need," stated Femia.

The following cuts are proposed in the new Reagan budget:

Basic Education Opportunity Grants, which have been available to students from families with incomes up to $27,000. Under the 1983 proposal, ACE says almost one-third of the recipients would be ineligible. No student would be eligible whose family earns more than $14,000 annually.

The College Work Study Program (CWS), provides 80 percent of the wages to employ needy students working for colleges or non-profit agencies. CWS would be cut by 27 percent.

Three other programs could be cut entirely: The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant; the State Student Incentive Grants, which provided state-matched funds; and the National Defense Student Loans payable after graduation.

"This is really going to hurt the graduate and law school students," said Switzer. "If they eliminate the Guaranteed Student Loans and the SEOG, what will they do?"

Graduate School Dean Bernard Downey emphasized that a division of students must be recognized. "There are approximately 2,200 students in all the graduate program," reported Downey. "Of these, 1,800 are working in order to pay for the graduate school education cost. Five hundred, maybe a little less, have taken out loans.

"Of the 500, maybe half really needed those loans. Those students are the ones who couldn't afford to go to graduate school without the loans. The other half of the students saw the advantage of taking out the government-protected, low-interest loans. Reagan's cutbacks will affect those who couldn't go to graduate school without the loans."

"All the financial aid available to undergraduates does not apply to graduate school. There is no question about it. There will be a decrease in the graduate school student body if those people who couldn't have come without the loans do not get them."

According to J.W. Peltason, ACE president, withdrawn federal funds cannot possibly be replaced. "There is no possibility that the funds withdrawn by the federal government can or will be replaced by states or private donors," said Peltason. "College costs will go up, but the ability to pay those costs will go down dramatically."

The cuts "will be a disaster for students in higher education," he said.

Villanova is expected to announce its tuition increase for 1982-83 sometime this month.

New Registration in Works

By DAVID POMA

Villanova University is examining possible alternatives to the present system of pre-registration, according to officials in the administration.

David Smith, the university registrar, commented, "there have been many problems with pre-registration. Many people just aren't satisfied." Smith says that he has asked all the deans to evaluate the need for a new registration procedure. One change that Smith would like to see is better coordination of advising periods and registration. "I feel strongly that advising should be separated from the pre-registration process. Too much time is wasted in the whole process."

Acting vice-president for Academic Affairs, Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., acknowledges the need for changes in the registration process. "Students should never have to stand in those crazy lines. It's becoming very difficult for everybody. There must be something we can do. We're here to serve the students."

The deans of each academic college within the university are evaluating possible measures to take. Dean of Arts and Sciences, Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., wants "a positive approach to registration. We want a minimum of inconvenience and a maximum ease of scheduling. The system we have now is terribly inconvenient for students. I'd hate to stand in those lines. I don't even like waiting in line at the Acme."

Alvin A. Clay, dean of Commerce and Finance comments that "all the colleges have different requirements so we need a system that suits all the colleges."

More specifically, Smith, the registrar, envisions "a system wherein the student, after scheduling, would enter a lottery where all registration procedures would be completed. We hope the student leaves there with a complete schedule." This kind of system, according to Smith would end the need for drop and add.

Dean O'Malley admits that there are problems which will have to be solved before the new system goes into effect. According to O'Malley, a system that embodies preference to seniors is not

Tollefson Teaches Media Savvy

By SHARON WINTERS

Don Tollefson, sports director for WPVI-TV in Philadelphia, is teaching a speech communication course titled, "Broadcast Management", this semester. Tollefson feels that the class provides a link between theory and practice for communications majors. His purpose is to pass along the knowledge that he has accumulated in the last eight years as a professional in the field.

The overview of the broadcast course consists of the most important priorities at a television station from a general manager's perspective. Tollefson lectures about the various departments, such as news, production and sales. Further, he emphasizes the importance of good, detailed work. The class often includes discussions and anecdotes about daily changes in the business, "providing a real case study" into the media, according to Tollefson.

The basic requirements for broadcast management include problem solving and in-class drills. A student needs to learn to "think on his feet" because media work often involves the unexpected, Tollefson said.

"I'm delighted with the experience (of teaching) so far," related Tollefson. "I learn more about my job in the hour that I spend here twice a week." Teaching has allowed Tollefson to hear the perceptions of students who will be professionals in the media. Their opinions provide a new insight, he noted.

Tollefson believes that the interchange of knowledge between current media professionals and academians is important. Professors and professionals should take the time to broaden their perspectives, he feels.

As a student studying mass media at Stanford University, Tollefson heard lectures by guest speakers. However, he regretted that the lectures were not given on a regular basis when he was in college. He feels the experience of current workers in the field serve to illustrate and expedite the educational process.

Along with the exposure to both practical and theoretical ideas, Tollefson considers a broad range of knowledge preferable to a specific or narrow focus. He views two major problems with a narrow scope. First, one could become infatuated with a medium that one knows nothing about. Or, a person could become enchanted with the field that he has chosen.

Currently, the media is looking for diversity, according to Tollefson. A bachelor degree along with internships or part-time experience is a greater asset for a student than advanced degrees alone. The media is looking for people who can demonstrate their skill, he noted.

Tollefson explained that a combination of three factors is the key to media success. Initially, a general academic awareness of how the media works is important. "Street smarts" or practical ability is the second factor. Third, and foremost in some ways, is hustle, according to Tollefson. One must be able to "sell" his or her abilities. Further, the hustle also includes being able to work long hours, often under pressure.

"TV is not a nine-to-five business," Tollefson said. Most companies close over the weekend, even though employees might take work home, he continued. In broadcasting, the business is open 24 hours every day.

Time organization is important to Tollefson. In order to teach and work in the media, he uses his time effectively. He believes that good organization allows him to do twice as much work, in half the time.

The broadcast schedule for Tollefson begins at 2 p.m. and ends around midnight. In between these hours, there can be tremendous crises or boredom, he explained. The glamour that some perceive in the business is "mythology," according to Tollefson. There are times after a broadcast when "you don't understand how it all happened," he said.

Tollefson can be done with his lead work at the television station by 3 p.m. On days when everything goes well, he can edit video tape, do interviews and work on scripts. Then, he has the time to read mail and answer phone calls. However, sometimes, the video machine "eats the tape" or the computer breaks down. All of these things are unpredictable and time consuming, he said.

Working on television is like making a movie every day, Tollefson remarked. "There are three hours of on-the-air TV every day," he noted. His segment of the show involves the cooperation of about 25 people. "A lot of things can go wrong," he added. But, when everything goes right, the feeling can not be matched, Tollefson commented.

Tollefson has a philosophy about working in the media. The merits are in ratio to the problems, he feels. "The rewards in a crisis-oriented job are far greater than those of a predictable job," he opined.

Students at Villanova seem to have fairly accurate ideas about broadcasting, according to Tollefson. "I've found more correct than incorrect notions (about the media). It's a testimony to good teaching," he said. Tollefson feels the school deserves credit, too. The students have had internships and other experiences with the business, he added.

Tollefson believes that the college environment will be "helpful." "I don't intend to stay in TV," he added. Perhaps, in ten years time writing fiction and non-fiction will be a full-time career, he explained. Tollefson sees the academic world as a "link" with his interest in writing. Currently, he is working on a sports novel. The book is not a typical view of sports; sports are portrayed as a microcosm of life, he explained.

Although Tollefson has always enjoyed sports, he considers himself to be a journalist who can report on any story. "A good reporter should be able to cover anything," he commented.

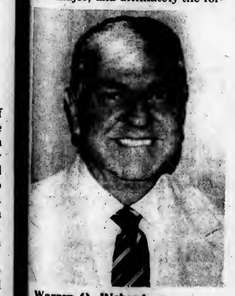
Villanova's communication arts program is now officially a separate department major.

Formerly operating out of the speech department, the program is currently under an evaluation of needs.

The communication arts program had its beginnings in 1975, when Villanova created a communications concentration. Then in 1980, Villanova formally approved of a communications arts major, and ultimately the formation of a communications arts department. Since its beginnings, the number of students involved with the program has grown to 180.



Warren O. Richardson,

The chief obstacles that Warren O. Richardson, chairman of communication arts, sees in the formation of the department are in the areas of office space and equipment. Although Richardson admits that the shortage of equipment is a disadvantage, he does not see the shortage as a major problem, for Villanova's program is not technically oriented. Richardson explained that the technical aspect of the communications industry is very dynamic, and the technical training that only sophisticated equipment would allow would still become obsolete in a few years. Richardson stressed that Villanova's communication arts program concentrates on the theory of communication, with a strong emphasis on a liberal arts education. Richardson stated, "We are trying to create an educated person that can adapt to a changing field; — ours is a liberal arts approach to a quality undergraduate program which will enable people to go into the field of communication."

Richardson explained that there are currently ten teachers in the communication arts department. However he added that the figure is misleading because there are many other teachers from other departments. Richardson explained that the department will rely on other departments, specially the English department.

Richardson also said that because the program has become so popular, the admittance into the program will become more competitive, and thus assure a high degree of quality to the program. When asked about the progress of the program, Richardson replied, "fantastic." He also stated that the cooperation from the administration has also been very supportive.

When asked why he chose a communication arts major, junior Kevin Connor replied,"I looked at the other arts courses, and I decided that communications would be the best. — I like it (communications arts); — the courses are interesting and more fun than I thought that they would be."

When asked if he thought that there were enough courses in the major, Connor replied, "Yes, however there could be more specialization, but there are enough courses to get the general picture."

Connor felt that there was definitely enough equipment.

Another communication arts major, who asked not to be identified, stated that there are not enough courses. She said that there is not enough specialization and that the area of public relations in particular needs improvements. She added that students "who took advantage of the internship program were at a tremendous advantage."

Villanova's 1981 Student Handbook states the purpose of the Student Government Association (S.G.A.) as a "channel of communication between students and the University, to promote student legislation, and to assist in problems involving students and the Villanova community." According to Bob Rosengarth, the student body president, "the S.G.A. is basically powerless."

"The Senate (of which the S.G.A. is a part) is too bureaucratic, Rosengarth said. "Most of the problems need immediate solutions. There is a bureaucratic run-around, and by the time you get where you want to be, the term is over." The student body president serves a one year term.

In a recent "On Campus" feature (the Villanovan, Feb. 5, 1982), students were asked what the student government was doing for them. Several responses expressed no knowledge of S.G.A. activities. Among the projects the S.G.A. is currently involved in are a new meal plan, a revision of the visitation policies in dormitories, and "the most important thing," adds Rosengarth, "a recommendation that all incoming freshmen be allowed to live on campus."

The S.G.A. has also formed a facilitating committee to channel all student grievances to the proper division. This committee is comprised of members of the Association of Commuting Students, the Resident Student Association, the Intra-Fraternity Council, the Villanova Union, the student body president and vice-president, and the director of Student Activities.

As far as Rosengarth is concerned, his voice is limited. "My powers are restricted. I haven't really achieved any of my goals, but I'm not disappointed." The S.G.A. itself is ready to act on any student grievance. "The student grievance forms are publicized, but not often utilized," Rosengarth said. "A student doesn't need to put down his name and address, only his grievance and a suggested remedy. In this way," Rosengarth added, "we bring the student concerns directly to the area of concern."

As a member of the SGA, Rosengarth has authored the Student Bill of Rights, a proposal of rules and regulations guaranteeing the rights of any student attending classes at Villanova. Included in the proposal was the motion to allow student organizations the right to invite and hear any person or persons of their choosing, (Sect, 3, Art. 6).

Campaigning for student body president and University Senate will begin the third week in March. Presidential candidates must obtain a petition signed by at least 10 percent of the Undergraduate, University College, Graduate School and Law School students, collectively in order to be placed on the ballot.

Connelly Center Workers Rated

By DIANA MURRAY

Without employees who excel in their responsibilities at work, the Connelly Center could not operate. The administrators at the center are pleased with the performance of the employees.

According to Marc Tuchman, director of the building, the purpose of the center is to provide a service to the Villanova community as well as to provide an extension of classroom learning applied to the work environment. Employees, through job responsibilities and interaction with fellow workers, grow and learn. Tuchman said of the employees, "The students here are tops. They're outstanding workers, excel at their various responsibilities, and because they care, play a major role in the operation of the center."

Other members of the administration agree. Anthony Alfano, assistant director for business operations, said, "Ninety-five to 99 percent of the students are excellent. They do an excellent job. Very few, if any, are not cooperative." Charles Murnin, ticket manager, who works with approximately 20 students weekly, added, "The initiative and integrity of the students who work for me is beyond question." Greg Charma, who hires all the employees that work in food services, said, "I like the caliber of the students here."

The Connelly Center employs approximately 200 students, both regular and work study. One hundred and forty of these students work in the food services area. Students' starting salary is minimum wage, ($3.35), although some are paid more because they have a greater amount of responsibility or have worked for a longer period of time. Although students may work anywhere from a few to 20 hours a week, the average student works between 10 and 15 hours weekly.

When asked why they worked at the Connelly Center, the students answered in a variety of ways. Brian Reid, who works at the information desk, answered, "Pin money, plus it looks good on a resume. I like to meet people too." Mark Ramos, who has been a facility aid for over a year, answered, "It's easy because you choose your own hours. And it's convenient." Others, like Franco DeAngelo, said it helps pay the tuition and buy the books, as well as provide money for "personal spending pleasures." Kimberly Holt-Serra works at the Belle Air Terrace because she is married and the weekly "eight hours of work on Friday nights helps with the bills."

All of the students interviewed said that they enjoy working at the Connelly Center. Cathleen DeGenova, who has been a cashier for a year, explained why. "I like the people and the atmosphere." "The people" was the response heard most often. Franco DeAngelo added, "Everyone has a nice personality," and Brian Reid echoed, "The people are a lot of fun."

All of the students interviewed replied that working interferes little, if at all, with their studies.

Students were questioned about how they felt about the management of the Connelly Center. DeGenova replied, "I think it could be a lot more efficient" but Holt-Serra responded, "It has improved." Markopoulos judges management to be "fair to good" while others like Robert Breslin and Harold Grover of food service simply replied, "Excellent." Others wished to make no comment.

In the evenings, the Connelly Center's responsibilities are handled by a night and weekend manager and by a food service supervisor in the Belle Air Terrace. These people are especially important to the center's operations. Peg Mason commented, "I have heard nothing but raves about the night managers and how considerate they are. I have never had any complaints about a night manager." When asked about the abilities of the food service supervisors, Greg Charma answered, "We work together as a team. Without them, the Belle Air Terrace could not put out a quality product."

Robert Breslin, who started working in the center as a game room attendent, is presently a night manager. Bob's average 15 weekly hours do not interfere with his studies, he said. Bob works at the center for "the money and the experience," but he enjoys working because "I meet new people." Bob enjoys the employees also and said the students respect him. "There are problems, but it's not an on-going thing," he explained.

The biggest problem of a large student staff comes at exam time. Many students may come in late or not show up at all. The days before vacations are also a problem, although the students are not generally abusive. The management understands that school work, and perhaps even social life, must come before work at the center.

There are a variety of students with a variety of job responsibilities and interests.

Tuchman commented, "Without the combination of a good professional staff and a good student staff, the Connelly Center could not put out so much in such a high quality."

altogether fair. "In Arts and Sciences, there's greater flexibility as to what courses can be taken. Commerce and Finance can't function that way," according to O'Malley, because of their highly structured programs. "You can't give a senior a course if there are freshmen who must take it."

system in operation as soon as possible. "A lot of times things are done to suit the administration. I believe we should think of the students first, the faculty second and the administration third."

An Open Letter

To the Villanova community:

The editorial which appeared in the Villanovan two weeks ago, "Abortion: A Woman's Decision", has created a controversy within the University.

A few points needed to be clarified, not only specifically concerning the editorial itself, but concerning the nature of any editorial appearing in the Villanovan.

The editorial was not written with malicious or destructive intent. It was not the purpose of the editorial to subvert or denigrate the teachings or beliefs of the Catholic Church regarding abortion. Rather, it was an attempt by the authors to discuss a current and important issue. Unfortunately, we did not anticipate how deeply this position would offend the Catholic community. Had we realized this before-hand, we would not have printed the editorial.

In future, we will attempt to adhere to the provisions of the "Guidelines for University-Supported Publications."

It is also important to note one more point: all opinions expressed in the Villanovan are the sole responsibility of the Editor and the Editorial Board and in no way should be construed as representing the official opinions of the University.

We apologize to those we have offended.

Students Affected by Education Cuts and Tuition Hikes

In the proposed budget announced last week for the coming fiscal year, President Reagan is seeking to dramatically slash federal aid for higher education. The news comes at a particularly difficult time for all Villanova students, who are also being faced with tuition increases for next year averaging over 14 percent.

Overall, Reagan is asking Congress to cut educational aid by at least $2 billion. According to the American Council on Education, the student aid cuts, among other things, would deny Pell Grants to 1 million students whose family incomes are over $14,000, and would eliminate 1.4 million awards of other grants, work-study jobs, and loans. Reagan is also seeking to make it more difficult for students to obtain Guaranteed Student Loans, and graduate students would be excluded from this program totally.

And on the heels of this comes word that once again tuition costs at Villanova will be sky-rocketing.

One wonders how much longer the average student will be able to afford a higher education. The vicious cycle seems to just continue with no end in sight — aid being slashed at the same time as costs climb.

Here at Villanova, the cycle is especially painful because tuition and room and board fees provide well over 90 percent of the University's operating revenues. This means that students are being forced to shoulder an undue burden in financing the day-to-day operating costs of the school at a time when they are increasingly unable to do so.

It seems, in light of the Reagan cuts and the tuition increases, that the University needs to re-evaluate its financial system. No longer can it rely almost exclusively on the tuition and room and board fees of its students to cover expenses. There has to be a greater effort on the part of the University's administration to search for and develop alternative sources of funding. An intense, well-directed campaign to solicit contributions from alumni, foundations, and corporations, in place of the half-hearted attempts now being made, might possibly provide a solution.

In any event, something must be done, and it must be done quickly if Villanova is not to turn into a school affordable to only the economic elite. The federal government under Reagan is reneging on its 25-year-old commitment to help all who desire an education to get one; Villanova should and must not be a party to this.

Letters to the Editor

Football R.I.P.

Dear Editor:

For almost a year, the dropping of football has been in the forefront of Villanova news. In response to the Board of Trustees' shockingly sudden decision student and alumni groups acted zealously creating football revival programs, writing protest letters and delivering pro-football harangues. Yet, if a year has shown anything, it has demonstrated that the cards are just too stacked against football reinstatement.

The cold facts are that the Villanova community lacks the serious monetary and spiritual commitment to build a football machine in the 1980s. The initial protests of anger are fading into shrugs of submission and only a few grim speakers remain to cry to a wilderness. But maybe this is for the best after all. Villanova football was like an aging friend with a proud past and a lot of heart, which is more than I can say for most collegiate teams, doomed by the times. Isn't it only fitting that we offer an "Irish toast" to the good times that were and forget the bad, instead of trying to kick our fallen friend from his deathbed? So, here's to you, Wildcat football! Rest in peace.

Bob Donnelly

Best Wishes

Editors Note: The following is a copy of a letter sent to Mr. Charles Cioppi.

Dear Charles Cioppi:

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I congratulate you upon your 35 years as an employee of the housekeeping department of Villanova. I, as well as my staff, want to commend you for all the fine years you have given, not only the time but the unselfish work you have performed and performed well.

Our department is a service department and functions as such. A fine man like you has helped maintain our image and through your 35 years you have given your all to prove this. Also, you have given pride to the word "janitor." Why? Because you have never shown negligence or refused to do your required task.

So, Mr. Charles Cioppi, congratulations and may God be good to you.

Sincerely,
Carlton Clapper, Director
Housekeeping Department

Prof. Praised

Dear Editor:

I am currently a junior and feel that it is time to spot-light one of Villanova's professors. In my three years here, I can remember perhaps five teachers with admiration. This is a low number for almost six semesters.

Dr. Joseph Thompson is a political science professor. When lecturing, he does not stick by strict, hard-nosed teaching. Rather, he poses thought-provoking and interesting subject matter, along with the course lecture material.

Dr. Thompson is an expert on Northern Ireland. He lived there and in London along with travelling throughout Europe. He is on several board of advisors, works closely with the State Department, and has worked for the United Nations, a Wall Street brokerage firm, and has taught high school. It seems that with this wide and diverse background that Dr. Thompson might find teaching unchallenging or unrewarding. This is not the case. When speaking with him he has emphasized his love for teaching and his committment to the transference of knowledge to his students.

I found it necessary to bring attention to this fine teacher; he is an asset to our University. I have gained a deep respect for this man which I will never lose.

Editorial Response

Dear Sirs:

The overwhelming response to the editorial of Jan. 29, entitled "Abortion, A Woman's Decision" appears to be what could have been expected, given the theological mission under which Villanova University exists. One wonders, however, exactly what a meeting of the University's Publications Board entails. Certainly the Villanovan fails to carry out its responsibility to its readers by neglecting to provide more information about the details of such a meeting.

One can presume (not assume, however) that the overall focus in the meeting would be on the action taken, if any, against the newspaper. Indeed, two replies as printed were in regard to the journalistic integrity of the Villanovan, rather than responses to the issues raised.

Abortion is an active issue in today's society. It is the responsibility of every citizen in a democratic society to educate him or herself about such issues. One can educate oneself as one wishes, yet the importance of the newspaper in forming an intellectual decision cannot be denied. By providing a forum for responsible and public debate, it carries out the prime mission of any public organization in a republic.

The University, as an institution of education in this republic, cannot and should not attempt to interfere in that mission. The members of the public (in this case within the University community, but not solely of that community) have the need for intelligent debate on social issues. It is inconceivable that any educational institution, no matter how divine its origins, should presume to interfere with that debate.

Professor Criticizes University Lecture Policy

I would like to register my strong disapproval of a Student Life practice which discourages — or makes impossible — free, public discussion of important but controversial topics. Since a central purpose of a university is precisely to foster such discussions, Student Life policy is frustrating one of Villanova University's central purposes.

Emile Durkheim would not be surprised by this kind of thing. Long ago he explained how policies develop within an institution and take on an independent life of their own. Typically no individual can be identified as the originator of the policy and rarely will specific people be willing to defend or take responsibility for it. It is also not uncommon for these practices to run contrary to or frustrate the publicly acknowledged goals of the institution. Apparently this phenomenon is to be taken as a given in institutional and bureaucratic life.

The particular practice was brought to my attention when the Philosophy Club invited a professor from St. Joseph's University to lead a discussion at one of their meetings. This professor, whose specialty is moral philosophy, chose to speak on abortion. However, when club members attempted to reserve a room for this discussion they were told by Student Affairs that approval for this discussion could not be given unless arrangements were made to have a member of the religious studies department present at the lecture.

Investigating this for the club, I was told that this practice was necessary to insure that the University not appear to be sponsoring a presentation which might conflict with Church teaching. Despite the presence of philosophy department faculty and our speaker's academic credentials of Cardinal Dougherty to LaSalle to Notre Dame to St. Joseph's, apparently only the presence of someone from religious studies could guarantee that this misperception would not occur. (One wonders if a member of religious studies who defends the legitimacy of abortion could satisfy this requirement).

Before considering the significance of this practice, we need to recognize just how selective it is. The Catholic Church has taken official stands on every important moral issue yet only certain issues appear subject to this policy. For example, it would be foolish for us to expect similar restrictions on the Accounting Society when they invite speakers onto campus to discuss (indeed, defend!) private ownership of the means of production despite at least three Papal encyclicals criticizing the morality of this practice. So why limit discussions of abortion? The only explanation is that abortion, unlike private ownership of the means of production, is a topic likely to generate an emotion-filled response. (Students in the Political Union whose debate of the restoration of football initially received similar treatment, and students who sought to stage the cancelled PLO-Israeli debate last semester should be noticing interesting parallels here.) In practice, then, Student Life's policy seems to be to avoid controversy and not, as initially thought, to discourage presentations which might conflict with Church teaching.

If this is the case, Student Life makes the free and open discussion of any issue hostage to the emotional whims of the community. Traditionally, a university is just the place where dispassionate and reasoned discussion of controversial issues is not simply tolerated but encouraged.

It seems to me that if the four years students spend at Villanova are to be more than a process of indoctrination, and if faculty and administrators are to fulfill their professional responsibilities, students must be free to discuss any topic no matter how controversial. Further, these discussions cannot be limited to the narrow and somewhat artificial boundaries of the classroom, but actively must be encouraged in student organizations, public forums and community meetings as well. Rather than discouraging these discussions, Student Life ought to be defending and promoting them. To do less is to fail in our obligations as a university.

Senior Year: Time is Running Out

It is the last semester of her senior year. It is supposed to be fun. She is rounding off her college career with easy courses and the last of the requirements. She is not coming back next year. The world is waiting. It is a time of reckoning.

People ask her, with great concern, what she will be doing next year. She does not know, really, but one cannot say that. Four years of college and she does not know? She is embarrassed. "Next year" has loomed as a sort of vague possibility, something to plan for later. She tells people she is looking for a job, that she will take anything that is offered, as long as it is "in her field." Of course, everyone knows, understands, that there aren't many jobs in that field right now. Times are hard and she did not major in engineering. She realizes now she should have. But, on the other hand, she did have fun in college. She tells herself that learning about life was just as important as scholastics.

She is concerned. By April she will be worried; by June, frantic. She must start to look for a job. She wishes she could off-handedly say, "Oh, I'm going to grad school." That always impresses people. But she has neither the finances nor the desire to continue her education. And, besides she needs to earn some money. One's family comes to expect it.

She considers life after graduation. A job, somewhere, somehow, will materialize eventually. She will have no more homework, no more tests. She will also have no more month-long or summer-long vacations. She will work a 40-hour week with people of all ages. She will not be back to greet her friends in the fall. She will make new friends, with promises to keep in touch with the old. Life will change.

She is depressed. She thought she would be able to handle the planning of her future by now. She is not ready. What if she fails? What if she doesn't?

She realizes she is being silly. Nobody really cares what she does. They are much more concerned with what they will do, and, in the end, as she has learned through nearly eight semesters, she will pull through, she will find a job, she will discover life after college. There is reason to be worried. But not yet. Right now, she is still a senior. She is entitled to a few more good times. She'll just avoid people who might ask her what she'll be doing next year. Can't they think of anything else to say?

To the Editor:

Villanova University is an educational institution. The free and open exchange of ideas is a necessary part of education. This holds true even when the exchange of ideas is about an emotion-laden issue like abortion.

Therefore, your editorial, I believe, "subscribes to the principle of responsible freedom of expression."

Dear Editor,

If I may, I would like to add a few calm, logical, detached, rational reflections on the unbelievably stupid comment written by those nerds who don't agree with me.

First of all, let it be unequivocably noted that this Villanova community is a university. As such, it is committed to the pursuit of the truth. Now, as all sapient people know, the truth, though a self-revealing, efficacious entity, manifests itself in a wonderous fashion. In the very clash of ideas themselves, the truth has a way of imposing itself on all those rational beings who remain open to it in all its variations.

There is, in fact, only one blasphemy against the God of truth — to hold that it functions in one way and one way only. All those who believe they have covered the truth labor under the cruelest of misconceptions.

One great blessing in this arena is the opportunity of witnessing falsity, and stupidity. Once uttered, falsity serves to reinforce the truth just as the ugly makes the beautiful even more attractive when placed next to it. Why is it that people wish to deny access to certain ideas? It only makes them more attractive by hiding their intrinsic ugliness.

What this means, in effect, is that when a student in an editorial in the Villanovan states a position, it must be viewed primarily as an academic matter. If the editorial is vulgar or in bad taste, that is not to be tolerated. If, however, it is an argument based upon reasoned deduction, it ought not to be censored. Even if the opinion seems to be contrary to the ordinary teaching of the magisterium to which every Catholic university ought to be sensitive. Galileo's Starry Messenger was in direct conflict with the heading magisterium of the seventeenth century church. Hopefully, Villanova would have published Galileo's work or astronomical observations anyway. Is there a theologian who would like to defend infallibility in terms of the ordinary teaching of the magisterium? If so, I would suggest that he or she is on pretty flimsy ground.

Theology departments and philosophy departments are involved in the business of education, not indoctrination, and our alumni and friends ought to know the difference. We may think that some ideas are ill-advised and unfounded, but we must fight to our academic depths for the right to utter them at a university which is truly a Catholic community.

Dear Editor:

After reading your commentary on the abortion issue and seeing the reader response, both pro and con, that this commentary elicited, I realized that this exchange of ideas and opinions over such a controversial issue is valuable and necessary if we are to become adept at forming logical and moral opinions for ourselves. Just as one cannot possess true faith in God (or anything else for that matter) until he has experienced doubt and then returned to belief, so too it must be with controversial and important human issues such as abortion.

Although we have been taught that abortion constitutes a moral evil, until we have considered both the viewpoints of the pro-abortionists and the pro-lifers, and then, through knowledge and reasoning, come to the conclusion that indeed abortion is a crime against humanity, we cannot say we possess a personal understanding of the abortion issue.

In this way, the pro-abortion commentary has helped me reaffirm my stand against abortion. When I read the commentary, I felt disturbed. There was something in its content that bothered me; after re-reading it I recognized two points that I would like to address.

First, the commentary stated that abortion should be available to all women in order to prevent the birth of unwanted, unloved children. This sentiment, stated in such a seemingly humanistic manner, intimates that because a biological mother does not want a child due to inconvenience or some other reason, the child will be automatically unloved by the rest of the population. This is just not so. Many couples desire a baby to adopt, but it has become next to impossible to adopt a baby in this country due to the high abortion rates. I wonder how anyone who has truly thought about it is able to come up with such a reason to promote abortion.

Secondly, the commentary stated that because a child is unwanted by its mother, it has lost its right to existence. This is a very important point to consider. Does not every individual possess inherent worth, or does worth as humans, and our very right to exist, depend upon someone else's estimation of our value?

In conclusion, the fact that the growing fetus is dependent on its mother for life does not make it a part of the mother. We are all dependent on special conditions in order to survive; a person without oxygen cannot live and yet he is no less of a person because of his need to breathe. A person on the moon needs extensive apparatus to survive, and yet he does not lose his identity and become a part of what he depends upon for life.

Dear Editor:

You have never been so wrong. This is not an emotional issue when we speak of abortion. Abortion is a euphemism for the killing of the unborn. The Supreme Court decision permitted abortion at any time prior to birth. The basic question in the issue is when does life begin and what is the definition of life.

Does life begin with birth, or one second before that, or when? Does life mean viability? No one has yet to be born into this life with self-sustaining viability. Neonatal medicine sustains life of prematurely born children far beyond the realm of possibility a few years ago. The same medical society is now licensed to destroy life.

I believe that you have acted in a reprehensible manner in your editorial and demand a retraction. I believe that as a spokesman for the University, you have taken a position that is ill-informed.

To the Editors:

Your recent editorial and the reaction to it should encourage us to reflect on the nature and mission of our university. If one conclusion can be drawn from this controversy, it is that as a community we ought to be doing some serious thinking about the role and limits of critical discussion on campus.

If we were a secular university, then presumably the principles defended by Jefferson and John Stuart Mill would suffice to justify a virtually unrestricted freedom to express one's views. But we are a Catholic university and this fact makes the issue more complex. We must consider how far a Catholic institution ought to go in tolerating views which run counter to our beliefs as a Catholic community. If I had an answer to this question I would share it with you. Unfortunately, I do not. I suspect that there can be no one absolute and determinate rule to follow here. However, I would like to offer some suggestions to guide our thinking here.

First, we ought not to deny the fact that we are a university. Catholic universities, like their non-Catholic counterparts, have an obligation to pursue the rational examination of all issues in the hope of over-coming the intellectual prejudices and blindness which arise out of ignorance and confusion. To this end, we ought to have at least a strong prima facie obligation to follow the principles of a Jefferson of Mill since these principles of free expression seem to be the best means available for fulfilling our function as a university.

Along these lines, we should take care to prevent the discussion from generating into an emotionally charged ad Hominem exchange. Ignorant people are ruled by their emotions; name-calling has no place in a university. To this end we should immediately stop the allusions to Galileo and the Spanish Inquisition on the one side and the threats and coersive tactics of the other. It really is quite unbecoming.

Further, we need to get rid of the artificial opposition between faith and reason. Here we should take the example of St. Thomas Aquinas to heart and assume that our beliefs which are based upon faith and our beliefs based upon reason coincide rather than conflict. (What a strange world God would have created if the latter were true!) If we have faith in our faith, then we have nothing to fear from reasoned debate; if we are reasonable, then we will not close off the avenue of faith.

Finally, we need to recognize how Christ-like is the virtue of tolerance. Rather than attempt to crush those with whom we disagree, we need to work and reason with them to change their way of thinking. A true community does not stifle dissent but allows for an honest diversity of persons. The fact that most of us tolerate capitalism in the face of the teachings of at least three Papal encyclicals should be testimony enough to our ability to tolerate views which run counter to our religious beliefs.

Let no member of the Villanova community be too quick to put an end to dissent. Let the strength of our convictions and the power of our reason be the only weapons we bring to discussions on such serious issues as abortion.

To the Editor,

We, the Villanovans For Life (V.F.L.), are pleased to have seen so many responses to the Jan. 29 editorial, "Abortion: A Woman's Decision." However, we feel a responsibility to inform you, the readers, of the truths. Yes, an editorial is an expression of one's opinion. Nevertheless, I question how one can voice a respectable opinion if one is not aware of the facts that lie at the base of a controversial issue, in this case — abortion.

The historic 1973 Supreme Court decision of Roe vs. Wade ruled:

— No restrictions on abortion in the first three months; the husband's wishes may not interfere. The state may not even regulate the type or quality of abortion services or facilities offered.

— No restrictions from 3 months until viability except those needed to make procedures safe for the mother. (States may require that the abortion be done in a hospital, etc.)

— Abortion may be "proscribed" after viability unless one doctor says it is necessary for the "health" of the mother.

Simply, a mother has the right to demand an abortion up to the moment of birth. It is only in the third trimester that a state could have an interest in the life of and health of the fetus.

The Supreme Court ruling is broad and vague; the term "viability" refers to the capability of a meaningful existence. This endangers all of our lives at any age or stage of life. Abortion is the first step to the growth of infanticide and euthanasia. Already 40 states have some "right to die" legislation by passive or by active euthanasia.

The "health of the mother" can be damaged or threatened by anything: mental stress, age, family problems, economic considerations, etc.

The true instances of preserning the life of the mother due to the expectation of a defective child, rape, incest hold for three percent of all abortions. A full 97 percent of all abortions are a result of convenience and economy.

Abortion causes prematurity in following births, a major cause of mental retardation and birth defects in children. Dr. J.C. Wilke states that chances for having a premature is tripled after having a "safe legal abortion."
